Getting students involved in taking a more active role in the student government would certainly help to pull the SGA back to its position as a source of campus respectability and confidence.

I would like to take this opportunity to ask the groups that are planning to engage in a write-in campaign for me to the office of student body president, not to. I thank you for your support, but I feel that the four candidates running for this office are very capable and will represent you and the student body well.

I feel that as your senior class president I can shape that office into a meaningful and viable position. I will continue to lend my support to all groups and students as I have this year so please follow me in voting for one of the well qualified candidates running for SGA president. I will appreciate your vote for senior class president, thank you very much

Frank Colvin

Francis DeLuca

There is one very good question which is usually the first asked of me: "Why are you running for SGA President?" First, let me say I had originally not intended to run for any office. But when I saw the people who were running and saw the attitude most people have towards the SGA, I felt I should run. My participation in the SGA over the past three years has provided me with the knowledge of how it works at all levels. My ideas, I hope, are what the students want and will endorse by voting for me. For these reasons I decided to run and at the least give the students one more choice when the time comes to vote.

My goals in office would be to accomplish three things. The main objective would be to bring greater student input into the SGA. This would also be aided by another of my goals and that is to separate student government from programming and media. If this was accomplished, programming would be able to work on just that and would be removed from the whim of politics. The same can be said for media; with the club of funding no longer held over their heads they would be freer. Students who wished to work with these respective parts of the campus would have easier access to them. This brings us back to student government: what do I see for it after separation? I see it as performing its role, student government. It would be a service to students with complaints, problems and suggestions so that they would have a place to go. Students who wish to work with student government will be welcomed and encouraged to do so. Finally, one very important thing I hope to be able to do is to better define and organize the SGA. Its constitution is a good example of the shape of the SGA. Instead of just taking care of problems as they arise, we need some planning, so that the SGA is not just as good as the people in office but has some inherent substance of its own. One small step towards this will be the appointment of an executive assistant who will effectively increase the SGA office hours by being there when the president is not.

Legislature approves allocation to keep WLOZ in air through spring

by Bobby Parker
Editor

Faced with the possibility of having to shut down in April for lack of operating funds, WLOZ radio was given approval by the Student Legislature last week to pay a $1000 invoice from a special reserve account.

The action will insure that WLOZ remains on the air, although it will decrease the amount of money set aside for the station's future expansion.

The allocation will pay for paperwork compiled by FM Associates, a Pennsylvania consulting firm. The paperwork will be used in connection with WLOZ's compliance with federal communications regulations when the station moves to its new location within the next several years.

The $1000 expenditure was the major reason for a management shake-up at WLOZ earlier this semester. Former station manager Steve Hess and program director Wade Harris disagreed as to who had approved the contract between WLOZ and FM Associates. Hess and Harris have since resigned.

When it was discovered that the station's budget would be severely hampered if the invoice was paid, WLOZ management appealed to SGA for a reallocation. The Student Legislature, however, decided in January to pay the bill from the existing station budget, rejecting at that time a proposal to pay from the reserve account.

SGA Treasurer Nancy Reagan told the Legislature last week that if the $1000 invoice was paid from the regular WLOZ account, "they (WLOZ) would have to close down in April."

Reagan gave the Legislature four alternatives: close the station, pay from the reserve account, reallocate money from general funds, or reallocate from funds not being used by other groups.

Reagan pushed for immediate action because FM Associates had been pressing for payment. The invoice was received by WLOZ in January.

Reagan also urged taking the money from the reserve account. "You don't want to shut down the station," she added.

WLOZ Music Director Temesia Williamson represented the station before the Legislature, saying that its management had tried to cut down on operating expenses this semester. Williamson also said that WLOZ had raised between $50 and $75 to help cover expenses.

"It's not (the present management's) fault that the money was spent," Williamson said, "but we have to deal with it."

Senior Legislator Nancy Malpass moved that the bill be paid from the reserve account. Her motion also stipulated that the money be paid back into the account through fundraising activities planned by WLOZ this spring.

Reagan stated that if the money is not paid back, WLOZ may not be able to expand as soon as planned.

Malpass' motion was passed. WLOZ also requested an allocation to send four staff members to the national convention of the Intercollegiate Broadcasting System in Washington, D.C.

Music Director Williamson said there would be several workshops pertinent to station expansion that WLOZ representatives could attend. The workshop topics included engineering, federal regulations, record company relations, budgeting, copyright laws and power increases.

The Legislature approved $780 to send four staff members. The allocation will cover lodging, air fare, and registration fees.

In other action, the Legislature refused to pay for several plants which were missing from the university cafeteria after an SGA-Resident Action Team dance held there in October.

SGA President Wayne Dunlap reported that cafeteria manager Phil Welch had asked the SGA for $135 reimbursement for the plants. Dunlap said he would leave the question of replacing the plants to the Legislature, although he said he did not believe SGA should be responsible for theft during the dance.

Dunlap said that SGA probably would not be able to use the cafeteria again unless the plants were replaced.

Legislator Mark Beanblossom moved to allocate $135 to replace the plants, stating that since SGA had co-sponsored the dance it was responsible for the missing plants.

But Legislator Scott Paradis argued against the allocation. "We don't know how or who those plants went to," Paradis said.

Legislator Larry Hulett offered an amendment to have SGA pay for half the amount since the Resident Action Team had co-sponsored the dance. Hulett's amendment was defeated.

The Legislature also defeated the motion to pay for the plants.

SGA Chief Justice Ray Warren appeared before the Legislature to discuss the proposed fee allocation board which would assume responsibility for allocating the SGA portion of student fee money.

Warren said that a three-way division of the funds—among SGA, Media and Publications Board and Program Board—would be a "more effective" method of allocating the money. He said that removing much of the funding responsibility from the Legislature would give that body more time for other areas of concern.

Legislator Michael Sanders, who chairs a special committee appointed by SGA Vice-president Francis DeLuca to investigate alternatives to the administration proposal, said his committee would report to the Legislature Thursday night.

Sanders said a meeting was scheduled with administration representatives last weekend.

The Legislature will meet Thursday at 7 p.m. in C-218.

justify student government doesn't work. The legislators have none of the powers of a real government. They can make no laws, only distribute money given them by somebody else. Their constituency is much more fluid and constituent opinion harder to understand than the real world. Unlike real world interest groups, student groups have neither the time, expertise or desire to organize for needed clout in the legislature.

Eighty-nine percent of the students did not vote in last spring's election. Most candidates can claim the votes of only 5-7 percent of their constituents. Is that supposed to create a "voice of the students"? What about the one-third of the legislature that has been stated since the last election?

Nor do student legislators feel constrained to seek student input after election time. Rather they disburse funds as if doing so out of their personal fortune. The Student Activities Office, on the other hand, always seeks input into its programs. This was proven when, in the absence of official programming (due to SGA bungling), Jon Greene promoted the "Outta Hawk" committee to get student opinion rather than press his own personal ideas. So much for responsiveness!

To keep it responsive, a new programming committee would have elected student programmers. But the low number will insure competition and higher quality among those who are elected to those seats. And additionally, those who serve on these committees can run as programmers, not jacks-of-all-trades.

As for efficiency, the SGA's record speaks for itself. Proposals are often delayed for weeks due to the ignorance of legislators about the matter, ignorance of contract constraints, cancelled meetings due to lack of legislator interest, and a cumbersome finance committee procedure.

One legislator has defended the SGA's failures on the grounds that "the legislature is a learning experience." That may be, but most students are tired of paying the $110,000 tuition for politician's educations. Undoubtedly next year's legislature will also learn the ropes—about the time all the student's money has been mismanaged. Such, one supposes, is the price of such "educations."

In the interest of continuity, efficiency and responsiveness, a programming committee should be in charge of 45 percent of the present SGA budget, and a campus media board in charge of another 30 percent that will leave the amateur politicians with about $25,000 to spend on worthwhile projects (like the Rowing Club) and to waste on self-serving junkets for legislators and for personal politicking for the SGA president or any non-SGA "caucus" in which he is interested.

If the new funding proposals are adopted, then perhaps next year instead of wrangling by legislators students will have some real programming. If the proposals are blocked by a self-serving SGA, the students may take a cue from several other campuses and abolish the SGA altogether. At a West Texas University such a move was sponsored by a "Committee to Retire Aspiring Politicians," the acronym of which, would seem to apply to our own Legislature very well. As for the administration, let us hope they are not cowed by the clamoring of SGA members who represent 11 percent of the student body at the most, and more likely nobody but themselves.

I hope all will make an effort to vote. Whether you realize it or not you are voting on over $100,000 of your money, and you are voting on how people across the state will perceive UNCW in the form of your president, who is your representative. Finally, if you see the candidates who happen to be on campus, stop them and put them on the spot, ask any question. But most of all—please vote.

Francis DeLuca

Glen Downs

This Thursday and Friday we will all have the opportunity to vote for the candidates of our choice in many student government races. Unfortunately, the vast majority of people have not voted in the past because they don't see student government as really affecting them. And, unfortunately, in the past this has all too often been the case. But increasingly the situation is changing. Student Government—and student life generally—has reached a crossroads here at our school's tenth anniversary as a vital part of this community. As our school grows, the role and scope of student government necessarily must change.

The direction in which we change will be determined to a large extent by our next presi-

In the past, the primary role of student government has been to allocate money. At the beginning of each year, student government is given some $100,000 to spend as it sees fit. The remainder of the year is spent carefully doling out the money, allocating a little each week so as to make it last all year. This is the extent of what student government does; organizations get their money, but you don't have a place to park.

If you elect me, I will attempt to shift the focus of student government away from one of pure money allocation to one of practical service as well. Students care more about the quality of food in the cafeteria than how much money the fishing team gets, and I intend to do something about it. It is up to the elected representatives of the students to see to it that things which affect students on a day to day basis are taken care of as well as the funding of various social activities. In keeping with this new policy of practical aid to students, I join many others in calling for a separation of entertainment programming and the various publications on campus from student government. By doing this we will place these activities in the hands of those most qualified to run them, while we free-up your elected representatives to solve the more important day-to-day problems that students

Another part of this new responsibility will be to establish a watchdog committee to insure that various activities on campus have at least a modicum of input from blacks, handicapped individuals, and other minority groups. We will need to work to insure that students have input in all student-related affairs, and work to concentrate our efforts on these affairs only.

If we as a student body are to ever advance and move forward, we must rely upon our student leaders for dynamic directional change. If you select me as your new president, I promise you this new progress rather than procrastination; hope and faith instead of defeatism and despair. I promise to embark upon a new era of high expectations from myself and student government. I invite you to join me in that promise.

Glen Downs

Sheila McLamb

To the Students:

In presenting myself as a candidate for the Student Government Association President, I have considered the consequences of this action and the responsibilities that it will encompass. I seek this office with enthusiasm.

You, as students, deserve not only a responsible representative, but also, someone who will maintain contact with the student body throughout the term. I want to be in office so you, the students, can tell me what to do. The president's role as I see it is one of fulfilling the interests of the students she represents.

The administration's proposal for a fee allocation board finalized my decision to run for SGA president. This proposal is detrimental to the students' interests. Whereas now, student activity fees are controlled solely by students, this proposal would diminish the students' power.

In closing, let me remind you, my actions in office will depend on your input. Please vote for me and then come by my office upstairs in the Student Union. Vote Sheila Mac; I won't turn my back.

Sheila McLamb

John Wiley

To the Students:

Tomorrow and on Friday, Students Government Association elections are being held on campus. I'd like to urge everybody to vote. Historically, voter turnouts at UNCW have been very low, and this does not help get you effective student government.

More effective leadership within the SGA would be nice, too. I think this is especially true with regard to the Student Legislature. There are a lot of matters that truly are important to you which the Legislature will handle. Included are the allocation of student fees (your money), right down to trying to get clocks back in the cafeteria. It is the SGA vice-president who chairs these legislative meetings; he or she is responsible for smooth and efficient operation.

I am running for vice-president and would appreciate your vote. I have been a member of the Legislature for most of three years and understand quite thoroughly how it works.

There are excellent candidates running in all races, and I believe there will be a lot of positive change in the wings. So to help things along, again, please come out and vote Thursday and Friday.

Thank you.

The Mr. UNCW Pageant is sponsored by the Program Board.

Program Board plans weekend entertainment

STOP! Unpack that suitcase full of dirty laundry you were going to take home for the weekend. Put away those books (?) for a little while. Drag yourself away from the local disco trap.

The members of the Program Board cordially request your presence on Friday, March 23 at 8 p.m. in the Goodwood Tavern and Saturday, March 24, 8 p.m. in the Pub and Sunday, March 25 8 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium.

This will be a weekend you will long remember, beginning at 8 p.m. on Friday with an "Open Mike" festival in the Goodwood Tavern. All of you closet and shower singers--this is your lucky day. Bring your guitars and voice and join the festivities as UNCW students demonstrate their talents. If you can't sing tuck a six-pac under your left arm and sit back for an evening of fun.

Saturday night the Program Board sponsors an evening of entertainment that used to be legal only in the state of Nevada. But for one night only the Pub will become Atlantic City south. Black Jack, craps, the roulette wheel and a little liquid sunshine will be yours to enjoy beginning at 8 p.m. Be watching all day Saturday for play money to appear. We have it from a reliable source, namely Chicken Little, that at about 2 p.m. a piece of the sky may be falling! At the close of the evening would-be gamblers can relinquish any or all of their play money at the auction. Great prizes and great fun.

On Sunday evening things become a bit more mellow. At 8 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium Tom Chapin will be in concert. Tickets will be available at the door for students with ID for $1--(all others $2). Tom Chapin, basketball All-American and winner of the Emmy and Peabody awards, is a showman, entertainer and warm human being. His performance introduced by the talented Rich Look promises to close this memorable weekend in grand style.

Make a wish, dream a dream--be a part of this weekend when dreams come true.

Tom Chapin appearing in Kenan Auditorium.

Tom Chapin is a natural-born entertainer

Make a Wish . . . and you have a Tom Chapin Concert.

Chapin is one of those natural-born entertainers who with nothing more sophisticated than a guitar in hand can totally captivate an audience. He has a friendly smile, a powerful voice and the kind of down-home humor that touches his audience. Chapin is a songwriter of power and sensitivity. The songs, when coupled with his fine tenor voice, facile guitar work and amazing stage presence and audience rapport, have led to a career-lifting string of events beginning in September of 1976.

Since that time Tom has released his first solo album, "Life is Like That" (Fantasy F9520). The album received much critical acclaim, nationwide airplay and has set the stage effectively for album number two which will be released in mid-1979.

A whole generation of people grew up to Tom's Emmy and Peabody Award-winning ABC-TV show, "Make a Wish."

As a concert artist, Chapin has played more than 300 engagements in the last two years. He has visited more college campuses than the cap and gown salesman. Included in this number were the 40-date Tom Chapin/Janis Ian tour in the spring of 1976. Another segment of the number were highly successful engagements at some of North America's most prestigious festivals.

Tom is an exceptional performer and his good looks, stage presence and rapport with live audiences has him destined for stardom. He is magic on TV, the concert stage and record.

Rich Look, appearing with Tom Chapin.

Gregarious Rich Look is creative songwriter

Rich Look is a gregarious performer who is introduced playfully as "The Rocking Beast from the Far East." Translated into real information, that means he is a native of California who grew up in Tokyo and who has a knack for creating/singing infectious pop tunes.

His manic smile, deep dimples and his wonderful repertoire of material make him worth standing in line to see. The thing that stays with you after sitting through one of his shows is his range of talent as a songwriter.

Look's songs are amazingly free of musical and lyrical clichés without being obtuse or eccentric. He is one of the truly major up and coming talents as a keyboard player and singer. Equally important, though, is that he's not just a singer or writer or player. Rich is a consummate performer. When you see him you'll know you've been thoroughly entertained. What's more, you'll know you've made friends with a real human being of tremendous warmth.

'Open Mike' event held

The UNCW Coffeehouse Committee is low on funds but still wants to party. There will be a coffeehouse party Friday at 8 p.m. but without music. The committee invited you to bring your own musical instruments and "grow your own."

The stage will be set up in the Goodwood Tavern, the sound system turned on and the spotlights shining. If you don't want to perform, then come and listen to others. Bring your friends and your own beverages.

are no grounds for the court action and that his decision will be upheld.

SGA Attorney General Glen Downs agreed with Dunlap's assessment as he told the Student Legislature last week that Carter had no basis for a court challenge.

Dunlap says he fired Carter because the concert chair refused to adhere to SGA policy in working with the Program Board. Carter has not attended regular meetings of the board this year.

Dunlap cites that Carter also planned the Waylon Jennings concert, originally scheduled for March 17, without prior consultation with the Program Board.

That concert has since been cancelled, and Carter confirmed Monday that the reason for cancellation was the absence of a concert choir to deal with the promoter. Reports had been circulated that there were scheduling conflicts, but Carter says those reports are untrue.

Dunlap said this week that he dismissed Carter "not because he didn't comply with policy but because he said he wouldn't comply."

Dunlap said last week he had opened applications for the position and that he would consider reinstating Carter. Carter submitted a letter asking to be reinstated this week but Dunlap said that letter did not convince him that Carter would be willing to comply with Program Board policy.

Dunlap said the letter basically says that "Carter is the only capable (concert) chairman." The president said Carter has more experience than many applicants but is not the only alternative.

Dunlap also stated that he sees no urgency to replace Carter because there are no concerts planned for the remainder of this year; thus, he says, the committee's work this year is finished.

There were no complaints with Carter's performance, Dunlap said, but he did find fault with Carter's handling of the "business side" of the committee. Dunlap points out that Carter had authorized student discounts on the Jennings concert without having funds in the concert account to cover them.

Student finds unique method of research

"Female, 21, student, gives self three weeks before popping pills for suicide. If you know good reasons why I shouldn't, please write P.O. Box 131, Littleton, Colo."

When Arapahoe Community College student Dyan Smith placed this ad in a Denver-area student paper, one student respondent already had her second-guessed. "What a terrific way to get a term paper done!" he wrote Smith. "Damn good idea!"

Smith had, indeed, placed the ad in the Collegiate Camera in December as part of a project for a "Man and Death" class at Arapahoe. But the project idea the sophomore psychology major had chosen arbitrarily began to pose "problems with ethics." Smith's doubts started when sincere, concerned replies began to pour into her post office box. "I began to think, 'Do I have the right to subject these people to this anguish and the sharing of very personal emotions?'"

The matter was further complicated, Smith recalls, when, at about the same time Smith's "suicide" was planned, a Denver woman called a local TV station threatening suicide.

The woman, who refused to identify herself or her location, spoke for almost two hours with KBTv personnel, who attempted to dissuade her. When the station publicized the call, several people called to suggest Smith as a suspect. The real suicidal caller, incidentally, was never located.

When the respondents thus discovered the ad was a hoax, several wrote back expressing hurt and anger. "I felt bad," Smith said, "but I'm glad I did it."

For one thing, the 49 respondents provided an answer to the reason for Smith's experiment. A Harvard student performed a similar project in 1969, and Smith wanted to find out if her plea for help would get the same responses as his had ten years ago. Her idea was to see if there would be differences between the 'we' generation of the sixties and the 'me' generation of the seventies.

According to her data, there is. Whereas only 58 percent of the Harvard student's respondents gave that information.

Smith did receive one negative reply ("Get more pills, set a date, and I'll join you," the letter read). But other replies provided Smith with some "very interesting" reasons to carry on. One letter advised her to read SLAPSTICK, a novel by Kurt Vonnegut, to find out why life was worth living. Another suggested "visiting Montana or Coors Brewery, or dancing to Saturday Night Fever" at a local disco as remedies for her "despair." Still another said he would personally advise postponing suicide to "see if the Broncos go to the Super Bowl."

Most, Smith said, wrote to suggest she "look at other people's problems to see how lucky she was" or to "turn to God."

Smith's results also differed from the Harvard study in that over twice as many males responded as females. The male Harvard student experienced an exact reversal of that ratio. Smith said that some of the males assumed she was despondent over a break-up with a boyfriend, and asked her for dates in their letters. "Seems like a kinky way to get a date," Smith mused.

Smith noted that some, while offering help, expressed suspicion of the ad's authenticity. Most of those, she said, had had suicidal thoughts or had attempted suicide. Although some later replied to say they felt "used," Smith hopes that by "making people search out reasons for their own existence, perhaps they will remember those reasons" if they attempt suicide again. ✓

Dorothy K. Hall will portray Emily Dickinson Saturday and Sunday nights in the SRO Theatre.

On Friday and Saturday, March 24 and 25, the Creative Arts Department will present Dorothy K. Hall in "The Belle of Amherst," a portrayal of the life of Emily Dickinson. The production will be performed in the SRO Theatre.

"The Belle of Amherst" is a two act play written by William Luce. Set in the Dickinson household in Amherst, Massachusetts, during the years of 1845-1886, it is a love affair with language, a celebration of all that is beautiful and poignant in life. Emily Dickinson is dramatized as a delicate and sensitive, quaint woman, but with inner strength. Her manner is portrayed from the child-like and whimsical to the deeply touching. Of the play, New York Post critic Richard Watts wrote, "Emily Dickinson's private life thoughts and dreams and her poetic genius have been strikingly and movingly captured by William Luce." A touching and steadily absorbing evening to those who know even little about the superb poet."

Dorothy K. Hall, a senior in the Creative Arts Department has been active in theatrical productions since 1950. Well known throughout South-eastern North Carolina as a costume designer, Hall has appeared in dramatic productions with the Rineon Players of Tuscon, Alabama, and most recently in the role of Kate Keller in the UNCW production of "All My Sons."

Curtain time for the March 24 and 25 performances will be at 8:15 p.m. Admission will be free.

Fine Arts Committee to screen 'Fire Sale'

"You really have to laugh. Kay Medford and Vincent Gardenia, an older Los Angeles couple on their way to a Miami vacation, stop off at the Veteran's Hospital to visit Miss Medford's brother, Sid Caesar, who lost his sanity and a leg in World War II. Miss Medford has brought him a present, a single roller skate, saying 'I thought you might need more exercise'... it's a pinnacle of humor."

So wrote Kevin Thomas in the Los Angeles Times regarding the film "Fire Sale" which will be shown by the UNCW Fine Arts Committee this Tuesday, March 27, at 8 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium.

Versatile Alan Arkin directed and stars in this outrageous black comedy about failure, illness, insanity and the Fikus family, the biggest bunch of loonies ever seen on the screen. Arkin plays a basketball coach with a two year string of unbroken losses who suddenly adopts a seven foot tall, sixteen-year-old black orphan in answer to his wife's plea for a baby.

Arkin's uncle Sid Caesar is a one-legged war veteran who is still battling the Germans, and Arkin's mother hires caterers to celebrate her hysterectomy.

The admission to this film will be 50 cents for all UNCW students with ID cards, and $1 for all non-students. Season passes will be honored.

RECORDS

Welch receives Fleetwood help in 'Three Hearts'

Bob Welch's second solo album, Three Hearts, has already gone gold. The album seems to be climbing up the charts at a much faster pace than Welch's first album, French Kiss.

The former Fleetwood Mac member has gone solo, but he hasn't forgotten his old friend with whom he made five LP's. Fleetwood is featured on the disc with Christine McVie and Sevie Nicks singing and Mick Fleetwood playing drums on "The Ghost Flight 401."

Other members include: Alvin Taylor (drums), David Adelstein (keyboards), Todd Sharp (guitar), and Steve Foreman and Mick Fleetwood (percussion).

All the songs on the LP were written by Welch except the Beatle classic, "I Saw Her Standing There," written by John Lennon and Paul McCartney, and the Fleetwood Mac tune, "Come Softly to Me," written by Cary Troxel, Gretchen Christopher and Barbara Ellis.

The title cut, which opens the LP, is about a love triangle and is suggested by the album cover.

The Beatle tune "I Saw Her Standing There" is very similar to the original version but this one has a softer tempo and is not as forceful which I feel helps the song.

There is a strange song on the album, "The Ghost of Flight 401," which is about the Bermuda Triangle and the plane that was haunted by its old pilot who was killed.

"Precious Love," the first single release from the album, has skyrocketed up the chart which is a credit to the beat and simple meaning.

"Church" is a very beautiful cut and is my favorite.

"Come Softly to Me" is as expressive as it was when it was originally done by Fleetwood Mac with background vocals being done by the "Mac" ladies.

Three Hearts is a great album. I hope three will be a lucky number for us, too, and Welch will make a third album.

The Wilmington Music Series will present the Ohio Ballet in Kenan Auditorium Saturday at 8 p.m. Admission is free to students with ID.

The Ohio Ballet's performance is centered around a group of classically-inspired ballets by artistic director Heinz Poll. Poll established the company in 1968 and shapes its unique, contemporary style.

Select choreographers are finding the Ohio Ballet a perfect showcase for their work. Included in these internationally respected pieces are Gerald Arpino's "Reflections," Ruthanna Boris's "Cakewalk," Robert Jeffrey's "Pas Des Deesses," and Paul Taylor's modern masterwork "Aureole."

In residence at the University of Akron, the Ohio Ballet has had a remarkable evolution from chamber ballet to Ohio chamber Ballet to Ohio Ballet.

The Ohio Ballet has performed at the New York Dance festival in Central Park at the inaugural season of the Spolito Festival USA--where they were one of only two dance companies invited to perform. They have appeared at America's pre-eminent summer dance event, Jacob's Pillow.

Writes Don McDonagh of the New York Times, "The impression was of a company with its eye clearly on the future, boasting a substantial level of present accomplishment. . . . The total enterprise had a warm, energetic feel."

Charter members of Phi Eta Sigma installed Saturday night

Saturday, March 18, members of the UNCW charter chapter of Phi Eta Sigma Honor Society were installed. Ceremonies included a private initiation service in Randall Library. The student and faculty charter members were inducted into the society by Dr. James E. Foy, grand secretary of Phi Eta Sigma Honor Society.

Following the initiation services there was an installation banquet at Balentine's Restaurant with family and friends of the inductees and honored guests. Phi Eta Sigma president Jack Carter opened the services with a welcome and recognition of guests. Dr. Foy then gave an informative talk on the history and meaning of this honor society. The installation at UNCW was Foy's 109th. UNCW is the seventh school in N.C. to recognize Phi Eta Sigma. The grand secretary defined the Greek meaning of the organization's name as "Knowledge is power." Following his speech, Foy presented the charter of Phi Eta Sigma to Dr. W. Lee Johnston, faculty adviser.

Chancellor William H. Wagoner then delivered an inspiring installation address on the meaning of a scholar. His words reminded one of what a scholar is and is not. He stated, "A scholar is more concerned with what he does not know than with what he does."

Thereafter followed the presentation of certificates to the chapter's members. The 20 students inducted into this honor society were Paul Ashworth, Lisa Bennett, Rita Broome, David Butler, Jack Carter, Sarah Cox, Michael Downing, Margaret Gandy, Lou Gaskins, Judy Gray and Cindi Hamilton. Also, Lynn Jaeger, Katie Spivey, David Strong, William Vick, Robin Weaver, Beverly Williams, James Williams, Linda Williams, and Deborah Zeleznick were inducted.

Prof. Glenn R. Long and Dr. Ned H. Martin were inducted as honorary members and Dr. W. Lee Johnston as faculty adviser.

English Department to offer 'Explorations in Folklore' in Fall

The English Department is offering in the fall semester 1979 English 495, "Explorations in Folklore." The seminar class will meet 10-11:15 a.m., Tuesday and Thursday.

Limited to 15 students, the seminar class will study comprehensively the basic forms of folklore—legends, ballads, folktales, myths, customs, and beliefs—with emphasis being placed on American folk culture. Class members will provide material for analysis and comparison; selected readings, approaches to folklore collecting, and field trips to sites in the surrounding region will also be incorporated.

To direct the folklore seminar, the English Department faculty will bring to the UNCW campus as visiting professor Dr. Robert Byington. During his 30 year career, Dr. Byington has taught at many universities, has been widely published, has won three distinguished teaching awards, and has acquired a prestigious national reputation as a folklorist.

Most recently, Byington has served as senior folklorist at the Smithsonian Institution, and, during the American Bicentennial, was deputy director of the Festival of American Folklife, an event that was nationally acclaimed.

"Explorations in Folklore" is not a course that only appeals to English majors interested in literary trends and influences. The pre-requisites being only English 101 and 102 make possible the enrollment of students from other disciplines. Students in sociology/anthropology and history can especially profit from taking "Explorations in Folklore."

Students in sociology will find folklore interesting as it is concerned with communication of social units (folk) that have a keen sense of shared values, interests and activities. "Explorations in Folklore" will avoid the quantitatative approach, substituting in its place a literary treatment. Anthropology students, as well as those of archaeology, should know the relevance of myths and other oral traditions; often these genres act as bridges to contemporary fact.

The history major will find folk traditions particularly valuable in the understanding of grassroots attitudes toward historical events; other beliefs, instead of verified truths, shape the outcome of particular events.

'Editing and Tutoring' is new course designed to provide students with a skill

In this day of declining writing skills, those who are able to write better have a skill employers value. The course English 492, "Editing and Tutoring," will be taught by Dr. Lil Brannon of the English Department, the director of composition and the Writing Center. The class will meet 9:30-10:30 a.m., Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

Some students when first entering college often have serious writing problems. More importantly, many of these same students, when graduating from a four-year institution, still have writing problems that seriously impair their communicative effectiveness. Having completed basic composition courses offered by the English Department, students who frequent the UNCW Writing Center and who are writing papers for upper level classes, more often than not, still have minor grammatical problems and problems in organization and knowing what it is they want to say.

Many times the only advanced writing courses offered to students are advanced composition and creative writing, courses which imply that students already possess a good ability to write.

The English Department will be offering a course in the fall which will help students of all levels and abilities polish their writing styles. The course's focus is on the last stage of the writing process, editing and copyreading. Students will learn how to look effectively at their own writing and those of others to see what can be done to improve that piece of writing. In order to become good editors and effective communicators of writing, students will also observe faculty and instruct other students in the Writing Center. The course offers the student the unique attraction of learning to write better and obtaining a marketable skill.

Five Carmen, women's basketball coach at UNCW the past two seasons, has resigned that position at the university. Seahawk director of athletics Bill Brooks has announced.

Carmen's Lady 'Hawk squad posted a 5-18 record this past season and was 14-27 during her two years with the school. The team both seasons was composed mainly of freshmen and sophomores.

A native of Burlington, Carmen inherited a program which had gone winless in 1976-77 and guided her first UNCW team to a 9-9 mark, including five straight victories at the end of the season.

Brooks said that a search for Carmen's successor will begin immediately.

TIME OUT

by Roger Knight

Frisbee in front of the dorm. Game of catch behind the dorm. Sunbathers at the baseball game. It all adds up to spring. Yes sports fans, spring has come to the big 'W.' The 70-degree weather has everyone donning shorts and tee-shirts and heading for the great outdoors. It all came as a surprise to me. I was still involved in the mid-winter pin-ball syndrome. Pumping in quarters like a madman until I noticed the guys and girls next to me were in shorts. So I stepped outside and wondered what to do next. Should I give frisbee a fling? Was tennis my racket? Should I get caught up in baseball? My answer came after trying them all and deciding to do what every other calssic lazy person would do. Grab a nice tall glass of something wet and sit and watch the girls go by.

Some of the best free entertainment anywhere can be found at the afternoon baseball games held on Brooks Field. The Seahawk baseball teams play the southeast's toughest competition. It is also a great way for a fan to soak up some rays.

Softball team takes two in doubleheader opener

by Tom Lamont
Seahawk Contributor

The women's softball team opened its 1979 season by sweeping a doubleheader from Shaw University. The Seahawks won the first game 11-7 and took the second contest 7-0.

In the opener, the team was led by Connie Thompson and Susan Spivey, who both had three hits. Spivey and Darlene Treadway hit homeruns for the Hawk cause and Cassandra Sidberry was the winning pitcher.

In the second contest, Sidberry led the team with three. The five top returnees on the 15-player roster are Allen (first base), Spivey (pitcher, outfielder), Headway (short-stop), Stephanie Stiller (short field, outfielder), and Connie Thompson (outfielder).

Today the Seahawks travel to Chapel Hill where they will compete against the Tarheels and Methodist College. The team will return home on Tuesday, March 27 to play St. Augustine College.

hits including a homerun. Jenny Allen added a triple and a homerun while Sharon Castleberry had two hits including a triple. The winning pitcher was Marjorie Helinski.

According to Coach Ann Kraft, the schedule which faces the Hawks is not an easy one. "We have only five players back from last year as starters," she says, "so our schedule with teams like East Carolina, State, and North Carolina on it, will be a real challenge."

UNCW battle Western Carolina.

Baseball team experiences tough week

The UNCW Seahawk baseball team experienced a rough week this week, winning one; closing three and having another contest rained out.

The game against Wake Forest was rained out last Wednesday after it had gotten under way. No make up date was set.

Western Carolina University came to town on Friday and Saturday. The Catamounts defeated the 'Hawks 7-4 on Friday but UNCW bounced back behind the shut-out pitching of David Pope to win 5-0. Pope, a junior from Dunn, has allowed only one earned run in his last sixteen innings. Western Carolina won the first game despite Ron People's three hits.

Against Clemson the Seahawks jumped off to a quick 2-0 lead. Clemson, however, waited until the late innings to unleash a vicious barrage and won 17-2. On Monday the 'Hawks again took an early lead but could not hold on. Behind the hitting of Herbie Dawkins and Larry Livingston the 'Hawks broke on top 5-0. The Tigers clawed their way back through and won 3-6. Roger Sutton went the whole way for UNCW and is 2-4 on the season.

The 'Hawks were led at the plate this week by shortstop John Tallent, a sophomore from Charlotte, who had nine hits in four games. He is batting an outstanding .465 on the year. Center fielder Ron Peoples had seven hits and he's hitting .362. Bubba Baldwin is batting .364 and Herbie Dawkins is at .326. The Seahawks are home Thursday and Friday against Eastern Connecticut and play at Coastal Carolina on Sunday.

The UNCW tennis team defeated Amherst College, 7-2, Monday, halting a 6-match Hawk losing streak. With the win, the Seahawks split their twinbill with Amherst College, after losing Sunday, 5-4.

Amherst College took the twinbill opener Sunday by a close 5-4 score. In the win column for the Hawks were Paul Gembores over Bellanoff, 6-0, 6-3; Watson d. Friedler, 2-6, 6-1, 6-2; Winslow d. Stuart, 1-6, 6-2; Doubles--Jackson and Winslow d. Meakem and Terry, 6-2, 6-3. Monday, the Hawks turned the tables on Amherst, winning 7-2. In an earlier match, UNCW fell, 7-2, to a strong USC-Conway team.

UNCW, now 5-7 on the year, hopes to add to the win column this week, as the team faces three road matches. Today, the Hawks face St. Andrews College at Lenoir, then travel to Rocky Mount for a Friday match against N.C. Wesleyan. Saturday, the team plays ECU in a big match in Greenville.

Real 'Superteach' is easy to spot

It had to happen sooner or later: First came Superman. Thank courtesy of yours truly, there was the Superstudent and the Superjock. And now, in acknowledgement of all those dedicated professors who just do it for the money... may I present Superteach!

The real Superteach, that genuine article, is pretty easy to spot. Our hypothetical hero is most likely getting on in years, yet he still retains that twinkle in his eye (mainly because he has his eye on the new secretary...). He has a confident, tenure-secure smile and is not afraid to shatter tradition by laughing more than twice per semester.

Our TOC (Teach On Campus) is kind and witty and keeps pictures of his wife and Cocker Spaniel on his office desk (thought I was going to get a cheap crack out of that one, didn't you?). He gives tough lectures and tests that seem easy by comparison. He nods when you pass him in the hall. He is, according to campus vernacular, an Okay Dude.

Let's say you've just made the acquaintance of the professor who is teaching your anthropology class in summer school. How do you find out if he is really a sly cookie? If you're a girl, smile. If he doesn't react, well, you're gonna have to rely on the old brain for this one. (And if, Omigod, he smiles back, you'd better be figuring out a new game plan!) If you're a guy, look him straight in the eye and impress him with your burning ambition to become Just Like Him. If all else fails, tell him the latest Playboy party jokes. If nothing else, maybe he'll flunk you with a grin.

Your average Superteach is beloved for his flexibility. What student has not rejoiced to the words, "Just leave it in my mailbox"? Another oft-heard phrase is, "I'm tough but I'm fair, by God." Occasionally the young, racy professors resort to sarcasm as a sort of defense mechanism: "Aha, a real smartass in our midst!" The ones who use this kind of language were probably once a "smartass in our midst" themselves.

In conclusion, I offer three sure-fire signs for spotting a Superteach.

Way Number One: His office door is always open and the traffic flow is dangerous to pedestrians.

Way Number Two: His students don't make death-knell noises when he keeps them five minutes late.

Way Number Three: People in the class fight over who gets to sit up front.

So there are your clues for sniffing out a bona fide Superteach. If you find more than three strolling our fair campus, don't delay; call the Smithsonian!

Rush holds a B.S. degree in geology from Washington and Lee University, an M.S. degree in geology from UNC-Chapel Hill and an M.S. degree in government administration from Georgia State University. Surviving B.S.

Lecture to be presented by author Monday

Surviving the B.S. (Bureaucratic System) will be the topic of the talk to be given by author Ron Knopf. Knopf will speak Monday, March 26, at 3:30 p.m. in King Auditorium about his new book: Surviving the B.S. (Bureaucratic System) A Handbook for HP's (Helping Persons). The book deals with the most frequently raised question in human services today: how can I be an effective helping person and still work within a depersonalized bureaucracy? The book develops a method of dealing with the stresses of working in a bureaucracy and how to become more productive in that bureaucracy.

Knopf is a social worker, psychotherapist and author. He is president of the board of directors of two non-profit human services agencies.

With graduate training at the University of Hawaii and a Master of Social Work from the University of North Carolina, he has worked as a Helping Person in adult prisons, juvenile probation and detention, child welfare and protective services, group homes for emotionally disturbed children, public housing, and public welfare. Knopf is a member of the Academy of Certified Social Workers.

The talk is sponsored by UNCW's social workers club, S.W.A.P. (Social Workers Association for People). Chris Shove, S.W.A.P.'s vice-president said that, "Mr. Knopf's talk is part of a program developed by S.W.A.P. to increase the awareness and knowledge of the community and university to social welfare issues."

Chain letter circulating on campus illegal, state officials say by Karin Whaley

Staff Writer

Money making schemes, especially ones that guarantee great returns on a small investment, interest many people-college students included.

A chain letter, based on a pyramid scheme, is being circulated on the UNCW campus. It is called "Circle of Gold." The explanation that comes with the chain letter claims that an initial investment of $100 will eventually yield thousands.

The amount of truth in that statement, although questionable is not the topic of this article. The "Circle of Gold" letter and the on-campus people circulating it are telling students that it is legal.

It is not!

Even though federal postal laws are not violated, North Carolina state laws are. Statute 14-291.2 states that all pyramid schemes are prohibited. This chain letter is a pyramid scheme.

The law states "Any person who shall establish, promote, operate or participate in any pyramid distribution... Whereby a participant pays a valuable consideration for the opportunity or chance to receive a fee or compensation upon the introduction of other participants into the program... shall be deemed to have participated in a lottery and shall be punished for in G.S. 14-290."

A pyramid distribution plan is described by the law as "any program utilizing a pyramid or chain process by which a participant gives a valuable consideration for the opportunity to receive compensation or things of value in return for inducing other persons to become participants in the program."

In a telephone interview with Charles Smith of the N.C. Attorney General's office, his immediate reaction to the question of chain letters was, "They are illegal." He also stated that although the average participant is not usually arrested, if a person's name appears continuously on these chains they will be prosecuted. The punishment can be a jail sentence and/or a fine.

Also, because the chain is illegal, if the person who is supposed to pay you does not do so, there is no legal recourse.

Although the "Circle of Gold" chain letter is illegal, chances are you will not be arrested, jailed or fined if you participate. There are also many views as to your chances of making a profit. But since the letter claims to be legal and is not, that seems to shed doubt on its claims.

Short Story Contest awards to be announced Thursday

The ninth annual awards presentation for the Jessie Rehder Short Story Contest will be held Thursday at 11:30 a.m. in the SRO Theatre. All students, faculty, and staff are invited to attend.

This year, the awards will be presented by Henry B. Rehder. Prizes are: first prize, $100; second prize, $50; third prize, $20.

The judges for the contest are Joanne K. Corbett, professor in the English Department, Ron Johnson, acquisitions librarian, and Donna Lanier, former "Atlantis" editor and now traffic director for WECT-TV.

Doug Swink, of the UNCW Creative Arts-Department will read the prizewinning story.

The contest is named in honor of Jessie Rehder, a native Wilmingtonian who was director of the creative writing program at Chapel Hill. Miss Rehder has written novels, short stories, and criticisms, and has influenced students at Chapel Hill for generations.

Refreshments will be served by members of the North Carolina Junior Sorosis.

All students who plan to student teach during the school year 1979-80 (fall and spring) must complete an application for student teaching. These should be completed no later than March 30, 1979. Forms are available in the Education Department Office, E-102.

Volunteer opportunities

A trained or experienced librarian is needed to set up good procedures and catalogue materials for use in a busy agency's staff library.

Lots of volunteers are needed to help with a blood donor program. Among the many duties to choose from are typing or medical lab skills. Program time is Monday, Wednesday, and Friday a.m. - Wednesday 3-7 p.m. The most critical need is for telephoning, Tuesday and Thursday a.m.

For more information on these and other volunteer openings, see Linda Moore, Student Activities or call the Voluntary Action Center, 762-9611.

Now comes Miller time.

DeLuca leads presidential race, but faces runoff challenge from Fail

by Bobby Parker
Editor

Francis DeLuca and Jon Fail will compete in a runoff election for SGA president today as the top vote-getters in last week's election.

DeLuca compiled a surprisingly strong lead over the four-candidate field by garnering 194 votes of 472 cast.

Fail edged out Glen Downs by a three-vote margin for a position in the runoff. Fail tallied 109 and Downs, 106 votes.

The fourth candidate, Sheila McLamb, received 42 votes. Write-in candidates for president captured 21 votes.

John Wiley polled a strong victory over Michael Sanders for SGA vice-president. Wiley received 272 votes to 137 for Sanders.

Fourteen votes went to write-in candidates in the vice-president race.

Peter Johnson sailed to victory in the attorney general's race, as did Doug Browne in the race for chief justice. Both were unopposed except for write-in candidates.

Johnson received 325 of 364 votes cast, while other candidates received 39.

Browne collected 270 of the 300 votes cast in the chief justice competition.

Cook led the field with 332 votes followed by Divoky, 280; Wansley, 279; Johnson, 276; Watson, 273; Black, 242; Burton, 235; and McMillan, 229.

Other candidates who trailed in at-large races and their totals include Bettie Fennel, 220; Daniel Goforth and Henry Arthur, 206 each; and Michael Strond, 206.

In contests for class positions, runoffs will be necessary for the offices of senior, junior and sophomore senate seats. These runoffs will also be held today.

For senior senator, the runoff will be among Jack Allen, Dennis Ray, Bobby Hinton, and Todd Ferrell for two seats.

In the junior class, Patrick Hardison received 62 votes to win one seat while Jim Ilosdoff, Arnold Carr, Cynthia Johnson, Tony Currie, Joseph Swanton and Mark Davis will compete for the other seat.

Sophomores will chose among Vicki Landing, Mike Marshall, Tom Preston, Ricky Palmer, Floyd Thomas and Dawn Drum for one senate position. Cynthia Dwiggins was elected to the other sophomore senate seat with 123 votes.

Frank Colvin glided uncontested to the senior class presidency with 89 votes amid scattered write-ins. Scott Bragg was elected senior vice-president with 84 votes against 13 write-ins.

In the junior class, Larry Hulett won the presidency with 57 votes. Guy Pushee was a successful write-in candidate for vice-president.

A close race for sophomore president yielded a victory for Cathy Robinson with 84 votes. John Owens collected 72 while Jason Tyson polled 13.

Charles Parsons garnered 58 votes to win election as sophomore vice-president against 54 votes for Daniel Antonelli and 47 for Darren McGuire.

Polls for the runoff election will be open today from 9 a.m. to 12 noon in the cafeteria and 1 to 4 p.m. in the pub. A valid ID is required of all voters.

Split court decisions upholds firing of concert chair

by Helen Hazelton
Associate Editor

In a 3-2 decision of the Student Court Monday night, it was decided that SGA President Wayne Dunlap did not violate the student government constitution by firing Concert Committee chair David Carter. Chief Justice Ray Warren presided over the hearing to determine whether Dunlap had acted illegally in the firing of Carter several weeks ago.

Five of the seven court justices were present for the meeting, including Warren, Joe Thompson, Jim Sardi, Doug Browne and Earl Braggs. By a 3-2 vote, the court also refused to reinstate Carter to his position of committee chair.

By a unanimous vote, the court refused to remove Dunlap from office, as had been requested by Carter in his plaintiff's brief.

All five justices agreed with the following statements:

(1) There are some precedents for an implied power of removal;

(2) The lack of an explicit statement on this power is a defect in the SGA constitution;

(3) The Legislature should pass a law making this power clear in one way or another;

(4) President Dunlap acted on good faith believing that he had the power to hire and fire; and

(5) The court has no authority to remove Dunlap from the presidency.

The majority of the court (composed of Thompson, Browne and Braggs) said that Dunlap's implied power of removal justified his action.

SGA President Wayne Dunlap, Attorney General Glen Downs, Derrick Anderson, and Captain Newborne discuss Dunlap's defense at SGA trial Monday night.

However, Warren and Sardi disagreed with this statement.

Warren said that "The Concert Committee was a semi-autonomous agency and is not an executive cabinet post," with Dunlap being a standing member of all committees.

Warren also continued in his closing statements that "the power to chair a committee implies the power to make decisions."

Karin Whaley, ex-SGA president, Assistant Director of Student Activities Jon Greene and ex-Concert Committee member Wes Knappe were called to the stand to testify in the behalf of both Dunlap and Carter.

Nader finds frequent gripe of students to be quality of food service

When visiting a college campus these days, I frequently find that students complain about the quality of the campus food. Indeed, when the topic is pursued, it seems to be a major gripe. The issue may not be as global as university investments in South Africa, but students have a legitimate complaint: because of their limited time and money, most students have to rely heavily on the food service for their meals.

And on many campuses the college food service provides you with overcooked vegetables, "mystery meats," recycled noodle dishes, chemical desserts, and stinky coffee. Frequently, the quality is poor, the selections are few, and meal times are inconvenient. And most students figure there is nothing they can do but eat now and pay later.

Unless you can afford the time and money to eat out or cook for yourself, or you buy your dinner—heaven forbid—at campus vending machines, you have no alternative, it seems, but to accept what your food service dishes out. Right?

Wrong. It's clear that students should have more to say about what they are served at school. But even if you were to gain this power, would you know enough about food (beyond what tastes good) to choose wisely in terms of nutrition and a balanced diet? Look at what students have done around the country to improve their food service systems.

At Franconia College in New Hampshire, a small student body was able to form a food cooperative where students, staff and faculty share in the buying and preparation of meals and the organization of the food service. Dissatisfaction with the commercial food service was high, so a committee was formed and tasks including bookkeeping, food ordering and scheduling were divided among volunteers. Professional cooks were retained to help with planning the meals and cooking.

Professional staff now meet with students, faculty and staff to plan meals and discuss situations which are disruptive to the cooperative. The kitchen is managed efficiently enough so that it is an economic success as well, and profits are distributed to students at the end of each school year. The experience of the collective at Franconia became, in the view of one member, "a model of how we would like the whole college to function."

At Guilford College in North Carolina, vegetarian students were unable to obtain an adequate diet from the campus food service. In 1971, they asked the food service manager if they could do the vegetarian food preparation themselves.

"You have the right to complain about the quality of your campus food and you have the resources to do something about it."

Students began by serving a vegetarian main dish at the evening meal for 25 students. By 1974, the vegetarian service grew, and the number of students served jumped to 100. Two cooks were hired, a baker was contracted to make whole wheat rolls and bread, and a yogurt bar was added.

The organizer of the alternative food service has a few suggestions for students interested in setting up such a program: whenever possible, hire non-students as cooks because of students' time constraints; have students work with cooks and supervisors to learn about nutrition and food politics so they will have more power when negotiating with managers of the food service and administrators; and students recommending the program should be knowledgeable about their goals and have the support of other students. Also, begin with food cooperatives already established in your area to supply food items and equipment for your alternative food service.

At University of Maryland, students created their own food cooperative in 1975. In 1974, the student government and its food cooperative committee began negotiations for permission to establish a cooperative on campus. After numerous plans for the cooperative were rejected by the board of regents because "it might compete with local business," a small lunch cooperative was established offering sandwiches, yogurt, fruit and nuts. The administration threatened to close the cooperative, and about 100 students gathered in response to rally in support of the lunch cooperative. Finally, the administration agreed to negotiate if the lunch cooperative was closed during the period in which a decision would be made.

A well-defined proposal was agreed to by the administration in June 1975 and the food cooperative was established. A grant from the student government helped the 100 student volunteers in getting the project started, and the cooperative is still growing. A core group of students, with patience and determination, made the Maryland Food Co-op a viable alternative food service for the campus community.

In 1975, students at Lewis and Clark College in Oregon decided that it was worth a small increase (about 10 percent) in food costs to have a menu low in refined sugar and saturated fats and high in fiber (by substituting whole grain flour for bleached white flour, honey for sugar, and adding more fruits and vegetables to the menu.) The president of the school, John Howard, proposed the program and through it students are educated about nutrition at the same time that the nutritional quality of the food is upgraded.

At Stanford University in California, students initiated monthly testing panels where they have a chance to compare old and new recipes and products, discuss preferences with the food service staff, and work out compromises in trying to satisfy the greatest number of students and upgrade the nutritional content of the food.

You have a right to complain about the quality of your campus food and you have the resources to do something about it. Students often spend much time learning about math, history, biology or art, yet so little time studying their own bodies. Since the food that you eat can directly affect your health and mental performance, it is clear that any time spent learning about nutrition and working to reform your campus food service is time well spent.

In order to improve your campus food service you must organize the grievances and energies of your fellow students. Survey student opinion, examine how the food service is run, and determine what kinds of changes would be economically feasible. Lobby for your demands, and be persistent. Don't be put off when the administration responds "it can't be done." Find out how students at other schools have organized food cooperatives or alternative food services, obtained vending machines providing nutritious foods, or have won the right to have student input into food service decisions.

You can also read a manual entitled A Student's Guide to Improving the Campus Food Service. It is available for $3.50 from the Center for Study of Responsive Law, P.O. Box 19367, Washington, D.C. 20036. This guide contains nutrition background, detailed plans of action and case studies of schools where students have achieved change.

LETTERS

Committee's letter a personal attack

To the Editor:

With the recent firing of Concert Committee chair David Carter, the committee wrote, as a group, to the editor of the Seahawk (Wed., March 21). While I am impressed with the committee's loyalty to their friend, David Carter, I am disappointed that their letter was filled with what were essentially personal character attacks on Mr. Dunlap rather than a simple statement of the facts as they exist.

On the legality of the firing of David Carter: I will be extremely interested in Mr. Carter's attempt to show that the student government president does not have the power to keep control and checks on a committee which was, essentially, established by the Student Government Association. Nowhere in the constitution is the president denied these powers, and most certainly, this control should exist for the well-being of the student body.

Specifically, on the Committee's allegations that the firing was purely the result of personal differences: First, they ignore the fact that David Carter was consistently absent from Program Board meetings. In my understanding, it was for establishing a working rapport with the committees that the Program Board was originally established. Carter's lack of consultation with the Program Board and the SGA in planning concerts is, if I may use the Concert Committee's own words, "simply a blatant demonstration of executive inability."

Second, Carter has shown he is lacking the qualities of a "capable and effective leader" by his gross inability to even be able to check up on the Concert Committee's financial situation. He took absolutely no steps to find out whether his budget request was passed, let alone without reasonable cuts. To cite specifically the Waylon Jennings concert example, Carter attempted to provide for student discounts without any knowledge or care about whether he had the money or not. Surely this negligent act would severely strain or even exceed whatever monies the Concert Committee happened to have.

Maybe Carter feels that Mr. Dunlap's action against him was based purely on principle, but in light of Carter's performance, it seems more than enough.

The Committee may call for Carter's reinstatement, but I ask, is a high committee office a place where friendship should be ranted above irresponsibility?

WLOZ manager's resignation explained

To the Editor:

Effective 7 a.m. Monday, March 26, Ms. Karen King officially resigned her position as station manager of WLOZ-FM due to prior work commitments. The responsibilities of her position will be absorbed by the existing management staff for the duration of this semester.

We feel a certain amount of explanation is due, considering the circumstances surrounding both her appointment and resignation. To effectively fulfill the position in question, a flexible amount of available time is necessary. Although Ms. King could have maintained her management status to a certain extent, she felt she could not give the needed hours on any regular basis. So in the best interest of all concerned, the staff accepted her resignation.

We sincerely hope that this temporary setback will not tangle the increasing credibility, enthusiasm and progress WLOZ is making. UNCW genuinely has something to be proud of in their radio station, and we will continue to merit and reinforce your support.

Jon Fail gives election platform

To the Editor:

My name is Jon Fail and I am currently involved in a runoff election for student body president. I want the students at UNCW to know what I intend to do for them if I am elected.

My major concern is the total lack of communication between student government, the administration, and most importantly, students. This communication problem is one of the causes for all the apathy everyone so often talks about. It seems curious to me that the time and place for the war games in the Baja are better known than events at the pub. If elected, I will combat the communication problem by having a weekly article in the Seahawk, coupled with a weekly news spot on WLOZ. Also, I plan to have advisors that will represent the dorms, minority students, and social organizations, so I can keep in touch with the various needs of students.

One thing that has bothered me for the three years I've been at UNCW is the fact that the people who give students traffic and parking tickets are also the same ones who not only give judgment on the validity of the ticket, but also collect the fine money! I'm sure that everyone can see the inherent problem in this system of justice. Multiply this by the 10,000 traffic and parking tickets written since September and this problem takes on monstrous proportions. To tame this monster, I would make our Student Court, which is relatively inactive, the responsible agency for dealing with traffic and parking tickets. Some people may say that with students judging other students, we may not have eliminated this problem; however, I have confidence in the Student Court's ability to be impartial, fair, and just.

Another problem that has bothered me is, with the increased student population (35 percent in the three years I've been here), that students must travel five miles by bus stamps or mail a package. Last year, I investigated why UNCW doesn't have a postal sub-station. I found out that we have the facilities, but the administration has been somewhat slow in obtaining the postal sub-station. I also sponsored a resolution urging the administration to speed up the process, but nothing has happened yet. If elected, I will use the power available to the president to put pressure on the administration and the Board of Trustees to obtain a much needed postal substation at UNCW.

Finally, I would like to thank everyone who voted for me last week and would like to encourage everyone to vote in the runoff election today. Also, thanks to all of you who helped in putting up all the posters, without your support I wouldn't have the opportunity to be in the runoff election. A special thanks to Ray Blackburn, my campaign manager. Take part in your student government and vote today!

Francis DeLuca urges large turnout

To the Editor:

Just a short letter to thank all those who voted in the SGA elections last Thursday and Friday, and especially those who voted for me. I would greatly appreciate if all would again vote on Wednesday. A good turnout will show that students do care and it will be a message to the administration and to all to listen to student complaints.

Please, once again come out and support me.

Francis DeLuca

Karen King resigns as WLOZ station manager

by Bobby Parker
Editor

WLOZ station manager Karen King has resigned her position, less than two months after she was appointed. King resigned effective Monday, according to a letter filed with Student Activities Director Linda Moore.

King apparently decided to step down due to other commitments which were taking time away from her duties at WLOZ. According to WLOZ Program Director Gail Eubanks, King felt she did not have the time to devote to the position that was needed.

Eubanks and others on the management staff will reportedly fill in the manager's duties until a replacement is named by the Media and Publications Board.

King's is the second resignation of a WLOZ station manager this semester. Former manager Steve Hess resigned in January due to a controversy arising from financial matters.

Meanwhile, WLOZ has received its FM broadcasting license from the Federal Communications Commission last week. The station had been operating with a temporary permit during a trial period before being granted the license.

combine the immediacy of drama with the ability of the narrator to stall the action long enough for the audience to examine the characters and their motivation. Davidson says.

The narrator does more than just set the scene. According to Davidson, "The narrator interacts with the characters and can convey the subtleties of the story."

There is minimal set design: a hospital bed, a coffin and a secretary's desk. But the life of the play may be found in the expressive talents of the cast.

Number of business majors growing in recent years

The number of business majors at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill has grown steadily in recent years. In 1977 there were 1,177 business majors, in 1978 there were 1,348, and in 1979 the number has grown to 1,500.

The growth in the number of business majors is due to a number of factors. One factor is the increasing demand for business graduates in the job market. Another factor is the increasing number of students who are interested in business as a career.

Business is a great opportunity for advancement. A master's in business administration (MBA) is a great asset. MBAs are getting plentiful among business graduates and many employers use this as a prerequisite for employment.

A proposal has been submitted to the UNC General Administration to offer the MBA in the UNCW campus, but it is still waiting for an answer, according to Kaylor.

The MBA will not only be for graduating UNCW students, but also for Wilmington area residents who already work in the field of business. Kaylor adds that there are already approximately 150 people who have a rising interest or need for a MBA program on campus.

Some students have already been placed in business employment positions pending graduation this year. The Office of Career Planning and Placement helps find open positions and arranges interviews.

For more information about business and career opportunities, contact Sandra Harkin, Office of Career Planning and Placement, room 207, Alderman Administration Building.

Hewlett Hall dedication next week

Addison Hewlett, Jr., Hall, UNCW's newest dormitory, will be dedicated April 11 in a 1:30 p.m. public ceremony at the site on Riegel Road.

In naming the facility for Hewlett, the UNCW Board of Trustees cited the former speaker of the house in the North Carolina General Assembly for his staunch support of higher education in general and UNC in particular during his five terms in the legislature.

A member and past chairman of the UNCW Board of Trustees, Hewlett has also served on the boards of Wake Forest University and Campbell College.

lege and on the North Carolina Board of Higher Education. He is a past chairman of the North Carolina Marine Science Council.

Dr. Hewlett has the distinction of being one of the first three recipients of the honorary doctor's degree from UNCW in 1971.

Hewlett Hall, which houses 200 students, was completed in August 1978 at a cost of $1.6 million financed through the use of self-liquidating bonds. UNCW currently has 800 resident students and a fourth residence hall for 200 students under construction and slated for occupancy in the fall of 1979.

Indian film shown Saturday

"Two Daughters," a two-part film by Indian director Satyajit Ray, will be featured March 31 in the Cinema '79 film series. The film will be shown at 8 p.m. in the auditorium of King Hall.

As a unit the film reveals the warmth of love and the blindness of lovers. In "The Postmaster," a student assigned to be postmaster of a village is nurtured and cared for by a little girl, yet not until he leaves does he realize the intense affection she has for him.

The Conclusion" depicts a tormented marriage wherein the bride flees her groom and eventually returns in true love. Admission is by season membership: $2 for adults and $1 for students.

Burglary protection

Students and faculty members are becoming increasingly aware of the influx in the amount of crime on UNCW's campus. Cars have been burglarized and many students have reported articles stolen from their dorm rooms. As a deterrent to this crime wave, the Criminal Justice Majors Club and the UNCW Campus Security is offering to students "Operation Identification," a system of marking your valuables with an electronic pen.

Some of the items recommended for marking are stereo equipment, bicycles, tools, radios, cameras, appliances, TV sets, binoculars, golf and fishing equipment, jewelry, musical instruments and many other items of personal value.

So that items reported stolen can readily be traced, your driver's license number will be used in Operation Identification. Any law enforcement officer can check the number nationwide.

It has been proven in cities that have instituted such a program that thefts and burglaries show a decrease in those homeowners who participate.

A similar program has been successful on the campus of Wake Forest University.

Operation Identification can take the profits out of burglaries and thefts at UNCW. On April 2 and 3 (Mon. and Tues.), stenciling machines will be located in the lobbies of East, Belk and Galloway dorms. Two members of the club will be present from 2 to 5 p.m. in the afternoons and from 7 to 10 p.m. in the evenings. Once valuables are registered, they are on file and at your disposal. Those participants not planning to attend UNCW next year will still benefit from this program. Off-campus residents are urged to bring valuables to the designated areas at the scheduled times.

Baseball: Varisty wins two; J.V.'s split

by Roger Knight

Sports Editor

The UNCW baseball team took two games from Eastern Connecticut State University last week. In the first game the Seahawks, led by the sustained good pitching of David Pope, managed a come-from-behind win. Pope's record is now 2-1.

The Seahawks again had to come from behind on Friday night. While avoiding a threatening rain storm, the 'Hawks, behind the hitting of shortstop John Tallent and centerfielder Ron Peoples managed to rally in the late innings. Tallent leads the team in batting average with a better than .400 mark. The winning pitcher was Mike Williams, who's record is now 1-1.

On Sunday, the Seahawks traveled to Coastal Carolina University. Coastal won the game 6-2. The losing Seahawk pitcher was Roger Sutton.

The Seahawks play East Carolina at home on Thursday night at 7:30 p.m. They play UNC-Chapel Hill in Chapel Hill on Saturday.

On Monday night, the Seahawks upped their week's record to 3 and 1 by beating Charleston Baptist 10-2. Pope was again the winning pitcher.

The junior from Dunn, N.C. upped his record to 3-1.

The UNCW J.V. team split two games with Brookdale College from New Jersey last week. Brookdale was rated number one in the nation among junior colleges last year. The Seahawks jumped off with a big lead and held on to win 8-6 in the first game. In the second game on Wednesday, Brookdale did the same thing the 'Hawks had done the previous day. Jumping ahead 7-0, Brookdale held on to win 7-1. The winning Pitcher for the 'Hawks on Tuesday was Phil Vonderbosh. The loser on Wednesday was Steve Harris.

Tennis: It's getting better!

by Steve Wallace
Staff Writer

The UNCW men's tennis team renewed their season's record at 7-7 with road victories over St. Andrews and N.C. Wesleyan. The 'Hawks have now won their last three matches.

Last Wednesday, UNCW defeated St. Andrews, 8-1, in Laurinburg. In singles action Paul Gemborys (W) d. Raney, 6-4, 6-2; Johnson (S) d. Sumrall (W), 4-6, 7-6, 7-5; Sue (W) d. Wagner, 6-1, 6-1; Watson (W) d. Poole, 6-0, 6-1; Jackson (W) d. McKee, 6-3, 6-1; Jackson-Winslow (W) d. no. 2 doubles team for St. Andrews, 1-6, 6-4, 6-2; Sumrall-Watson (W) d. Wagner-Mosley, 6-0, 6-1.

Then, on Thursday, the Seahawks won their third straight match, blanking N.C. Wesleyan, 9-0, in Rocky Mount. In singles, it was Gemborys (W) d. Bradley 6-0, 6-0; Sumrall (W) d. Hayes 6-1, 6-2; Sue (W) d. Driver 6-1, 6-1; Watson (W) d. Mumford 6-0, 6-1; Jackson (W) d. Staton 6-1, 6-1; Winslow (W) d. Vick 6-3, 6-1; Doubles-Gemborys-Sue (W) d. Bradley-Hayes 6-2, 6-3; Jackson-Winslow (W) d. Driver-Mumford 6-1, 6-1; Watson-Ponton (W) d. Staton-Vick 6-0, 6-0.

The UNCW-ECU match, scheduled for last Saturday, was suspended after the singles competition due to rain. At the conclusion of the singles, UNCW was leading 4-2. The doubles competition will be completed April 20th prior to UNCW's final match here against the Pirates.

The Seahawks play five matches this week, one at home and four on the road. Today, the Hawks entertain Pembroke State, here, at 2:30 p.m.

Football: 'Hawks lose opener

The magic feet of Cliff "Outlaw" Thomas fell just short of leading the Seahawks to a spring victory in their first outing in football.

The Tar Heels recovered a Seahawk fumble on Seahawk 4 yard line and on 4th down and goal scored on a quarterback keeper around left end. The 2-point run after was good and the Heels took the lead, 8-0. Early in the second quarter the 'Hawks missed on a 33 yard field goal.

Then behind the running of Thomas, Dave Moore, and Mark Doll, the 'Hawks moved the ball 65 yards with Thomas going in from the 19. The try for 2 was no good and the score stood 8-6. The Seahawks came close twice in the second half only to lose the ball on a fumble and once on downs.

Thomas had 81 yards on 10 carries, Moore had 33 yards on 9 carries, while Doll had 16 yards on 5 carries.

The Tar Heels were held to just 63 total yards by a strong defense lead by Tim Owens, Jesse Hays, Hamp Hardison and Bill Morris.

The game was played in a driving rain storm which hurt the Seahawks speedsters, Thomas and Jacobs, by making the field slippery.

On April 7, there will be three games at Legion Stadium: 10:00 is N.C. State vs. Lenoir Rhyne

12:30 is UNCW vs. Ft. Bragg. 3:00 is UNC-Chapel Hill vs. Police

TIME OUT

by Roger Knight
Sports Editor

It occurred to me back in the basketball season. Seeing the N.C. State wolf running around the basketball court, the UNC ram standing at courtside, and the Wake Forest Demon Deacon dancing at halftime gave me an idea. UNCW needs a mascot. I do not necessarily mean catch a Seahawk (if there is such a creature) and using him to attack opposing teams, but getting a spirited student to dress up in a bird costume. Don't laugh. It is happening all over, even in professional sports. Just look at baseball's San Diego Padres. Do they have a little friar blessing the team. No! The Padres have CHICKEN MAN!

The Philadelphia 76ers of the NBA have the Phillie Phanatic, who covorts at home games. Now if UNCW could get a mascot it would liven up all sporting events. The mascot could entertain fans during time outs, halftime, and before the games. He could be the source of numerous promotions, Seahawkman tee-shirts, and special children's nights. Let's face it, sports are big business. A mascot would provide interest as well as a little fun while making money. The thing might catch on and really go big time. Businesses could come to the Seahawkman for endorsements. Politicians could get him to campaign for them. It would be a great scheme.

So, the athletic department needs to put up notices for tryouts. Maybe they could even arrange for a scholarship. It would be a great boost for attendance on home sporting events.

I hate to say I told you so, but I did pick three out of the four NCAA basketball finals. I picked Penn., Michigan State, UCLA, and Indiana State. Only UCLA was not among the final four.

Congratulations to Old Dominion University's womens' basketball team, who won the AIAW National Championship last Sunday. They defeated Louisiana Tech on National television.

Legislative Committee presents alternative to administration fee proposal

by Bobby Parker
Editor

Billed as an alternative to a recent administration proposal to strip SGA of its allocation power, a plan disclosed to the Student Legislature last week would give greater autonomy to both the Program Board and Media and Publications Board in the distribution of funds among groups under each board.

The plan was devised by a special committee appointed to investigate more closely the proposal presented several weeks ago by Student Activities officials.

That proposal would have created a five-member board to handle all funding of groups currently funded by the Legislature.

The new plan would divide the funds among three agencies with a guaranteed percentage going to each annually. These agencies would be the Program Board, Media and Publications Board, and SGA Finance Committee.

The Plan stated that the Finance Committee should control 40 percent of the funds while the two boards would handle 30 percent each.

Additionally, the portion controlled by the Finance Committee would be divided among three categories: professionally-oriented groups, athletic organizations and general activities.

The Finance Committee would also be expanded to include three legislators, three at-large students and three advisers. The SGA treasurer would chair the committee, bringing the total membership to ten, although the advisers would be non-voting members.

The legislators and at-large members would be selected through an application process which would consider such qualifications as courses beneficial to a committee member, work experience pertinent to a position and other factors.

They would be appointed by the treasurer.

The advisers would include the SGA administrative assistant, a faculty member and a representative from the Student Activities office.

Two of the student committee members would be responsible for the budgets of individual organizations within the three categories under the Finance Committee.

SGA President Wayne Dunlap labelled the plan a good proposal and advised the Legislature to "move forward with as much expediency as possible" on the plan.

He also cited the need for clearer guidelines for Program and Media Boards if the plan is implemented.

In other legislature business, SGA Treasurer Nancy Reagan asked for an investigation of the Seahawk concerning a letter written by Reagan and published March 21. Reagan charged that unjustified editing of the letter had changed its content.

Legislator Derrick Anderson was appointed to investigate.

The turmoil in Iran has brought worldwide attention to the Bahá'ís in that country.

Who are the Bahá'ís?

■ Bahá'ís are members of an independent religion founded by Bahá'u'lláh. Although it originated in Iran just over a century ago, the Bahá'í Faith has followers in over 300 countries and territories, from India to Bolivia, from Ireland to Tanzania, from Sweden to Japan.

■ Bahá'ís believe in the unity of God and accept the divine origin of religions, including Judaism, Christianity, Islam, and Buddhism.

■ Bahá'ís advocate the unity of nations and races, the establishment of universal peace, the equality of the sexes, and the abolition of all forms of prejudice. Drawn from a wide variety of ethnic and religious backgrounds, the Bahá'í international community includes the members of over 1,600 tribes and minority groups.

■ Bahá'ís propose the adoption of an international auxiliary language, the abolition of barriers to international, economic and cultural exchange, and the development of institutions that would ensure lasting peace.

■ Bahá'ís abstain from partisan politics, refuse to assume hostile attitudes or to engage in violence, emphasizing instead the need to spiritualize humanity and to apply moral standards to institutions as well as to individuals.

Bahá'ís have built houses of worship, open to members of all religions, in Frankfurt, Germany; Sydney, Australia; Panama City, Panama and elsewhere. The one in Wilmette, Illinois has recently been designated a national historic site.

Rich Look

Rocking Beast from East

When I went to see Rich Look and Tom Chapin in concert, I was expecting the show to be the ilk of Crosby, Stills, Nash, and Young folk show. Good music, good guitar solos, but no real lasting effect. Well, I was wrong! The Rich Look-Tom Chapin show Sunday night at Kenan Auditorium turned out to be a well-rounded and thoroughly entertaining show.

With Lewis, a California native who spent much of his childhood in Japan, opened the show with a bee-bop number reminiscent of the 1950's era. His saxophonist Chris Cole (see p. 3) played his saxophone ticks expertly with. As soon as the audience would get into the swinging groove of a song like "Aurora" or "Blues for Karl," Cole would have the audience take a summer break by blowing their blues in rhythmic, low, moaning notes. Lewis would then go back to writing and singing at the organ to the audience's approval. We are all familiar with just two of the 35 commercials he's written or arranged.

hip-hop songs like "Walking Stick" and a jazzed-up version of James Taylor's hit "How Sweet It Is" kept the audience moving their feet in rhythm. One of the high points of the show is when Rich sang Elvis Presley's hit "Heartbreak Hotel." Judging from the audience's comments, I wasn't the only one reminded of John Belushi's Samura: Man, with a hiri kiri knife included, no less.

Rich and Kris completed their set by auditioning a new commercial for the Ponderosa Steak House (audience approved). Called back for an encore, they played another Japanese r'n'b song with Cris playing a tenor and alto sax together.

Look says simply, "No, I am not the owner of a magazine, but I'm glad to see the rumor circulating again." He got involved in music while taking piano lessons as a child. "Which I enjoyed!" he says emphatically. In addition to the piano, he also plays the flute and guitar.

Rich admits he likes playing to college audiences "because a college audience is so un cynical, not afraid to get into whatever it is the performer is trying to do. The shows tend to be well-rounded." He adds that there is "no compulsion to be sophisticated. I enjoy the spontaneous give and take."

Cris Cloe, his saxophonist, has been with Look for about a year. Both men agree that entertainers such as Ray Charles, Fats Waller, Jerry Lee Lewis, and Jacques Brel influenced their music the most. On the modern circuit, they prefer the music of Dire Straits, Linda Ronstadt, Rod Stewart, and Elvis Costello.

Rich states that his philosophy of life is paraphrased from a Kurt Vonnegut novel, "Life is a dancing lesson from God."

From seeing the show, I can see why Rich Look is called "The Rocking Beast from the East."

The Wilmington Pro Musica, with Frank Wiley, musical director, will present its third concert of the season this Friday. The concert, sponsored by the UNCW Department of Creative Arts, will take place in King Auditorium at 8 p.m. Admission will be $2 for adults and $1 for students. Jefferson Starship "strikes" Gold

RECORDS

Gold are: Dragon Fly with "Ride the Tiger," "Caroline" and "Hyperdrive" which is the flip side of the single bonus "Light the Sky with Fire," the debut song Starship did on the TV "Star Wars" special. Red Octopus with

Off of Spitfire is the equally good hit, "With Your Love," also "St. Charles."

And last but certainly not least the best album Starship ever released, Earth, with "Love Too Good," which echoes of Heart. Also included from this album are my all time favorites, "Count on Me" and "Runaway."

The past has been great for Starship, but with the sudden departure of Grace Slick the group will have to rely more on their musical talents than Grace's great voice. Good luck fellas.

Pure Prairie League to perform here next week part of this year's Azalea Festival."

The addition of the Pure Prairie League also gives the Azalea Festival its strongest one-two entertainment punch in many years. While this group will provide a concert on Friday night, there will also be the traditional Queen's Coronation Pageant on Saturday night, April 7, at which Debby Boone will headline the show segment, with TV Actress Laurie Walters to be crowned officially as Queen Azalea XXXII.

The marks the first time in a number of years in which the Friday night and Saturday night programs have been two different shows, and Burton believes it will give Festival audiences and visitors "an even better and exciting time."

The Pure Prairie League is composed of six members and are best-known for their hit records of "Amie," "Two-Lane Highway," and "Memories." They are George Powell, rhythm and lead vocal; John David Call, steel guitar, banjo, and background vocal; Michael O'Connor, keyboards; Larry Goshorn, lead guitar and vocal; Billy Hinds, drums; and Mike Reilly, bass and vocals.

Tom Chapin seen as versatile performer at Program Board concert

"Tom Chapin? Oh, he's Harry Chapin's brother," was a phrase that was heard frequently on campus when it was announced that Tom Chapin what going to appear Sunday night at Kenan Auditorium.

Tom Chapin began with a soft song, resembling a Dan Fogelberg composition. The audience was prepared for an evening of gentle folk music, but rapidly discovered that Tom Chapin is a versatile performer, capable of a whole spectrum of moods. He encouraged audience participation with songs like "Travelin' Man," and "Face to Face," (a track from his debut album "Life Is Like That). He performed the song "Make A Wish," the theme of his television show that ran five years. He finished his set with a song called "Make It Right" and bid farewell to the audience, but they weren't going to let him off that easy. He came back for an encore and asked Rich Look and Cris Cioe to join him for a few numbers. They played "Happy Ending" and "Ride the Dove."

Tom picked up the guitar when he was twelve years old. He and his brothers Stevie and Harry formed a folk group called "The Chapin Brothers." Coincidentally, he and Rich Look have played in bands together. Besides the guitar, Tom plays the banjo and the electric guitar.

Rich Look

Tom commented on college audiences by saying "They're real nice. They're interested and intelligent. I enjoy it." Oddly enough, he doesn't believe there is a club circuit like in the days of Bob Dylan anymore. "The club circuit has become the college circuit.

Colleges will put up money because the risk isn't as

On the subject of songwriting, Tom states that "I believe in the form of a song. Whatever moves me is what direction I will go. There is no set rule as to writing either the music or lyrics first. Up-tempo things I tend to write in cars. It is something that instinctively feels right."

This sounds like the typical success story. Tom Chapin is playing in a rock band in New York called The Bitter End. An agent turns up looking for actors to host a television show, combing all of the folk houses for talent. Tom's agent called him and told him about the part. He auditioned, tested and wound up getting the part of host on "Make A Wish."

His philosophy of music is "It's an art, it's a curse, a pleasure, and a pain. It's what I've chosen to do."

If Tom Chapin continues to give such high-quality performances in the future, you may overhear on a campus, "Harry Chapin? Oh, that's Tom Chapin's brother."

Top ten student reading: 'Joy of Sex'

The Joy Of Sex! Have you read it? Borrowed it, stolen it, underlined particularly pithy passages? I hear it's a real page-turner, and according to my unerring sources, this book is one of the top ten choices for student reading material.

Now, really.

This is college, people. We're supposed to be seeking higher education, not ah-er. pleasure (actually I can think of better words but there is such a thing as censorship!). Remember what your mother always told you: study hard and take plenty of cold showers and the feeling will pass. That's what they said about typhoid, too, and look how many people never got over that fever!

Am I being too racy? I don't think so, not in today's world. It really says something about when The Joy of Sex outsells The Joy of Cooking (Julia Child, eat your heart out!). It makes you wonder: what are people really after, sex or spaghetti?

Campus Chuckles by Julie Russ

Don't get me wrong; I have nothing against The New Morality (if anybody out there doesn't know what it is yet, my number's in the book) but I think it's gotten out of hand. One girl (who shall here go nameless or else I'd be walking around headless) has a handwritten list of all the men in her life. The paper stretches around Galloway Hall three times and she's still keeping count!

The great thing about living in the seventies is that everybody's so enlightened, right? We all know how babies are made and what you should and shouldn't tell your mother. (Babies are ordered through the bookstore and the only thing you tell your mother is that you're about to give her the biggest surprise of her life.)

But seriously, folks, how many of you will dare to clip this column and send it home? Aha, I knew there were a few feeble-hearted foxes out there somewhere. Not to mention all those depressed Don Juans who are just lookin' for the right one (for some, "the right one" is just a feel away).

I'd better end now (gotta make a beeline for the shower...who says ice water is just for the guys?) Go ahead and sneak your copies of The Joy of Sex and enjoy, enjoy! Because in a few years it'll probably be required reading! Amen.

Interest in student senates on the decline at universities

(CPS)--"You mean there's a student senate here?"

That's how a Burlington County College student answered a survey measuring the effectiveness of the student government at the small eastern school. The sentiments, however, are common to surprisingly large numbers of students who are showing record amounts of apathy towards their student government.

The symptoms are national. Voter turnouts for student government elections are steadily dropping. Surveys find most students are totally uninformed about student government workings. The senators themselves are frequently lackadaisical about their responsibilities. Student leaders running on "absurdist" platforms are proliferating.

To wit: Although the average student turnout for student elections has been charted at 20 percent, voting at most schools is actually much lower. At the University of Missouri-Kansas City, voter turnout dropped from nine percent in 1977 to 5.6 percent last year. Last fall, UNC-Greensboro experienced an all-time low in voter turnout--five percent. A Fort Hays State College recall election attracted less than four percent of the students.

Ninety-five percent of Florida Institute of Technology students didn't know who their college representative was. Less than 10 percent of the students at New Mexico State University knew.

Two senators were axed last winter at Towson State College in Maryland for not showing up for meetings. At Appalachian State University, one senator was impeached for the same reason.

The University of Georgia student government president won office last spring by posing as the "unknown comedian" and wearing a paper bag over his head. The student government heads at the University of Wisconsin-Madison led the Pail and Shovel party this past year through a series of self-admitted foolish expenditures. Last month, a University of Missouri-Columbia candidate won almost half of the student vote with his "birthday party" platform and by campaigning in clown suits and strait jackets.

But most importantly, more schools are finding student government so worthless they're abandoning it. Since last spring, at least seven schools have considered abolishing their student governments. At two schools, the effort was successful. At the others, the votes were very close.

Reasons for the disenchantment with student government vary from school to school, but observers point to some common factors, including the lack of "bread and butter" issues dealt with by student governments, the political maneuvering frequently seen in the groups, and the encroachment of administrative control over functions previously controlled by students.

The UNCW student government is currently opposing efforts by administration to strip the student legislature of its allocation power. UNCW's student government, which has had problems meeting quorum in the past semester, currently controls $110,000 in student fees. The administration favors re-dividing the funding responsibilities between the program board, media and publications board, and the student legislature.

Administration control of student allocations was also an issue at the University of Georgia this year. The newly-elected SGA president, Harold Mulherin, was elected on an abolition platform.

Out-going president Billy Key told the "Red and Black" that SGA has "lost its main purpose" when UG administrators re-assigned the task of club allocations. The schools and colleges now allocate money to associated clubs, while funding for the larger groups--such as the school's union--is decided by an administration-appointed committee.

"Allocations and student money were the only real things the senate had to do," complained former vice-president Debbie Barnes.

Other senators polled by the "Red and Black" had found their government experience "discouraging." Students apparently found their performance discouraging, too. Earlier this month, students voted 4-1 to abolish senate salaries.

A referendum for the abolition will be held next month. Mulherin is confident that the effort will succeed. In his campaign he has emphasized that the $36,000 allocation to student government could be used to treat more pressing student concerns.

Mulherin's gambit for more conscientious use of student money speaks, more generally, of the priorities of many students. Observers have noted that money issues, especially fee and tuition increases, are certain to spark the most interest.

Such was the case at the University of Colorado. The spring 1978 election brought out one of the largest numbers of voters in recent years--20 percent. Included on the ballot was a referendum that would lower student fees.

Last fall, when there was no money issue on the ballot, only six percent turned out. Even the Executive Council President Rick Rolden admits, "there are no real problems involving the student government that students can do anything about."

Students also feel helpless about the political infighting that often marks student government. That factor was a major determinant in abolition efforts at Stanford, the University of Northern Colorado, and Linn-Benton Community College.

Still others feel that student government is "an expensive duplication of student effort," as a University of Nebraska-Lincoln student put it. Apathy had plagued UNL's student government in recent years, and many students opined that most of the government's work could be absorbed by other organizations. Such organizations as the program council, the Nebraska PIRG and the Union Board were seen as more efficient than student government. Referring to the body's appointment powers, one UNL student wondered, "Do we really need 35 senators, two vice-presidents and one president working with a $35,000 budget to do all that?"

Biology student awarded grant for marine research

by Cathy Horrell
Staff Writer

Sally Williams a student of the UNCW marine biology program has been awarded a grant of $16,300 by the National Science Foundation to study the bio-economic problems and solutions of shellfish pollution in Brunswick County. She will direct eight undergraduate students and two graduate students from May 29 through August 20, (12 weeks) to research this important local problem.

Dr. Gilbert Bane is the faculty adviser for the research project. The objectives of the project are the following:

- The objectives of the project are the following:
- (1) To determine the amount of pollutants in the closed shellfish area;
- (2) To evaluate the extent of contaminated shellfish within the closed area;
- (3) To find the major sources of this pollution, and how it is transported;
- (4) To collect data affecting the distribution of the contaminants;
- (5) To study the socio-economic and political factors of the area influenced by the closed shellfish area; and
- (6) To show the impact of pollutants on the area by bring-together the socio-economic data and productivity data in a computer model.

The students will work closely with the government agencies involved in shellfish pollution in the state. They will use available data and provide assistance and data as needed.

The NSF is supporting 69 student-initiated projects to explore national problems. Approximately 68 colleges and universities are involved, including three universities from North Carolina--UNCW, Duke University, and N.C. Central University. This brings a total of 535 participating college students.

Sally Williams is the director of the research project for UNCW. This year one-half of the directors are women. She is majoring in marine biology and is a senior.

Williams states that she "likes the experience of learning the format for writing proposals and working with government agencies." She also remarked that "The experience of coordinating this activity will help me as far as my future plans. UNCW has a good marine science department and this will bring UNCW into the limelight."

Gargoyles purchased for university buildings

Vice-chancellor for Business Affairs Jairy C. Hunter announced this week that the university has purchased gargoyles to decorate the exteriors of campus buildings. The first of the gargoyles went up on the new classroom building Friday.

Hunter said the gargoyles will resemble modern-day students "in keeping with the campus atmosphere."

"We could have purchased that 4th or 5th century stuff, but we wanted something that the students could identify with," Hunter explained.

Hunter said the purchases were made on the order of Chancellor William Wagoner who said he wished to give the campus more of a student-oriented appearance.

"The students are the heart of this university," Wagoner said in a press release.

"There's nothing I would like more than to see student gargoyles impaled on every building at UNCW.

Fine Arts chairman fired because president doesn't like name

In his last official act as head of student government, SGA President Wayne Dunlap has fired Fine Arts Committee Chair Steve Chiappisi because, Dunlap said, "I just didn't care for the guy's name."

In a statement to the Student Legislature last week, Dunlap said he had been leaning toward the decision for several months but had held off until the results of a genealogical investigation into the Chiappisi family had been completed. Dunlap said that the investigation had revealed there are only six known, living Chiapis in the country.

"Let's just say I'm wary of any guy who has fewer than ten blood relatives," Dunlap said.

"I also don't believe it is fair to the student body to have a person chairing a major committee whose name no one can spell," Dunlap continued.

The president said he had fired Chapisse "not on his performance record, but on principle."

"I think Cheepesse did a hell of a good job. I can't deny that. And I really appreciate his efforts," Dunlap said. "But there comes a time when student leaders have to stand on some basic, traditional, America-love-it-or-leave-it principles. The name 'Chissippe' is just not consistent with those principles."

Interviewed after his dismissal, Chiappisi said he would not challenge the decision in Student Court, although he said he does believe the action to be blatant discrimination.

"It's not the first time something like this has happened," Chiappesi said. "When I was in high school, all the teachers called me 'Steve Jones' because they refused to try to pronounce my real name."

He added that the U.S. Post Office had classified his family name as "intolerable" and refuses to deliver mail to his home.

"I think there should be a constitutional amendment passed to protect the civil rights of Chippis," he continued. "We have civil rights for blacks, women and gays, but absolutely no protection for the real minorities of our country."

Chipseasi said that Dunlap had asked him several times to change his name and avoid the dismissal, but he said he refused because his mother would not have approved.

"She's really proud of the name," Chappesi explained. "That's why she married my father."

Program Board Chair Cindy Cole, who has worked with Chapis throughout the year, praised his work with the Fine Arts Committee. But, Cole added, "I think he really could have made more of an effort to find another name if he was really dedicated to the job."

Cole said the Program Board would try to locate a position more appropriate for Chiappisi.

pssee. "I hear there's an opening for academic dean," she noted.

In a related development, Dunlap said he had reached an agreement with Fine Arts Committee faculty adviser Doug Swink that will allow Swink to keep his position. Dunlap said Swink will change his name to Doug Smith "just to keep things even" on the committee.

Asked to comment on the change, Swink/Smith said,

"It doesn't matter to me as long as I still get in free to see the movies."

Candidate who failed may challenge win of candidate who lucked out

Latest returns from the SGA presidential race show that Francis DeLuckedout has defeated opponent Jon Failed by a margin of 6,783 to 47.

Failed immediately filed suit in Student Court to have the election declared void because three Failed supporters were not allowed to vote when they presented invalid student ID cards.

"The election was clearly a fraud," Failed said. "DeLuckedout had bribed elections chairman Hazel Ton and that's why those students weren't allowed to vote."

Failed said he is eager to face DeLuckedout in another runoff, and he believes his chances of success are excellent this time.

"In the last two votes, my supporters were reluctant to turn out because of the lobster scare. My opponent's supporters are not afraid of lobsters because they are used to seeing them at their tables. I've said throughout this campaign that I'm the man of the people, and that means my supporters eat hamburger," Failed explained.

DeLuckedout has issued a statement on election day warning students that anyone voting for Failed would be attacked by live lobsters minutes after leaving the polls. He said he has used the tactic in elections before.

DeLuckedout, however, says that Failed does not have a case.

"I beat the hell out of him fair and square—not just once, but twice," he said.

Judy Thomas practices "nuff-nuff."

Second annual 'nuff-nuff' contest finds lodging interest, few entries

The Second Annual "Nuff-nuff" championships will be held at UNCW next weekend, but sponsors here are concerned that there may be a serious shortage of participants. Assistant Director of Student Activities Jon Greene, inventor of "nuff-nuff" and chairman of the tournament, said that the lack of competitors is due to the fact that there are so few people on campus who really get a nuff. "Nuff-nuff" is a game in which the participant uses a telephone. There are three basic rules: (1) place the receiver to your ear in the normal calling position; (2) close your eyes slightly so you are looking through your eyelashes; (3) put your tongue between your teeth and say "nuff-nuff" into the receiver. When first conceived, Greene had hoped that "nuff-nuff" would catch on throughout the country with the formation of a national "nuff-nuff" club. But thus far the club has struggled to remain active in the Wilmington area.

"I did have some contact with a potential member on the West Coast last June,"

Greene said. "But that fell through when it turned out to be a dog with a speech impediment."

Sign-up sheets for this week's tournament are available from Greene in the Student Activities Office.

According to reports, this year's favorite to sweep the tournament for the "Great-a-nuff" cup is Judy Thomas, secretary in the Counseling and Testing Office.

"She practices every chance she gets," Greene said, "and that's what it takes."

'Listen to my story . . .'

To the Editor:

Come and listen to my story about a man named Jed, a poor mountaineer who barely kept his family fed. And then one day he was shooting at some food and up from the ground came a bubbling crude-oil, that is—black gold, Texas tea.

Well the first thing you know ole Jed's a millionaire. His kinfolk said, "Jed, move away from there." They said, "California is the place you ought to be."

So he loaded up his truck and moved to Beverly-Hills, that is; swimming pools, movie stars.

University official disclaims 'sea crock'

(EDITOR'S NOTE: In order to save time, effort, pain and headache, the "sea crock" staff notified Chancellor William Wagoner of our intent to publish again this year prior to publication to allow him time to make a public disclaimer of this newspaper. We certainly didn't want him to take credit. Following is his statement.)

FT. BLUNDER--The University of North Carolina at Wilmington assumes absolutely no responsibility for this utterly tasteless, disgusting and infantile piece of journalistic hogwash known as the "sea crock." The kids simply got restless again and I personally thought I was being a nice guy by standing by and letting them do what they wanted. Kids will be kids.

The official position of the University administration is that they are just being naughty. All administration and faculty members have been ordered not to read or discuss this thing and to flunk on sight any student caught with it in their possession. We will get tough.

The students involved with the "sea crock" would have better spent their time studying than wasting their talents(?) and abilities(?) on such mindless dribble. We have tried to teach them better, but you must realize that these kids spent their formative years elsewhere. We are not responsible.

In the event that a group of three or more persons is offended by any article contained in this "sea crock," I will continue my established policy and promptly issue another statement to the local press sharply criticizing the staff for their lack of moral judgment and general malfeasance.

So there.

The sea crock is not the student newspaper of the University of North Carolina at Wilmington. It is published every now and then, whenever the staff gets in the mood (and lately, folks, that ain't much).

Moore wants more

Student Activities Director Linda Moore this week put her foot down and demanded that students accept her plan to take student fee monies from SGA and put them in her pockets. Moore, who announced he plan several weeks ago, said she had become tired of student objections to the proposal and would no longer tolerate dissent.

"My intentions are entirely dictatorial, underhanded and greedy," Moore said. "I just want that money and I intend to have it."

Moore said that she feels since she is director of Student Activities, she should control all money going for student activities.

"I see definite advantages in keeping all the money in my pockets rather than in the SGA as is now the case," Moore said. "First of all, I will be able to spend the money as I see fit."

Moore said she plans to set a time each morning for leaders of student activities and organizations to stop by her office and receive enough funds to make it through the day. She said this would insure her total control of the money and she could give it to whoever she liked best.

Under Moore's plan, certain groups would receive preferential treatment in funding if they complied with certain conditions. These conditions would include whether the members liked gray and maroon bathrooms, how fervently they support the Equal Rights Amendment and if they stand six feet tall in tennis shoes.

Moore will also sponsor a contest later this month to award $5000 of the money to the organization which gives her the best shoeshine in three minutes or less. Entry forms may be filed in Moore's office through April 15.

Asked about student reaction to the new proposal, Moore said, "I really don't care what they think. It's time they realize who's in charge around here. Once I have their money, they will know who's in charge."

Speaker will also clean Trask

Chancellor William Wagoner announced this week that Fred Jones, a member of the staff of Wake Forest University, will speak at commencement exercises May 12.

Jones is the men's room attendant at Bowman-Gray Medical Building at Wake Forest. He has been with the university for 32 years, having started out in 1947 as a lawn mower mechanic.

"I am very proud and pleased at the acceptance of Mr. Jones of our invitation," Wagoner said. "It continues our long tradition of noted speakers at our commencement exercises at UNCW."

Lecture time

Program Board schedules program that fits in with student tastes

Program Board officials have announced the scheduling of a lecture by noted anthropologist Margaret Mead on campus for April 15 in Kenan Auditorium. Mead's topic will be "Digging Out: The Challenge of the Big Excavation."

Program Board Chair Cindy Cole said the Lecture Committee had overcome several major scheduling problems to bring Mead to campus.

"At first her agent said that Dr. Mead had stopped giving lectures at colleges several months ago due to prior commitments," Cole said. "But we talked big bucks with the guy and he finally came around with the April date."

Cole said the lecture is particularly fitting as a presentation of the Program Board in its first year of existence because "it typifies the kind of programming we have been trying to bring to UNCW all year."

"We believe that Dr. Mead is the kind of speaker that students here will really turn out for," Cole said. "A lot of students can identify with her in one way or another because, as we've found out with other programming efforts, most of the students here have a lot in common with Dr. Mead."

Assistant Director of Student Activities Jon Greene, adviser to the Program Board, applauded the board's decision to present Mead.

"This lecture fits into a concept of student programming that identifies a major commitment to an intelligent, systematic and thematic approach to an overall campus program schedule with aims to meet the varied yet common preferences by, if not a majority, at least most of the student body and the rest of the university community and looking toward a long-range plan of programming while not ignoring the importance of the individual events in and of themselves to establishing the viability of the Program Board as the most important provider of student entertainment on the university level in Southeastern North Carolina and the surrounding area," Greene said.

Asked if the Mead lecture signals a trend for programming in the future, Cole said "probably yes."

"I think anyone who wants to judge Program Board on its performance for the year as a whole can judge us on the choice of Dr. Mead," she explained. "We are as viable and vibrant as the programs we present for the students."

According to unidentified sources within the board, other personalities being considered for programs this year include actor Freddie Prinze, comedienne Totie Fields and singer Bing Crosby.

Program Board officials also revealed that the university will pay $4500 for the Mead lecture, plus freight and handling.

Sandy and Randy: Stretching for two.

Lady Hawks sign highly prized prospect

UNCW women's basketball coach Connie Door has announced the signing of an 11 ft., 3 in. pair of Siamese twins for the Lady Hawks next year. The twins are Sandy and Randy Bartholomew from Eagle's Nest, Nevada.

Coach Door said that addition of the Bartholomews to the Lady Hawks squad would add great height to the line-up.

"I'm very excited about this prospect," she said. "I expect we'll have the greatest season ever next year."

Door said that the fact that the twins are joined at the arms of Randy and the legs of Sandy would pose no problem for eligibility rules.

"The twins will be counted as one player and will be classified as a women for athletic purposes," the coach said.

"That's because in Randy and Sandy's case, the woman is on top."

Hot air yields delicious dessert

The Gruy Federal Company was commissioned last year by the Department of Energy to conduct a study to discover if there were traces of residual heat in the soil layers lying beneath the university property.

Instead of finding the "hot spot" they were looking for, they found a large deposit of sublime jello which officials of the company stated was "very unusual."

The "bore hole" which was drilled approximately 1000 feet into the earth struck jello between 400 and 600 feet down. A spokesman for Gruy Federal said that this was a disappointment to every one involved. But university officials did not agree.

Chancellor Wagoner released a statement praising the study and spoke of his hopes for the future of the campus as a result of this experiment.

"It's not boring to me, and now I'll be able to have my dessert any time I want."

Phil Welch, director of food services, said "This could prove to be a valuable natural resource and save a lot of money at the same time."

Professors Thayer and Zullo of the Earth Science Department said that this unusual discovery could make the university famous worldwide and that it could change the way science theorizes on how the earth was formed. We might even be able to start a graduate program in this area of study.

Chief Long from the campus police said that the only problem he could see rising from this situation is students abusing the well and tapping it illegally.

The moral of this story is that sometimes a little bit of hot air on campus can be delicious.

Thursday's activities will be highlighted by the official arrival of Queen Azalea at 10:35 a.m. at the Hilton Inn dock on Water Street. Pre-arrival entertainment at dockside will begin at 9:30 a.m.

A variety show featuring music, comedy and specialty acts will conclude Thursday's schedule at Legion Stadium on Carolina Beach Road. The program will be headlined by country music singer George Hamilton IV.

A fireworks display will conclude this program. Admission is free.

The Sidewalk Arts Celebration at the Cotton Exchange downtown will open Friday morning at 10 a.m. to run through the weekend. This event will feature entertainment as well as various arts and crafts displays.

The Sidewalk Arts Celebration will be officially opened by Queen Azalea at 12 noon on Friday and will remain open until 6 p.m. each day.

Entertainment at the Arts Celebration will include the Grandfather Mountain Cloggers (Friday, 1 and 2 p.m.); Carowinds Bird Show (continuous performances); the Coast Guard Academy Jazz Band (Friday, 11:30 a.m.); and area beauty queens.

(Tickets will also be on sale at the Trask box office approximately one hour before the concert.)

Friday morning also marks the beginning of the garden tours with a ribbon-cutting scheduled for 10:30 a.m. Tour tickets are available for $5 each and include 10 private home gardens which may be toured at leisure until 6 p.m.

Saturday's schedule features the most popular Azalea Festival event, Queen Azalea's Parade, which begins at 10:30 a.m. in downtown Wilmington. The parade will begin on North Front Street, follow Third Street to Market Street, turn right to the river, then right on Water Street.

Marching and military units, floats, clowns, horses and other entries will be on parade.

To avoid heavy traffic, the "Azalea Express" bus service will be provided to transport parade-goers to downtown from Long Leaf Mall. Non-stop buses will leave the mall regularly between 8 and 10:30 a.m., dropping passengers at Third and Orange Streets.

The buses will return to Long Leaf Mall at regular intervals between noon and 2 p.m. The one-way fare is 30 cents.

UNCW homecoming queen Benita Wilson will ride in the parade as a member of the queen's court.

Singer Debby Boone will be the featured performer at the Coronation Pageant at 8 p.m. Saturday in Trask Coliseum. Laurie Walters will be crowned Queen Azalea XXXII by Seventh District Congressman Charlie Rose.

DeLuca claims runoff bid, seeks reorganization

by Bobby Parker
Editor

Francis DeLuca defeated Jon Fail in the runoff election for SGA president last week by a more than two-to-one margin, 121 votes to 54.

DeLuca, who served as SGA vice-president last year, assumed office this week replacing Wayne Dunlap.

DeLuca had led the original election two weeks ago but was forced into the runoff because he failed to gather a clear majority.

In an interview Monday, DeLuca said he feels the greatest need of SGA in the coming year is a clearer definition of its role and its goals. He said he hopes the goals of SGA will lead to increased involvement by students in the organization next year.

DeLuca plans some reorganization of the Program Board to give the board more freedom in its operation. He does not plan to appoint individual committee chairs for the board but will leave that to the Program Board chair.

President DeLuca announced plans to appoint Steve Chiappisi as Program Board chair. Chiappisi has served on the board this past year and as chair of the Fine Arts Committee for two years.

DeLuca said he wants the Program Board as well as the Media and Publications Board to submit "lump sum" budgets to SGA this year to give the individual organizations within these boards more autonomy from SGA.

DeLuca also announced several other appointments including outgoing SGA Attorney General Glen Downs as elections chair.

Sharon Starnes will be appointed SGA treasurer and Linda Williams will be named SGA secretary.

Increased funding for black schools, should be UNC priority

The saga of disagreement between the University of North Carolina and the Department of Health, Education and Welfare continues this week while federal authorities are giving further consideration to a cutoff in aid to UNC because of an unacceptable desegregation plan. The dispute has brought to light many questions including those of state-federal authority, affirmative action, and program duplication, but perhaps the most important question remains unanswered: Are state officials ready to go along with the feds to finance the changes demanded?

Throughout this long debate, the emphasis has appeared to be on paper with both sides exchanging tit-for-tat on desegregation goals and policies. HEW has demanded overnight success and UNC has argued for more time in setting those goals and policies and making them work. The result is a tense atmosphere with both agencies on the defensive; HEW defends its responsibility to enforce federal desegregation laws, UNC defends its right to operate without unwarranted federal intervention.

The focus of the dispute has shifted several times during its course from minority enrollment to program duplication to equitable support for predominantly black schools. It appears that UNC is doing as much as other states to increase minority enrollment within reasonable levels that preserve a tradition of quality education, but state officials need to put more thought into this problem at the high school level to increase the pool of college-track minority students. Program duplication is a tricky issue because it implies that "separate but equal" is still a solid doctrine. Actually, for the most part, the program division has been separate but not equal. And although to end segregation perpetuated by program duplication would probably mean shifting some programs from white to black campuses, state officials appear to have convinced HEW that shifting any existing program would do more damage to the quality of that program than benefit the school to which it is shifted.

The main concern now appears to be funding for predominantly black campuses in the UNC system. These schools have suffered through years of past neglect and now the real tragedy of overcrowded buildings, lack of equipment and inadequate resources has been brought to light across the state and nation. While state officials have apparently recognized this problem—a significant increase in per-student expenditures has been recorded at these universities over the last several years—there must be a genuine commitment to upgrading these facilities backed by a willingness to appropriate money.

State government officials have cried out in response to HEW's demand for a $120 million commitment that North Carolina cannot afford to spend that much additional capital on the black campuses. At the same time, however, the General Assembly is funding a new veterinary medicine school at N.C. State, backing a relatively new medical school at East Carolina, and debating a proposal to increase aid to students in private colleges. Additionally, legislators are trying to determine how large a tax cut they can get away with this year for the voters back home.

It comes down to a matter of priorities, and certainly the upgrading of state-supported universities is a top priority. Unless these schools are given equitable financial support, no amount of affirmative action or federal pressure will ever put a real end to segregation within UNC.

The five predominantly black universities are, after all, as much a reflection on the state of North Carolina as the Chapel Hill, Raleigh or other campuses. Desegregation plans are fine as fuel for bureaucratic negotiation, but the real test comes when those plans result in actual improvements. The state still seems far from passing that test.

LETTERS

To the Editor:

I want to publically apologize to Francis DeLuca for an honest mistake made in a fact sheet that was distributed on Tuesday, March 27. The last item, about his attendance at a University of North Carolina Association of Student Governments Conference this spring, was in error. Francis DeLuca was there. I want to emphasize that this was an honest mistake, and not done with any malice.

The fact sheet was proofread by six people for any factual mistakes, and everyone overlooked the last item. I am sincerely sorry for the mistake, and place all the responsibility for the mistake upon myself.

Four elected to senate positions

In other SGA election runoffs last week, Jack Allen, Tom Hunt, Mark Davis and Floyd Thomas were elected to the student Legislature.

Hunt and Allen led voting in the senior class with 37 and 28, respectively. Other seniors receiving votes were Todd Fennel, 14, and Bobby Hinton and Dennis Ray, 8 each.

For sophomore senator, Thomas won with 12 votes, trailed by Mike Marshall, 10;

Vicki Landing, 8; Ricky Palmer, 7; Dawn Drum, 6; and Tom Preston, 2.

Other runoffs scheduled today include John Owens and Cathy Robinson for sophomore class president; Daniel Antonelli and Charles Parsons for sophomore vice-president; and Guy Pushee and Candy Lyndon for junior vice-president.

Runoffs today

There will be a runoff election for junior class vice-president and sophomore class president and vice-president. Voting will be held in the Cafeteria from 9:30 a.m.-1 p.m. and in the Pub from 1-4 p.m. ID's will be required to vote.

Starnes is a rising senior majoring in computer science and business management. Williams is a computer science-business administration major and a junior.

Neither Starnes nor Williams have been involved with SGA previously. Asked if this was by design, DeLuca said that there would be merit to "bring in people who have no connection" with SGA to get new people involved.

DeLuca said he may forego previously announced plans to name a presidential executive assistant because there is no compensation available for that officer. He said the assistant would serve to relieve the president of some duties and also be in the SGA office with regular hours.

DeLuca said he is concerned about moves by administration officials to change the image of UNCW. He said that officials often seem more concerned about research put out by university professors and less about teaching quality.

He said that the reputation of UNCW as an academically "easy" school stems from the "relaxed atmosphere" of the campus, not from the performance of UNCW graduates as compared to other graduates.

Challenging jobs available in public interest groups for graduates, vacationers

by Ralph Nader

Spring is the time when college students decide what to do after they graduate, or for the summer. A glance at the schedule of interviewers or the materials on display at the campus career placement office reveals that positions in large corporations and the government are well promoted, but other types of work opportunities are not.

There is presently a variety of challenging jobs in the public interest movement available to you. They receive little publicity because these organizations do not have the resources to recruit on campus. But whether you want an interesting summer internship, a year or two of experience, or a position which may develop into a career, you should consider what the public interest or "citizens' movement offers.

In the past decade, the number of grassroots citizens groups, statewide organizations, and national public interest groups has burgeoned. There are groups which work on health, tax, energy, environment, housing, food, communications, and many other issues, and groups which span all of these. There are groups in Washington and in nearly every state and major city of the union. What they share is a dedication to advance the rights of individuals as consumers, workers and citizens, and to make American institutions more equitable.

All of these organizations need staff: researchers, lobbyists, attorneys and writers. People with business and administrative skills are needed to manage these organizations and to fundraise. And individuals with an entrepreneurial flair are needed as more and more organizations offer services—food or housing cooperatives, home insulation or home energy audits, prepaid group legal services—in order to attract new members and raise money.

Especially needed are organizers—individuals who put together organizations, coalitions or projects which will involve other people in working for needed change. At the grassroots level, the organizer tries to unite a constituency—whether students, tenants, consumers or workers—and motivate them to take action on a common problem. And at a state or national level, the organizer tries to form new organizations or new campaigns which will work for political or economic reforms.

This work provides more creativity, challenge, responsibility and room for initiative than you'll find in most government or corporate positions available to you. The pay is probably less and the hours longer than those government or corporate jobs; but there are other rewards. In addition to valuable training and experience, you have the opportunity to work for a cause you believe in—whether it is consumer rights, economic justice, environmental protection, or social equality.

What is required for these positions? In addition to specific skills, persistence, commitment, and a willingness to work hard are essential. The organizations can provide the training you'll need.

For those interested in these opportunities, here is a brief list of resources and organizations.

Washington D.C. Groups.

Our organization, Public Citizen, has occasional openings for researchers, organizers, writers, and interns to work on health, tax, energy, and consumer issues. (Contact Florence Dembling, P.O. Box 19404, Washington, D.C. 20036) Other groups include: Consumer Federation of America, Environmental Action Foundation, Center for Science in the Public Interest, National Organization for Women—the list is long. Contact the Commission for the Advancement of Public Interest Organizations for information on different organizations (1875 Connecticut Ave., N.W. Washington, D.C.

Resources. The Community Jobs Clearinghouse (149 9th St., San Francisco, Ca. 94103) publishes a monthly newsletter which describes current employment in community and public interest groups around the country. It is the best, up-to-date publication of this kind. A book entitled Public Policies for the 80's also lists over 800 citizen organizations, labor unions and public interest groups in Washington and around the country. It also has very informative current bibliographies on 25 public policy topics including tax reform, energy, community development, cooperatives, aging and farming. (Available for $10 from Institute for Policy Studies, 1901 Q St. N.W., Washington, D.C. 20009).

Public Interest Research groups. Many of the campus-based PIRGs have staff openings. Contact National PIRG at 1329 E. St. #1127, Washington, D.C. 20004 or contact individual PIRGs.

Statewide Citizen Action Organizations. These frequently need organizers, fundraisers and researchers. Some of the largest are listed, with the location of their main office: ACORN, the Association of Community Organizations FOR Reform Now, has organization in several states in the South and Midwest; contact their New Orleans central office; Carolina Action (in Durham); Ohio Public Interest Campaign (Cleveland); Illinois Public Action Council (Chicago); Massachusetts Fair Share (Boston); Oregon Fair Share (Portland); Campaign for Economic Democracy (Los Angeles); Citizens Action League (San Francisco); and Connecticut Citizen Action Group (Hartford). These are only a few—contact the Community Jobs Clearinghouse for names and addresses of others.

Midwest Academy (Chicago), The Institute (affiliated with ACORN, in New Orleans), New England Training Center for Community Organizers (NETCCO, in Providence), the National Training and Information Center (Chicago) and the Organize Training Center (San Francisco) are the major centers which offer training programs for organizers, researchers and fundraisers and can often help individuals find jobs.

Finding work that permits you both to apply your skills and bring your conscience to your job is one definition of happiness.

Crouch to appear April 11

Andrae Crouch

Holy Trinity United Holy Church, Inc., and United Christian Campus Ministry will sponsor a concert by Andrae Crouch and the Disciples at 8 p.m. Wednesday, April 11 in Trask Coliseum. All tickets are $6 and available at the UNCW bookstore, Logos Bookstore, Cox Christian Bookstore and Les Lettres, as well as at the door.

Andrae Crouch is a gospel singer who knows his roots, and sings thereof, including the whole spectrum of the black gospel experience: the Holiness churches, Thomas A. Dorsey, Mahalia Jackson . . . But Crouch takes it one positive step further.

About his music, he says: "I believe the lyric of a song and the actual feel of the music are two different things. For example, by taking the infectious beat of Motown, the well-produced, innovative Philadelphia Sound, and the simplicity of Nashville or Muscle Shoals, and attaching it to the Lord's message, a lot of people are going to listen."

Andrae Crouch and his group, the Disciples, are a "road group," a traveling band. They tour continually, mainly one-nighters, both in the U.S. and around the world. Crouch has filled Carnegie Hall, Madison Square Garden, and even Nashville's country-music shrine, the Grand Ole Opry. He has brought the fizz and power of his gospel to Mississippi storefront churches, European cathedrals and prestigious halls in Europe.

His audiences are among the most varied for any gospel group. He has played before presidents and makes a special point of including prison concerts in his hectic itinerary.

Crouch, who lives in Woodland Hills, California, is a genuine son of a preacher man. His father, Benjamin, was a "bootleggin'" street preacher" spreading his gospel from the sidewalk level to anyone who would listen. Eventually, he organized a congregation in Los Angeles which is where the (very) young Andrae got his first taste for the music.

Not quite in his teens, Crouch began playing regularly in his father's church. He also began writing gospel songs—then for the youth choir in the church. He has since had his gospel material performed and recorded by Elvis Presley, the Imperials and the Jesse Dixon Singers.

But Crouch, while listening to Mahalia Jackson and all the other great traditional gospel singers and groups, also had his ears open to the Temptations, the Four Tops, Stevie Wonder, and Earth Wind and Fire.

It began to show in his music as he moved away from the roots of standard gospel fare and turned into a unique fusion of rhythm 'n' blues, country, jazz and Latin rock.

Admits Crouch, "I wanted these influences to infect me. I found out early that there were certain codes in the music that I was expected to follow. Dress codes even . . . and where not to play the music."

"I have one question when I write a new song: 'Does it reach you?' I feel the feedback from an audience if the song is working. I know what is real—that's what I get being raised in the church, before those congregations.

Seahawks nip E.C.U. pirates

The UNCW baseball team, despite playing some of their best baseball of the year, had a 4-3 record for the week. The Seahawks started out good, winning 2-1 over East Carolina University Roger Sutton, the senior workhorse for the Hawks. Scott the distance against the Pirates. The win supplanted his record to 3-5. The ECU game was the first night game of the year for the Seahawks and the stands were full of spectators as the two rivals went at it.

On Saturday, the Hawks traveled to Chapel Hill to play the UNC Tar Heels. UNC-CH came away a winner, 6-3, despite four hits by third baseman Herbie Dawkins. David Pope was the loser for UNCW and his record now stands at 3-2.

The Seahawks came back home to face yet another Atlantic Coast Conference power, N.C. State. What followed was a 12-inning marathon in which State managed a 4-3 victory. (It was the second extra-inning game against State this year, State winning 4-2 in 10 innings at Raleigh.)

UNCW broke on top 3-0 in the second inning with five hits and a sacrifice fly. State battled back, tying the game in the eighth. UNCW had the bases loaded in the tenth inning but could not score.

State finally ended it by pushing a run across in the twelfth.

"State did what they had to do today," said Seahawk Assistant Bobby Guthrie. They stopped us from scoring when we had to be stopped."

"We've been playing pretty good ball lately, but haven't been getting a break," Guthrie also commented.

The Seahawks are still smarting from injuries. Pitchers Mike Williams and Danny Houston are just getting back from arm problems and catcher John Gouley split a finger nail at Baptist. He is still in the lineup and hitting well, but is in some pain.

TIME OUT

by Roger Knight

Ever since the movie Jaws, I have, in the back of my mind, held a fear and respect for sharks. But I thought that the only place I would ever see a shark would be in the movies. But Sunday I heard that a medium-sized hammer head shark washed up on the beach near the campus. So I began to wonder what the chances of a shark attack are in this area. According to H. David Baldrige's book Shark Attack there have been only two documented attacks off the coast of North Carolina. However, there have been twenty-three recorded attacks off South Carolina. Also, the largest tiger shark that has ever been caught was captured off Cherry Grove, South Carolina. (Cherry Grove is just north of Myrtle Beach.) This doesn't seem to be a great danger, but you never know. The types of sharks that have been known to hang out in the area are: Tigers, Hammerheads, sandsharks, bull sharks, and blacktip sharks. Of course makos blues and whites go about anywhere but none have really been definitely singled out in this area. North and South Carolina seem pretty safe compared to Florida, which has a combined total of 105 attacks recorded. Of course, Florida has much more ocean. Most sailing, scuba diving, swimming and other summer activities are pretty safe, sharkwise, as long as the participants use common sense. Never go swimming with hamburger; never swim near an area where someone has just been bitten by a shark; and never ever play chicken with sharks.

The UNCW baseball game against ECU on Thursday night was a rousing success. The stands were crowded for the first night game of the season even though they were competing against the Charlie Daniels concert and Boom Boom's. Let's hope that all the night games have as many fans. The Hawks appreciate support (they won an exciting 2-1 contest that night).

Crew team is working to be the best

Few members of the UNCW community are aware of the many hours spent by the UNCW crew in an effort to become the fastest crew in S.C.

In February, when most students were shivering from the cold, members of the crew braved the hard weather conditions to practice their sport. Crew involves both strength and endurance training. After running and lifting weights the crew is ready for practice, which involves about 2 hours on the water several days a week. Guiding the efforts of the team is Coach Gene Jeffords, who was a member of Florida Institute of Technology's team for 4 years.

The team was worked hard to prepare for the Azalea Festival Regatta, to be held Saturday, April 7, where they will match blades with Duke, Chapel Hill, Univ. of Tennessee, Univ. of Alabama, Morris Harvey, and the Citadel. The Regatta will be held at Lane's Ferry on Highway 210. Heats are scheduled to begin between 9 and 10 a.m.

Members of this year's crew include Paul Weaver, Mike Galliger, Jeff Faulkner, Billy Bridges, Dan Scroggs, Rob Buck, Guy Pushee, John Kelly, and Dawn DePencier.

All persons interested in joining next year's crew should watch for signs announcing a meeting before the end of this semester.

Women's softball team places third

The women's softball team took third place in the Catawba College Invitational Tournament held this past weekend. The team won three games and lost two in the tournament, moving their record up to 10-3.

In the opening round of the eight-team tournament, the Seahawks defeated Methodist College 8-2. Their next opponent was Pembroke State University, the eventual tournament winner, who beat the Hawks 6-5.

In their next two contests the team downed Catawba 3-2 in a nine inning game and Guilford College 4-1. The Hawks were then eliminated from the tournament by UNC-Charlotte who defeated them 7-4.

In the Charlotte game the Hawks led 4-3 in the last inning with two outs and the bases loaded when a UNCC player hit a grand slam that eventually won the game for the opponents.

Coach Ann Kraft had this to say about the team's performance. "I was disappointed with team's overall play in the tournament. I think we could have won the tournament if we had played up to our capabilities. We had been averaging scores up in the teens in games prior to the tournament, but we just didn't hit well. We also made too many errors defensively."

One bright spot in the tournament performance, pointed out by Kraft, was the play of Susan Spivey, who had to fill in at the shortstop position for injured Darlene Treadway.

J.V.'s demolish high school teams

The UNCW J.V. baseball team won two games this week, upping their record to 5-3. They defeated North Brunswick high school on Wednesday, 11-0. Pitchers Steve Harris and Mark Hardeman combined for the shut-out. Both turned in fine performances and Harris got Spivey, who usually starts in left field, did a super job defensively for the Hawks, according to Kraft.

In games prior to the tournament the Seahawks swept doubleheaders from Meredith College 12-2 and 16-6, and St. Augustine College 15-4 and 12-6.

The Hawks play a doubleheader at home tomorrow against St. Andrews College starting at 3:30 p.m. On Friday the team travels to Fayetteville to face Methodist College and UNCC.

Mike Cross will return to Kenan Auditorium Thursday, April 19, at 8 p.m.

Tickets will be on sale at the Pony Express, Fair Exchange, School Kids' Records and both Record World locations. All seats are reserved and tickets are $5 each.

The show is being presented by WHSL radio and Gillham's Guitar Works.

In the last few years, Mike Cross has become something of a legend—one of those little backwoods tales that turns into real life.

There was a time when only a handful of people in Chapel Hill, N.C., showed up faithfully whenever Cross played a local club. Now, folks across the South and Midwest stand in line to crowd into small clubs and concert halls to see this fiddling storyteller they've heard so much about.

And as with any legend, the hearing comes from friends with records they got from other friends, not through the usual media channels, who are themselves just becoming aware of Cross' special brand of homespun humor, high energy performance and his just plain old good time type of evening.

Everything about Cross and his music is one cut above fantasy—his show, his music, his beginning as a musician.

"Well the gist of it is, I got sick in a snowstorm during my junior year in college and ended up spending the night in this guy's dormitory room, is the story as Cross tells it. "It turned out his roommate played the guitar."

That roommate spent the next two days teaching Cross his first chords and songs.

Now, nearly ten years later, he still plays guitar—and fiddle as well—traveling from place to place across the country delighting audiences with 12-string bottleneck blues, Irish jigs and reels and old time mountain fiddle tunes plus a wealth of his own backwoods humor characteristic of Will Rogers and Mark Twain.

That Cross originates songs and stories in this tradition is the only logical part of the entire saga. He grew up in western North Carolina—"back in the Appalachian mountains" as he puts it—a region well known for storytellers and songwriters. But here the logic ends.

"The ironic thing about it is, though I grew up around a bunch of goo musicians, my great addiction in life was golf."

"I was a hardcore golfer from the time I was about ten years old until I went off to college. I was gonna go to college and play golf on a scholarship. But I fell in love with this little girl, thought I'd go off to college and study to be a doctor; do something solid and secure so she'd marry me."

"We broke up when I was a freshman. I'd given up my golf scholarship, given up my golf clubs actually, so I had to find something to replace the. I think that's why I took up the guitar. I needed a new passion in life."

Many miles have passed in the intervening years; countless small bars and clubs, marriage and a family, two years of law school, taking up the fiddle, two albums and a third in the works. And, increasingly, as word spreads, nights in the clubs are given way to nights on the stage (small concert halls around the country).

Through it all, Cross remains philosophical.

"I've been incredibly fortunate to make a living at playing music, because there's no logical reason why I should be able to do it."

"Starting out learning so late, not having any idea of how to perform for an audience, having a tin ear and a scratchy old voice that behaves half the time. Sometimes I come home at night, and I'll lie back in bed and think, 'I just can't believe all those people came out and paid money to see me storm around on stage for a couple of hours.'"

But for Cross, two factors stand out in his humble but growing success—he is a good songwriter and he knows how to entertain an audience.

"I never thought of myself as a storyteller, but that's the reason, I think, that people come to see me perform. The thing I most enjoy about performing now is acting things out, talking to people telling stories."

"The musicianship, as hard as I work at it, is still second to something else—presentation, I guess."

Rapport with an audience means more to Cross than technical proficiency. "I want people to leave a show of mine saying, 'Boy, I had a good time.'"

For Mike Cross, the future is more writing and recording, many more miles of highway and new people and places to come in contact with.

And as fantasy becomes real-

Mike Cross

ity, a would-have-been golfer/lawyer continues to entertain and delight. Fiddling and joking, the legend becomes less elusive.

Lack of publicity cancels Backgammon tournament

by Anita Bohannon

Staff Writer

Due to the lack of publicity, the first UNCW Backgammon Tournament will not be held as scheduled. However, there will be some backgammon played this weekend.

Now, you may be wondering—hey, what tournament? Well, the tournament was to be held Saturday afternoon, April 7, from noon to 6 p.m. on Brooks Field.

Thad Shermer, chairman of the tourney committee, was disappointed at the "lack of responsibility" on the part of many campus individuals who were responsible for promotions.

"We (the committee) are very upset that those people let us down. But we don't care about them now. We're gonna play and party all day!"

The word was spread in the dorms before it was announced campus-wide, in hope of sanctioning the tournament with dorm residents only.

"The idea came about a few months ago to unite dorm students with common interests—backgammon and partying," said Shermer, "but that was abandoned in the attempt to bring together all interested persons."

Plans now are to hold a day of competition for all comers (students, faculty and staff) with any experience in the game.

"This won't function as an official tournament, but we hope to get a lot of people together and play," said Shermer. "We just want everybody to come out, BYOB (board, blanket, beverages, etc.), and have some fun in the sun Saturday."

Plan to play backgammon Saturday beginning at 1 p.m. Even if you don't play, come out and join the crowd near the soccer area.

Nicolette Larson:

She's good, but she'll get better

With support from Linda Ronstadt and Neil Young on her debut album, Nicolette, Nicolette Larson still has a way to go before she will rank with noted singers as the above.

One of Nicolette's strong points which led to the making of her own album was her great harmony with Neil Young of his albums, "American Stars and Bars," and his latest disc, "Comes A Time," where Nicolette contains a variety of music from pop to country to rock.

The first single release from the album rocketed up the charts. The Neil Young tune "Lotta Love" is definitely Young's easy listening style and one of the few good songs on the disc.

The other songs that stand out on the LP include the bluegrass tune "Angels Rejoiced" and the only other cut which might make it off the LP, the easy listening "French Waltz" which is spiced with a French chorus. One other song which impressed me off the album is the late great Sam Cooke tune "You Send Me" which Larson does fairly well. Beginning as a L.A. session star, she gets a little help from her already famous friends who she helped in sessions. Some of her friends include Valerie Carter, Linda Ronstadt and Mike McDonald, who is the lead vocalist for the Doobie Brothers.

Though Nicolette still needs lots of work she has some good qualities which should improve as her career progresses.

Welchel places first in Jessie Rheder contest

by Cheri Simmons
Seahawk Contributor

Robert Welch is this year's first-place winner of the Jessie Rheder Short Story Contest. His winning story, entitled "The Touch," won $100.

"Hydrangea Hats and Baby Songs," written by Sherry Niven, won second place. Ellen Honeycutt's "Pieta" won third place and honorable mention was given to Helen M. Piner for her story, "A Turn of Affairs."

The awards ceremony, which was held March 22 in the SRO Theater, was hosted by Richard D. Long. Long, who is editor-in-chief of "Atlantis" and the English Club president, is a senior English major.

The contest judges were Dr. Joanne K. Corbett, professor of English; Ron Johnson, acquisitions librarian; and Donna Lanier, traffic manager at WECT-TV.

After Henry Rehder Jr. presented the awards, Doug Swink read the first-place story. Swink is a member of the UNCW Creative Arts Department faculty.

Welchel, a senior, English major, plans to attend graduate school and perhaps teach at the college level. At the moment, Welchel is interested in writing plays. He hopes to someday write a novel.

The Jessie Rheder Short Story Contest is held annually and funded by the UNCW Jessie Rehder Memorial Fund.

Student has poem published in national magazine

Earl Braggs, a junior majoring in philosophy and religion, recently had a poem published in the National College Poetry Review. Braggs competed with thousands of college students throughout the nation.

Braggs says he feels fortunate to have his poem which is entitled "Papa," published by a nationwide magazine. Braggs is a member of the Student Court and is also a member of the Omegas Psi Phi Fraternity.

Senate allocates $1000 for party

The Student Legislature met last Thursday in its last meeting of the semester off the outgoing senators and executive officers. SGA President Wayne Dunlap, in his president's report, elaborated on a report on the Office of Student Activities and on the effect HEW will have on this university should funds be cut back.

Dunlap said that UNCW would be hit hardest in such areas as research grants and in the operation of the Institute of Marine Biomedical Research on Wrightsville Beach.

An extension was given to the Board of Elections for runoffs for the sophomore class officers. The runoff will be held Wednesday, April 4.

A motion from Scott Bragg to allocate $1000 for a party for students to be held later this month was passed.

The Forensics team was allotted $200 for evidence carriers. The next Legislature meeting will be Thursday at 7 p.m. in C218.

Mike Williams to perform Monday night

Mike Williams

An evening with your favorite date, wine, cheese and lots of good music can be yours this coming Monday night. On April 9, the Program Board will present Mike Williams in concert at 8 p.m. in the Pub, by reservation only.

Williams has spent eight years on the road as a full-time entertainer, another seven before that as a full-time adventurer. 15 years as a freak, another 20 as a redneck and he's still a kid. He has released two albums. "The Radio Show," a live concert-in-studio with musician friends sitting in, with lots of whooping laughing and story-telling.

The LP includes "Dumb-Ass," "Texiz," and "The Donut Man." Just released (1978), "Free Man, Happy Man" is a polished studio concoction with full bands and harmonies and irrepressible spirit.

In his concert tour Williams has opened for Jimmy Buffet, Arlo Guthrie, Nitty Gritty Dirt Band, and Pure Prairie League, just to mention a few.

Williams' music has a country flavor to it. The pace of the show is down home, and folks have a tendency to sing or shout along with him.

For reservations, call 791-4330, ext. 2285.

The jello-syndrome

Ah, the sweet life! I don't want to admit I'm a sugar addict, but if they ever take Butterfingers off the market, yours truly will break out in hives. And guess what: I'm not by myself in this one! Look around. We are not alone; all around us people are chomping and munching their way to Hershey Bar Heaven. After all, temptation is everywhere! Cookies call us, bonbons beckon, ice cream eyes us temptingly from the freezer. Sugar surrounds us! I predict a new item will hit the shelves any day now: Presweetened Lemon Juice!

If the sugar habit's got you down, don't despair. You can always blame it on society. Remember your first tetanus shot? Wasn't it a friendly nurse who shoved that lollipop in your howling mouth? You didn't ask for it but you got it anyway (along with a headstart on tooth decay). And how about when Mom and Pop gorged you with goodies on every occasion? You know, birthdays, Easter, Christmas, the works. Me, I never had a sweet tooth till I discovered that cupcakes made better stocking stuffers than carrots. Just think of how sugar-oriented our society is! A nice person is sweet as sugar, a simple task is easy as pie or a piece of cake, tan skin is the color of honey, and anything extra is just icing on the cake. A sluggish person is slower than molasses, a loved one becomes a sweetie-pie or honeybunch, and bad news is often sugar-coated. Even that dirty old pervert in the alley hisses, "Hey, kid, wanna piece of candy?" Those of you who wish to break free from the bonds of sugar slavery, unite! Contact me up in the Seahawk office, anytime. And oh, bring some raisins (nature's candy--that makes it legal!) in case one of us suffers a white sugar wipe-out.

Okay, sweetheart?

Stringfellow featured in this week's symposium

Dr. William Stringfellow will be featured this week in the Christian Faith and Vocation symposium being sponsored by United Christian Campus Ministry and the Church of The Servant.

Stringfellow will speak on "Christianity and Law" Sunday, April 8, at the Church of The Servant, 4925 Oriole Drive.

William Stringfellow is now at work on a new book entitled Grave Not the Holy Spirit, the biblical relationship of the demonic and the charismatic. It completes a trilogy of which the other volumes are the much acclaimed An Ethic for Christians and Other Aliens in a Strange Land, a treatment of the Book of Revelation in discerning the demonic in a nation's destiny, and the recently published Conscience and Obedience, the politics of Romans 13 and Revelation 13 in light of the second coming, which was critically received as a work of "extraordinary creativity in ethics and eschatology."

Stringfellow was a pioneer as a lawyer in East Harlem and as an advocate for the dispossessed more than a decade before the so-called war on poverty. That distinguished effort was interrupted when he became profoundly ill in 1967 and his prolonged and poignant struggle against pain and the imminence of death is related in the book A Second Birthday, which has been called "the work of America's C. S. Lewis."

Since the crisis of that illness, Stringfellow has lived on Block Island, off the coast of Rhode Island. It was there that the authorities seized Daniel Berrigan in 1970 and where, with the poet Anthony Towne, the biography, The Death and Life of Bishop Pike, was written. In 1976, Stringfellow was elected second warden of Block Island, an office so named since the 17th century when the wardens of the church were also the magistrates of the town.

Because of his virtually unique experience as an ecclesiastical lawyer, Stringfellow is a prime mover in the organization of the Canon Law Society for the Episcopal Church. He has served as the only layperson on the Faith and Order Commission of the World Council of Churches. He is a recipient of the "Mind of Christ" award of the Lutheran Human Relations Association of America. He is a director of the Council on Religion and Law.

the Harvard Law School, the London School of Economics and Bates College and, additionally, holds several honorary degrees. His military service won him three commendations.

He regularly contributes to "Sojourners," "The Witness" and "Christianity & Crisis" as an editor, as well as other theological and legal journals and has made frequent television appearances including the Today, Mike Douglas and Phil Donohue shows.

A visiting lecturer at leading universities, law schools and seminaries, Stringfellow has travelled in 72 nations and has addressed such diverse forums as the Bicentennial Observance of the First Continental Congress, the American Association of Law Schools, the National Conference on Social Work, and the National Council of Churches. He is a member of the Governor's Justice Commission in Rhode Island, the Circus Historical Society, and the Committee for Justice in the Episcopal Church.

Artwork sought for 'Marker'

Original student artwork is being sought for the second Channel Marker. UNCW's calendar-handbook. The publication combines an activity calendar with official handbook information which was formerly disseminated separately. Due to be published this summer, the Channel Marker will again be distributed free at the beginning of fall semester to students, faculty and staff.

Artwork should be pen and ink, with as much contrast as possible. Twelve 5" w x 3 1/2" h spaces—one per month—are available, although the work does not have to be "seasonal." Criteria for acceptance are the work's originality, appropriateness for this project, its appeal to familiar objects, events, etc., on campus and in the area, and its chances of reproducing clearly. (Correct size, neatness, clarity, and contrast are all needed.)

Entries must be submitted to the Student Activities Office in the Pub by noon on Friday, April 27. Include name, phone number, major, and year you expect to graduate on a separate sheet of paper attached to the artwork. Entries cannot be returned and become the property of the Student Activities Office.

Addition of 40 faculty parking spaces according to vehicle registration, official says

by Bobby Parker
Editor

Approximately 40 parking spaces reserved for faculty and staff were added to several lots in recent weeks as an adjustment to the number of faculty vehicles registered on campus, according to James K. Clark, director of auxiliary services.

And, Clark says, although there may appear to be a lack of adequate parking facilities on campus, the parking problems here are nowhere near those on other college campuses.

According to Clark, the total number of registered vehicles on campus now is 3098, with 2608 student vehicles and 490 faculty and staff.

The totals for spaces available, after the recent changes, are 2181 student spaces and 402 for faculty.

Clark said the number of spaces allotted in each category is proportioned to the registration figures. Ideally, he said the breakdown of the 2583 total spaces would be 2170 for students and 413 for faculty.

But factors other than the mere numbers are considered

Clark adds.

"Some of these things get to be a judgement," he said.

Clark said that the most common complaint about parking is not the lack of spaces but the location of spaces available. He said the university does not consider location complaints valid as long as there are spaces available.

The recently added faculty spaces were made in lot H, near the marine science building; lot M, next to the new classroom building; lot G, near Bear Hall; and lots B and F.

Chancellors' row

Alderman renovations may create closed atmosphere, some officials believe

by Bobby Parker
Editor

Renovations currently being completed on the first floor of Alderman Administration Building will bring a new atmosphere to that facility--and some staff members working there are not sure they will like it.

Alterations have been ongoing in Alderman for several months now, including major rearrangements of offices and repairs to the air conditioning system.

The renovations being completed now will close off the east and west wings of the building with glass doors, creating a lobby area at the main entrance.

According to Vice-chancellor for Business Affairs Jerry Hunter, the doors were built in to "create a lobby atmosphere for visitors and guests" in the central corridor.

Some Alderman staff members, however, feel that the creation of corridors closes off their offices and destroys the "open" atmosphere that now exists there.

Hunter said the changes would not necessarily make each office more private, but would be more "convenient" for visitors.

He also said that there is a significant noise problem for administration officials, and this would be softened when the building is carpeted throughout.

At least one staff member dissatisfied with the changes is worried that students may feel unwelcome in administration offices once the doors are in place and the carpet put in.

The staff member said that students may be reluctant to enter a closed corridor.

The staff member was also concerned about the working atmosphere among administrators accustomed to the present, more open set-up.

The west corridor will include offices for the chancellor, three vice-chancellors and the academic dean, creating what one observer termed a "chancellor's row."

This means that the door to Chancellor William Wagoner's office will be moved from the no plans to replace them.

The newest destruction fad is throwing beer bottles out of the windows onto the air conditioning unit, according to King. There is no estimate on the cost since the units have not been turned on yet.

Dean of Students Helena Cheek says that the vandals are caught very infrequently. However, when they are caught, disciplinary action is usually taken, and the student must pay for the damages.

Unidentified damage makes all dorm residents suffer. The repair money is taken out of the Residents Action Team budget. This money is usually used for dorm parties, luxuries such as TV's, pool tables and games for all residents, and to fund the annual Dorm Day.

Dorm Day is a weekday set aside for dorm residents to play games, cookout, drink beer, cut classes, and generally have a good time. This year, it could not be held due to the large amounts of money needed for repairs to vandalism damages.

Both King and Cheek are hoping to be able to secure a position for an area coordinator for the coming fall, who would be a professionally trained person hired to manage the dorms.

The area coordinator would live in Galloway Hall, but have overall responsibility for all four dorms. Charlie King was an area coordinator in the past, but when he was pro-

Increasing vandalism at dormitories runs into thousands of dollars

by Elizabeth Shoaf
Features Editor

Most non-campus UNCW students probably do not realize that destruction and vandalism in the dormitories is a very serious matter. Charlie King, Housing Director, estimates the damage between $5000 and $10,000 to redo Galloway Hall this summer.

There has been very little damage in Belk Hall and the new dorm, King says. Practically all the vandalism has been centered in the mostly freshman residence of Galloway Hall, specifically the third and fourth floors.

This year, there has been more vandalism than ever before. Approximately $2000 has been spent to fix elevators that have been tampered with.

Close to $1000 will be paid to fix ceiling tiles that have been torn out. Another serious problem is broken and torn furniture, especially in the lobbies.

The letters spelling out Galloway Hall on the front of the building, the fire alarm horn on the third floor, toilet paper hangers, and bathroom stall doors have all been stolen. Marble bathroom stall petitions have been broken, and nail holes have been punched in the cinder block walls of the lobbies.

Metal grids on the ceiling tiles have been pulled out, and one pool table and one foosball table have been completely destroyed. These are now out of commission and there are

Students take initiative on fee changes, dispelling distrust

Despite all the confusion created with the introduction of a new student fee allocation structure by administration officials several weeks ago, there appears to be an improved method coming out of the debate between SGA and administration. And it is rather reassuring to note that most of the inspiration and instigation for the new method is coming from the student side of the argument.

The administration shocked student leaders when they abruptly presented a plan to strip SGA of its allocation powers and put the funds under a new fee board. Students were given no advance notice of the proposal, but fortunately the reaction was so convincing that administration officials decided to put the plan on hold.

This gave student leaders enough time to re-examine their own system and devise improvements. The major changes concerned student programming and campus media and publications, SGA officials finally recognized the need to give greater autonomy to the Program Board and Media and Publications Board and to get the Student Legislature out of so much of the business of money.

SGA officials have moved on to reorganize its Finance Committee to include administration input, to establish a new constitution for the Program Board, and to encourage the Media and Publications Board to establish some form of budgetary unity. These moves are all positive ones which will insure that the interests of the university community--students in particular--are being served with student fee money.

We cannot be at all pleased with the administration's handling of the situation. The proposal was poorly planned and ill-timed, and officials were unable to support the plan in the face of opposition by students.

What's more, the proposal has been hanging in the air since it was first presented, with officials unwilling to decide whether they want to push it or not.

One conclusion of the situation could be that had SGA officials not been forced into revising their system, the reforms would have never come about. But it is both fruitless and useless to debate that proposition now.

The important thing is that the needed changes are now in sight. The reassuring thing is that students have handled the situation in an intelligent and mature manner and have come up with a workable solution.

But the sad thing is that some administrators apparently did not trust students enough from the beginning to include them in the process of planning the funding changes. Perhaps now student leaders have proven themselves and the administration will not be as distrustful the next time around.

Parking

between Alderman and Kenan Halls.

Clark said the theory behind reserved spaces for faculty and staff is that these drivers usually park at one building, whereas students usually circulate throughout campus during the day.

He said the university is not considering eliminating the designations, as done at N.C. State University last year.

He said also that students will continue to be cited for parking violations if parked in a faculty space while faculty would still be allowed to crossover into student spaces.

Complaints about these parking policies "would have validity if we were short on parking," Clark added.

Although parking spaced figures show an adherence to student-faculty vehicle registration ratios, more than 875 of the student spaces are located in the dormitory lots, along Reigle Road or in the lot across from Trask Coliseum (the "South 40").

Less than 25 faculty spaces are located in these same lots, which are the furthest from any academic building on campus.

Clark said the university is now in a "holding pattern" on parking and no new lots are planned for the near future. He said that officials will probably want to assess the impact of energy problems on campus traffic before making any such plans.

There will, however, be restoration of parking spaces at Galloway Hall, which have been blocked by construction vehicles, after the opening of the new dormitory.

Parking needs are assessed through surveys each semester, using the heavy saturation periods of Monday, Wednesday and Friday between 9 a.m. and noon.

moted to housing director the position was never filled.

The student chief residents and R.A.'s have done as good a job as possible, comments Cheek. "However, they are not trained, and cannot possibly be in the dorm all the time," she adds.

Galloway Hall is going to have to be redone for the fall. The huge amount estimated will be coming from the funds usually used for the entertainment of dorm residents. King adds that no one ever sees or hears anything, but all the residents suffer for the damages done by a few.

Forensics team claims championship of the two Carolinas

by Tom Lamont
Seahawk Contributor

The UNCW forensics team has recently won the Carolina's Forensic Association championship, giving them claim to being the best team in both North and South Carolina.

Ten schools from both states took part in the competition, hosted by Wingate College. Second place went to Wake Forest University and third place was taken by Appalachian State University.

Individual results from the state tournament include Dierdre Brewster, sixth place in oral interpretation of poetry; Scott Burton, second place debate speaker in tournament; Wayne Dunlap, first place in extemporaneous speaking and fourth place in persuasive speaking; Dan Goforth, third place debate speaker; Billy Sanders, sixth place in extemporaneous; Charlie Suppler, first place in poetry and sixth place in oral interpretation of prose; and John Wood, first place in dramatic interpretation.

Also, Burton and Goforth teamed up for a second place finish in debate, while Suppler and Wood took third place in dramatic duo.

This year, the team has travelled over 12,000 miles attending tournaments at Auburn University, Wake Forest, UNC-CH, Appalachian State, Toledo University, Bowling Green University in Ohio, Lenoir-Rhyne College and Old Dominion University in Virginia, as well as the state tournament.

Results from these other tournaments include Marjorie Lamb and Ray Blackburn, quarter-finalists in debate at Old Dominion; Goforth and McLamb, quarter-finalists in debate at Lenoir-Rhyne; Goforth and Burton, quarter-finalists in debate at Auburn; and Sanders, sixth place in sales at Toledo.

Elizabeth Noel, and Lisa Polichowski.

According to the team's coaches Bob and Rita Rosenthal, forensics derives its name from the type of speaking the ancient Greeks performed in courtrooms. Bob added, "Essentially, then, it always has been the name for competitive speaking. In recent years, it has come to include both traditional debate and individual speaking events."

This year's national debate resolution is: "Resolved: That the United States government should establish a program of guaranteed employment for all U.S. citizens." Competition in individual speaking events includes persuasive, extemporaneous and impromptu speaking and oral interpretation of poetry and prose. It also involves informative and after-dinner speaking, as well as dramatic duo, dramatic interpretation, and rhetorical criticism.

The forensic team is open to all full-time undergraduate students at UNCW. For those interested, see Bob Rosenthal at the forensic office in Kenan 122-E, for more information.

Trip to China offered by UNC-Greensboro

by Kim Evans
Seahawk Contributor

A once in a lifetime chance is now being made available to UNCW students—a 17-day tour of the People's Republic of China, a country whose doors have been closed to outsiders for 30 years.

Linda Moore, director of Student Activities, received a letter this week from Chuck Forrester of UNC-Greensboro, offering this trip to college students.

In 1974, Forrester, along with Dr. Gerald Unks of UNC-G, conducted a tour of the Soviet Union. These tours are organized to provide an educational and cultural experience for UNC students.

Arrangements have been under way since 1975, when Forrester applied for visas for a group of 200.

It is not until this year that Luxingshe, China International Travel Service, has confirmed the visit. Fifty seats are being held for students who wish to attend.

The cost for the tour is $2245 which includes: air fare from Charlotte to Hong Kong and return, all transportation while in China, hotel accommodations, three meals per day, all sightseeing, including excursion costs and entrance fees.

Orientation programs will be presented in convenient locations throughout N.C. to prepare those planning to make the trip. A book is even being written especially for this tour.

The group will depart from Charlotte on December 12 and return on December 28. A deposit of $250 is required and this deposit can be refunded if you cancel before September 12.

Anyone interested should contact Linda Moore in the Pub.

UNCW graduate wins award

Linda Maria Boettcher, a December graduate of UNCW, received the North Carolina Institute of Chemists' Award of Excellence in an awards ceremony April 7 at Duke University.

The award, one of 19 presented to chemistry and chemical engineering majors in North Carolina colleges and universities, was made at the spring meeting of the NCIC, an affiliate of the American Institute of Chemists.

Dr. Monroe E. Wall of the Research Triangle Institute received the institute's first Distinguished Chemist Award at the same meeting.

Program Board to present lecture on monsters

Wednesday, April 18 at 8 p.m. in the new classroom building auditorium, the Program Board Lecture Committee will present its final lecture for this year. Lee Frank will lecture on the Loch Ness Monster, Bigfoot and other creatures.

Lee Frank is among the world's foremost animal investigators. He has lectured and received public acclaim on both sides of the Atlantic.

Frank has been on three expeditions searching for the Loch Ness Monster, and has served as field monitor and chief scuba diver with the group conducting the current research at Loch Ness. He has led two expeditions searching for Bigfoot and he is presently organizing an operation to prove the existence of this creature.

Lee Frank's exciting, authoritative and entertaining approach to the world of monster hunting will make the most hardened skeptic wonder. He will focus his discussion on his encounters with Bigfoot and the Loch Ness Monster. He also talks about other controversial creatures he is currently working on, from the Abominable Snowman to Mermaids to a gargantuan bird with a 10-foot wing span.

All students, faculty and interested persons are invited to attend. Admission to the lecture is free.

Program Board given freer hand by new DeLuca constitution

by Bobby Parker
Editor

Newly-elected SGA President Francis DeLuca introduced a constitution for the Program Board to the Student Legislature Thursday which is designed to give program officials a freer hand in their operations.

The constitution, approved unanimously by the Legislature, provides a process by which program officials are appointed and removed, giving the Program Board chair more authority in both cases.

The plan, in effect, provides a system of checks and balances in appointment and removal powers among the Program Board chair, SGA president and Student Legislature.

The Program Board chair would be appointed by the president with two-thirds approval of the Legislature. In turn, the board chair would create individual programming committees (i.e., concert, lecture, etc.) and appoint committee chairs with approval of the president.

The president could remove the board chair with two-thirds approval of the Legislature and committee chairs with majority approval.

The board chair could remove committee chairs with approval of the president.

The Legislature could remove any program chair through the impeachment process.

The constitution also stated that the Program Board would be funded through SGA at not less than 30 percent of the SGA budget.

The amount is roughly equivalent to SGA expenditures on programming in recent years.

Presumably, the Program Board budget is to be granted in a lump sum by SGA rather than through separate allocations to individual committees.

This would allow programmers greater flexibility in scheduling programs.

President DeLuca said that the new constitution is designed to give the Program Board "a greater degree of autonomy."

He said this document would give the board a start but would also allow board officials to add to the constitution to develop their own operating procedures.

DeLuca stated that he will seek later to have a liaison officer appointed to act between the Program Board and Finance Committee.

Legislator Pete Divoky questioned whether the SGA president and Legislature should even be allowed to remove a program official without consent of the Program Board chair.

But DeLuca pointed out that the new provision—requiring legislative approval of a presidential dismissal—is a compromise between the present method, allowing the president to act without check, and giving the board chair complete authority.

DeLuca also presented operating rules for the SGA Finance Committee for legislative approval, and the proposal drew concerned debate over membership of the committee.

DeLuca's proposed rules were essentially a revision of rules approved earlier this semester by the Legislature, but it was the revisions which triggered the debate.

Under the rules presented by DeLuca, the committee would be composed of the SGA treasurer and president, three legislators, two students at-large, and non-voting representatives from the deans of students office and the Business Affairs Office.

The previous rules had provided one additional student at-large, a faculty representative and a representative of the Student Activities Office, but had not included the SGA president.

The Legislature approved DeLuca's proposal intact, but Senator Tom Hunt later questioned the changes and successfully sought reconsideration.

There were also other deletions from the original rules, but DeLuca said the new proposal is designed to be less detailed to allow the committee to establish specific guidelines later.

DeLuca also said he would support any additions to the membership because that would add more diversity to the committee.

In final form, the rules provided this membership: SGA treasurer and president; three legislators; two students at-large; and one representative each from Student Activities, Student Affairs, Business Affairs, and the faculty.

All non-student committee members would serve in non-voting positions.

DeLuca also announced that the Finance Committee will meet next week to consider budget requests for next year.

Meeting times are 3:30 - 5:30 p.m., Tuesday through Friday, and 6:30 - 8:30 p.m. Tuesday and Wednesday.

In his president's report, DeLuca urged that SGA get all its operating rules in order, including compiling bylaws for the SGA constitution. He said that the Legislature should concern itself less with financial matters and deal more with "leading student opinion" and serving as the "student voice on campus."

DeLuca also endorsed lump sum allocations for both the Program and Media and Publications Boards, saying this would give each greater autonomy and be more efficient.

In other legislative business, the Football Club was allocated $530 to host a football tournament last weekend. Club members said the allocation would pay for renting Legion Stadium ($150), officials ($160), equipment and personnel ($135), and dues to the state club football association ($85).

Club members said they were unable to use university facilities because Trask Coliseum and other facilities had been rented for the Azalea Festival. Several legislators expressed concern that the club had failed to seek funding until two days prior to the tournament.

The Legislature's Investigating Committee was asked to investigate this situation further.

The Rowing Club was allowed to transfer $1000 from a reserve fund set aside last year for purchase of a new rowing shell. The money will now be used to buy new oars.

Rowing Club representative Paul Weaver said the club will spend approximately $1350 on the new oars plus $150 for a used shell. A $200 reallocation was approved to make up the difference between the cost and the club's existing account.

Several appointments were made by President DeLuca and approved by the Legislature. They include Sharon Starnes, SGA treasurer; Linda Williams, SGA secretary; Steve Chiappisi, Program Board chair; Glen Downs, elections chair; and Bill Sanders, Student Court justice.

SGA Vice-president John Wiley appointed Lowrey Sorensen and Derrick Anderson to the Student Court.

The Legislature nominated Frank Colvin, Scott Bragg and Karin Wansley to the Finance Committee and appointed Larry Hulett chair of the Investigating Committee.

Hulett was also appointed SGA representative to the Media and Publications Board.

Vice-president Wiley announced a vacancy in one junior class senate seat which may be filled by petition through April 17. Interested juniors should contact the SGA office for more information.

Absent from the first meeting of the new Legislature were Robert Black, Donna McMillen, Jack Allen, Cynthia Duggins, and Ken Watson.

The Legislature will not meet this week due to Easter vacation.

Graduates to be recognized by department

by Cathy Horrell
Staff Writer

Commencement will be held in Trask Coliseum on Saturday, May 12, at 10 a.m. The details of the ceremony have been developed by the Chancellor and a special graduation committee headed by Dr. John Stokes, director of special programs.

The speaker will be Professor Germaine Bree, an eminent scholar in French studies. She is currently a visiting professor at Wake Forest University.

Each degree group will be recognized in the ceremony—bachelor of arts, bachelor of science, and the associate in arts degree in nursing.

The names of each student will be listed on the program but will not be announced. However, students graduating with honors will have their names announced.

Each department will have a designated area on campus to present the diplomas to students. Information on the specific areas is not available at this time.

This year three students will receive their diplomas individually from the Chancellor. They are the first to receive their master's degree in education from UNCW.

The procedure for graduation was developed in a different manner this year. Student input was represented by Wayne Dunlap, SGA president, Patricia Blanton, senior class president, and Dottie Shoffner. They were included in a committee to recommend ideas for the graduation ceremony.

According to Dunlap, there was "little response" to a questionnaire printed in the Seahawk earlier this month.

Yet, he added, "responses were consistent in that they wanted a speaker from politics or national news." He also stated that the survey indicated that "the students did not want to go through a long ceremony."

Dr. Stokes remarked that "the final decisions were made by the Chancellor."

'Minute by minute' is a real Doobie

OK, all you music buffs, 10 years ago when the now Doobie Brothers were formed what was their name and who is the only surviving original member? Give up? Well the Doobies used to be known as the Pud. Later John Hartman, the only original Doobie left, changed the band's name to the Doobie Brothers, which of course is another term for joint.

The band didn't forget to honor the weed from which its name was taken--the leaflet of the latest album, Minute by Minute, is a joint!

As with their previous two albums, Takin' It to the Streets and Livin' on the Fault Line, the harmony is enhanced with the vocals of the keyboardist and newest Doobie, Michael McDonald, and guitarist Pat

RECORDS

Simmons.

The album is packed full of hits; it will probably be another Stranger by Billy Joel whose album also contained a number of hit singles.

The Doobies still have an echo of the Steely Dan style and this really comes out in the title cut, "Minute by Minute."

Other great cuts on the Doobies eighth LP include "You Never Change," a song in which the Doobie vocals really come to life. "Steamer Lane Breakdown" is the older Doobie style with a country ring to it. My favorite off the LP is the hit single "What a Fool Believes" which was written by McDonald and Kenny Loggins and is also featured on the latest Loggins disc, Night Watch.

Members of the Doobie Brothers include: Patrick Simmons (guitars, vocals), Michael McDonald (keyboards, synthesizers, vocals), Jeffrey Baxter (guitars), Tiran Porter (bass, vocals), John Hartman (drums) and Keith Knudsen (drums, vocals).

The Doobie Brothers have done it again!

JUDY PARRY

Shakespeare's 'Midsummer Night's Dream' shown April 18

The English Club is sponsoring the 1935 film version of "Midsummer Night's Dream," by William Shakespeare, on April 18 at 7 p.m. in Randall Library Auditorium.

The plot of the story revolves around two young lovers, Lysander (Dick Powell) and Hermia (Olivia de Havilland). Hermia must wed a man selected by her father. According to Athenian law, she must obey her father, forfeit her life or become a nun.

The lovers decide to flee to a nearby woods, ruled by King Oberon (Victor Jossy) and Queen Titania (Tina Louise). The King and Queen are having a lovers' quarrel.

To add to the confusion, Demetrius (the spurned suitor) follows the fleeing couple and is in turn followed by Helena.

It seems that Helena loves Demetrius.

Love potions confuse everyone and all the various couples become entangled in mismatched, multi triangles much like a modern-day soap opera.

Unlike the soaps, you won't have to wait six months for a solution. Every problem is solved at the end of the film.

If you are a film buff, you will find the technical aspects interesting, though the acting will seem old-fashioned.

Those interested in early performances of some notable stars will easily recognize Mickey Rooney as Puck and Jimmy Cagney as Bottom.

There is no admission charge and everyone is invited to see this early film classic directed by Max Reinhardt and William Dieterle.

Contest deadline Thursday

Judges for the Shannon Morton Essay Contest have been announced by members of the English Department faculty who are sponsoring the contest.

Bill Smith, managing editor of the Wilmington Star-News, Dr. Gilbert Bane, director of the marine science program, and David James, an English teacher at John T. Hoggard High School, will judge the contest.

Awards will be given April 19 in a ceremony in the SRO Theatre at 11:30 a.m. Mrs. Madelyn Wagoner will present the awards.

Cash awards are $50, $30 and $20.

The contest topic is "Coping with Change." Essays should be 1000 words or more and submitted to the English Department.

Mike Cross

Success has not been swift

by Julie Russ

Staff Writer

If you act quickly and are willing to part with a paltry amount of cash, you'll be one of the lucky ones who will see Mike Cross perform in Kenan Auditorium April 19 at 8 p.m. Cross, who has become something of a local legend, is known up and down the coast and across the South for his high-energy, humorous shows. Combining plucky lyrics with his won special brand of finger-pickin' guitar playing as well as sawing proficiently on the fiddle, Cross' performances invariably leave his audiences cheering and yelling for more.

Success has not been swift, however. In a recent telephone interview, Cross remarked that, "I've come quite a ways from those smoky little clubs I used to play." Although even today he cannot be classified with the likes of Neil Young or Michael Murphy, Cross has definitely built up a devoted following among college-age adults.

A hardcore Cross fan knows the story behind the climb to success. A late bloomer musically, Cross didn't pick up the guitar until his college days at Chapel Hill. When he finally discovered the instrument, he became so obsessed with learning to play that he quit school and worked for three years in order to have more time to perfect his art. Then this young ex-golfer from Lenoir discovered the fiddle and the rest is history. Suddenly the name Mike Cross was being passed around in small taverns and bars. He became known for his pickin' and fiddlin' and jaunty, upbeat folksongs.

Now, two LP's later (Child Prodigy and Born in the Country) Cross is no longer committed to playing the smaller pubs, although he claims to get "an enormous charge out of playing before any audience, be it large or small." His unique blend of down-home lyrics and enthusiastic instrumentals have made him a favorite among the bluegrass/Southern-fans.

What of Mike Cross, the man? "The man you see on stage is the man I really am," he commented. "Deep down inside, that's how crazy I really am! I'm lucky because I can get on stage and sing, cut up, fool around--and get paid for doing it!"

Money, he is quick to point out, is not his primary reason for performing. "I'm just as happy playing on my front porch for a bunch of friends as I am performing in front of 2500 hollering, singing people."

The music is just always in me, and I'd be the way I am even if I never made another cent from it.

As expected, every musician has his own favorite fellow artists, and Cross is no exception. "I'm really interested in the Celtic sound right now--I love Irish music--and my favorite group is an Irish bunch called the Bothy Band. And Barbra Streisand is another favorite of mine. All the people who have influenced me directly or indirectly--people like Mississippi John Hirt and all those old blues artists--they have all produced so much great music."

Cross writes "99 percent" of his own songs and modestly downplays his creativity. "I just take things that happen in everyday life and make a song out of 'em," he explained. "I just do takeoffs on real-life situations."

Having appeared in Kenan Auditorium twice before, Cross enthused, "I really enjoyed performing at UNCW. College people just accept my craziness... they seem to really relate to me while I'm on stage." If you yearn to relate to Mike Cross, you know where to be at 8 p.m. April 19.

University of Texas coach Lemons to speak at UNCW basketball banquet

Abe Lemons, the highly successful head basketball coach at the University of Texas will be the featured speaker at the UNCW basketball banquet at 7 p.m. on Friday, April 20, at the Blockade Runner Hotel in Wrightsville Beach.

Lemons, who is renowned as a speaker for his humor and frankness, is probably the most sought after basketball coach for speaking engagements. His homespun wit is popular with all audiences.

Besides being a hit speaker, Lemons is also the eighth winningest coach in the major college ranks. In the past two years he has revitalized the program at Texas and taken the Longhorns to the Conference Crown in each of the two seasons. He was coach of the year in the NCAA in 1978 when his Longhorns won the NIT Championship. This past year his team was in the NCAA tournament, losing in the Mid-west regional. Lemon's overall record stands at 424 wins against 233 losses in his twenty-four years of coaching. He has also coached eight college All-Americans and has served as president of the National Association of Basketball Coaches.

Tickets for the Lemons event, certainly one of the best

UNCW speaker choices ever, are priced at $10 and may be purchased from the Student Aid Association and Cape Fear Sportsman's Club officers. They can also be bought at the UNCW ticket office in Trask Coliseum.

Featured guests for the banquet will be members of our own UNCW Seahawk basketball team of 1978-79. Honored will be the four departing seniors.

The banquet is sponsored by the UNCW Student Aid Association and the Sportsman's Club.

TIME OUT

by Roger Knight
Sports Editor

The 1979 Major League Baseball season is underway. Now, this is not to say that things are running smoothly—just running. It seems the men in blue—that is the major league umpires—are on strike. The umps got tired of seeing, and arguing with, all those players who made money hand-over-foot. The umpires have an argument when compared to the players. A major league umpire will make forty thousand dollars a year, in an average situation. Every other year they will be selected to work a playoff or world series game, which is a big bonus.

However, the lowest paid players, which incidentally are shortstops, average over ninetyfive thousand dollars per year. The umps do have a beef. After all, being able to call a ball game efficiently and correctly requires a lot of talent, just as being a player does. Some of the calls of the young season have already been criticized, perhaps unjustly. The umps working the games are not regular major league umpires and are, therefore, subjected to much closer scrutiny.

What the major league umpires do not have is a case in court. They still have a couple of years left on a contract which has already been held up in court. Also, the office of the commissioner has no intention of resigning the contract. According to Jerry Fishel, vice-president of the American League, the baseball management wants the umpires to come back to work but they have ironclad contracts and it would not be good business sense—as well as a bad precedent. The umpires contend that the contracts should be renegotiated on the basis of inflation and with hopes of reaching a closer parity with players.

While the umpires of major league baseball have a pretty good argument, they have no real hope of getting their old contract thrown out. So, I believe the best thing for them to do is go back to work and remember all their arguments when the current contract runs out.

Tennis team breaks even in Azalea Classic

by Steve Wallace
Staff Writer

The UNCW tennis team finished the Azalea Classic this weekend with a 1-1 mark, losing their first round match to a strong UNC-Charlotte team but rallying to defeat Pfeiffer. UNC-Charlotte won the Classic with a 2-0 mark, recording wins over UNCW (7-2) and Campbell (6-3). UNCW and Campbell both finished at 1-1, while Pfeiffer posted a 0-2 mark.

UNCW's season record now stands at 11-10. Prior to the Azalea Classic, the Seahawks won three out of their last five matches, posting two 9-0 shut-out victories over Pembroke State and North Carolina A & T and an 8-1 triumph over UNC-Greensboro. UNCW's two losses came at the hands of Campbell and USC-Conway, both by 8-1 scores. In the loss to Campbell, Rick Watson was the lone winner with a 4-6, 7-6, 6-2 victory (number 4 singles). The 8-1 score, however, was not indicative of the closeness of the match. Five of the nine individual matches went three sets. In the USC-Conway match, the number 3 doubles team of Rick Watson and Charles Ponton were the only winners for UNCW with a 6-1, 6-4 triumph.

This week UNCW plays five matches in seven days, four on the road. Today, UNCW begins a three-match swing into Virginia against Old Dominion.

Azalea Classic results:

(Friday)
Campbell d. Pfeiffer, 5-4
UNC-Charlotte d. UNCW, 7-2
(Saturday)
*UNCW d. Pfeiffer, 8-3

BASEBALL:

Seahawks have their own special 'Talent'

During the course of a season, a baseball player gets hot with his bat and can do no wrong. The hottest hitter on UNCW's varsity baseball team at this time is John Talent. John is presently leading the UNCW Varsity Baseball team with an astounding .480 batting average.

When thought of from the numerical standpoint, .480 is not that good, little less than 50 percent. This percentage seems low in comparison to other sports, such as shooting baskets in basketball or throwing completed passes in football. But we are talking about baseball, a sport where a hitter is considered superior if he hits any percentage over .300.

For example, the best hitter in professional baseball is Rod Carew, a man who led the major leagues in hitting with a .334 average. That gives you some idea of what kind of feat John Talent is presently performing, doesn't it? Understandably, there is a fairly substantial difference between college baseball and the professional ranks, but for a man to hit .480, at any level, is quite a feat.

John Talent

John cannot really explain why he is hitting so well except to say that he is "in the groove right now." Meaning, he is swinging fluidly, concentrating well and making good contact with the ball.

John has always been a good hitter with a high average. At East Mecklenberg High School, John batted .330 his sophomore year, .360 his junior year and .370 his senior year—all high averages.

Besides being a good hitter in baseball, John is a fair tennis player. He plays sparingly in the off season to keep in shape but nevertheless, he plays fairly well. Playing tennis may have something to do with John's high level of performance with the bat. Hitting a tennis ball is similar to hitting a baseball in that one must concentrate, have good eye-ball coordination, lean into the ball and follow through on the swing.

In addition to being a super hitter, Talent is a good-fielding shortstop. One of Talent's teammates, second baseman Mark Scalf, who plays along side of Talent describes John as "a steady shortstop with good range, a real good arm and also a smart player who has a good knowledge of the game and works well with the other infielders."

After John is through hitting baseballs, he would like some type of city-county government job, related to his major which is Political Science.

John's .480 batting average will gradually drop but for now he is the man on top with a hot swinging bat. UNCW still has about 15 home games left before April 29, so why don't you take in one of the games and see hot-hitting John Talent and the rest of the UNCW baseball team play!

homer by UNCW 3rd baseman Herbie Dawkins.

The Seahawks host Coastal Carolina today and Thursday, hoping to avenge an earlier loss to them.

Two outfield errors supported the Monarchs first inning rally as they went on to take the contest 4-2.

On Saturday the Seahawks returned home to take on Campbell. Roger Sutton, the ace of the UNCW staff, won his fourth game with a seven hitter, 6-3. The contest was highlighted by a three-run

Seahawks win one; lose one

UNCW pulled out an even 1-1 record for the week in college baseball. The Seahawks, now 9-12, lost one on the road at Methodist and won at home over the Campbell Camels.

On last Thursday night, the Seahawks traveled to Methodist College in Fayetteville, N.C. to take on the highly regarded Monarchs.

Suds lovers plentiful

One thing all colleges have in common: a plentiful supply of closet alcoholics! Now a guy (or girl, if you prefer) who is a bit tipsy can be absolutely hysterical. Loads of laughs, ha ha. But when some drooling drundard starts leering down the front of my shirt, we'll, that's when the Jack Daniels has flowed far enough.

A basic truth must be faced: most beer bellies belong to the male factor. "Gusto is great, foamy is fun!" cry these ever-thirsty souls as they gulp another round of Strohs (or Pearl, or Coors, or whatever happens to be on sale at the local juicery). Take the truth from someone who knows: foamy might be fun but sick ain't exactly swell.

Now honestly, is there any sight more miserable than somebody upping his/her guts because they didn't know when to quit? Talk about your loss of dignity! I've seen (and heard) people in the bushes who would have been better off dead. That's what they were moaning, anyway. Pitiful, no?

I don't mean to come off holier-than-thou; I've been known to take a sip or two (resulting in a hasty trip or two to the local john!), but I'd really rather stick to Tab. Just think of all the calories in that Lite beer you're chugging! And Tab doesn't make your mouth taste like a sewer the next morning, either.

Just for fun, the next time you're at a PJ party, keep an eye out for the different types of winos. They come in all shapes and sizes! First, there's the shy swizzler. He's lapped up about five gallons already and yet he's still about as friendly as an ice-cube. This guy is a hopeless case; nothing's going to draw him out of his shell.

Next one up is Mr. Happy as Hell, the guy who loves the whole world, especially you, you lucky thing. He can be something of a pest, since he likes to nibble on your earlobe for attention. (Pretend he's a fly and give him a quick merciless brush-off). One step beyond, his cheerful fella is the dour drunk, who is exactly like the shy swizzler, with one exception: he's a lot meaner. Trip over this guy and he'll bite your kneecap. Fortunately, this type seems to be rather rare.

At the end of the line is the character we all know and love: the Helpless Heaver. This is the guy who soaks it up like a sponge and goes looking for more. Now he is flat out on the sofa, insisting he could walk if someone would give him his feet back . . . and by the way, his stomach is feeling kinda funny, and would you mind steering him towards the door? And so he makes a rapid (although frequently ill-timed) exit. As pathetic as the Heaver may appear, he is best avoided unless you want to go home smelling like a brewery.

The moral of this story is: He who can drinketh, drinketh well; he who can't shall feel like hell!

New editors chosen for student publications

by Kim Evans
Seahawk Contributor

The end of the 1979 spring semester means the beginning of something new for three very important people—the new editors of UNCW's publications.

Bobby Parker, editor of the Seahawk, will be handing his position over to Dillon Bryant. Bryant is a junior majoring in business. He became interested in journalism in high school where he served for three years on their newspaper staff as a photographer and writer.

Bryant served as managing editor of the Seahawk this past semester.

Bryant is very excited about his new position and feels that he has an excellent and experienced staff to support. According to Bryant, "the Seahawk is going to be super."

As with Bryant, freshman Stacy Rogers, the new Fledgling editor, wants to make the yearbook more student oriented. She plans to do this by using more candid photos, more body copy and better utilization of space.

Rogers gained her experience by serving as copy editor for her high school annual. She has also served on the Fledgling staff this year. Rogers is in the process of selecting staff members and assigning their positions.

Lea McDaniel, a junior majoring in English, has served as prose and art editor for Atlantis.

In addition to the many hours she spends working on Atlantis, she works approximately 42 hours per week at a music shop and 12 hours in class.

When asked about her goals for the magazine, McDaniel stated that she hopes to be able to keep up the high standards set by previous editors.

In her opinion, Atlantis is among the top of its kind. She, too, will be depending on her dedicated staff. She feels that Atlantis staffers receive more personal satisfaction out of their work than recognition.

She extends an invitation to anyone interested in working with Atlantis to come and join them. "You just have to take the first step. From then on, it's easy," says McDaniel.

UNC administration rejects fee increase for new union, pushes completion

by Bobby Parker
Editor

Plans for construction of a new student union have hit something of a snag as the UNC General Administration has rejected a student fee increase in the amount sought to finance the facility.

At the same time, however, UNC officials are putting pressure on university officials to speed completion of the project.

Vice-chancellor for Business Affairs Jairy Hunter said in an interview Monday that UNC officials would not approve a proposal endorsed by the UNCW Board of Trustees in January calling for a $4,000 square foot union.

That size facility would have required an additional student fee of $124 per year, and Hunter said UNC officials were reluctant to approve so great an increase. Total cost of this project was estimated at about $3.5 million.

UNC recommended that UNCW instead adopt a previously approved plan to construct a 40,000 square foot building. This proposal was approved in 1976 with a price tag of $2.2 million.

Hunter explained that with added inflation costs, the 40,000 square foot building today would cost approximately $2.7 million, meaning an additional student fee of $70 per year.

Hunter said that the General Administration had recognized the need for a larger union here and had suggested in its recommendation that the facility be adaptable to future expansion.

"We're not giving up anything (needed in the union)," Hunter said. "We're doing it in a more practical sense."

The union, Hunter said, will still be planned as if it were the 54,000 square foot facility originally proposed. The planning will be divided into "phases" with initial construction considered "phase 1" and subsequent expansion, "phase 2."

Hunter said that a food service operation would be the "most logical" to add at a later stage of construction. He said the union may still include a snack bar, but not a cafeteria facility as originally discussed.

Vice-chancellor for Student Affairs William Malloy said meanwhile that plans for the union are being pushed by UNC officials who want to "clear up" all self-liquidating building projects by the end of the year.

A committee to plan for use of space in the new building has been hastily convened to devise a general floor plan by May 1.

These plans will then be forwarded to the architect, who is allotted five weeks to complete his job. By December, all construction bids will be collected, and construction is scheduled to begin in January 1980.

The union is scheduled to be operational by July 1981.

Malloy, who chairs the committee, said it first met last Friday, and he described its function as a "one week job."

The committee is charged with developing the functional aspects of the union and is looking into four major areas for allocating space within the building.

These areas include administrative offices for running the union itself; offices for student functions such as SGA and Program Board and meeting rooms; student services for a central location of offices such as counseling and career planning; and business operations such as food service or a bank facility which would generate revenue to support the union.

Malloy said the area allotted to student services would depend on the square footage available. But he said it would be a "significant" development to have such offices in a "neutral site" where students would feel comfortable.

According to Vice-chancellor Hunter, the $70 fee increase will put UNCW in the middle range of student fee rates throughout the UNC system. The $124 increase would have put UNCW's fees near the highest in the system.

Hunter said that the decision by UNC was not affected by the recent pressure from the federal Department of Health, Education and Welfare to give priority financial support to historically black institutions in the system.

He explained that the union project would not be affected because state funds are not being used.

Approximately $150,000 will be used on the new union from a reserve account accumulated from current union funds, and an additional $70,000 will be used from a resource of student health service funds.

Members of the planning committee are Malloy, Deans of Students Helena Cheek and Ralph Parker, Director of Student Activities Linda Moore, SGA President Francis DeLuca, Dr. Jim Megivern, Bob Appleton, and students Cindy Cole, Helen Hazelton and Wayne Dunlap.

The architects selected for the project are Wilmington's Ballard, McKim and Sawyer.

Administration endorses new SGA allocation structure

by Bobby Parker
Editor

Administration officials have apparently abandoned attempts to install a new board to allocate student fee money, instead satisfied with revisions in the operation of the SGA Finance Committee.

Vice-chancellor for Student Affairs William Malloy said that the new SGA system incorporates several recommendations from his office and from Vice-chancellor for Business Affairs Jairy Hunter.

The newly formed SGA Finance Committee adds student members outside the Student Legislature and also includes administration representatives as non-voting members.

Formerly, the committee operated as an in-house organ of the legislature.

A proposal made public several weeks ago, devised by members of Malloy's staff, would have established a board composed of faculty, administration and student members.

SGA officials criticized that proposal as hastily planned and also disliked its low total membership, which was five.

Malloy applauded the new SGA policy because, he said, "students came up with their own plan."

The new Finance Committee has been meeting during the past week to consider budget requests for the coming year. Representatives from the Offices of Student Affairs and Student Activities have been attending those meetings as non-voting members in advisory roles.

One of the major revisions in allocation policy will be a lump sum allocation to the Program Board. Previously, the individual program committees were given separate budgets.

Program officials hope the lump sum system will allow more flexibility in planning programs.

The future of WLOZ radio has been a much debated topic on this campus for several years now, but the time is coming soon when that future must be met with some difficult choices and positive commitment. The difficult choices will lie mainly with students; the positive commitment will be the responsibility of the university. But with a thorough examination of what we have and what we could have at WLOZ, the choices and the commitment cannot be in disagreement.

Radio is still virtually a new tool to this university. It is a resource that is still undeveloped and its potential is neither defined nor realized by most. The University Media and Publications Board has recently authorized a study commission to explore these topics, and that commission is finding out how badly our radio resources have been used in the past.

WLOZ remains essentially a student activity, staffed solely by students and funded through student money which is allocated by student government. The fact is that there are too many variables within such a system to adequately run a radio station. The staff changes from one year to the next, the amount of money available varies each year, and the attitudes of students government leaders changes annually. During the past semester the station has lost two student managers, the central reason being lack of time necessary to run the station. In the last several years SGA has been unable—not unwilling—to give WLOZ the needed financial backing for important equipment purchases. And SGA leaders, feeling responsible for the station because on one else appeared to be, have often been frustrated by poor relationships with the staff due to an unclear definition of their role.

Throughout the rough times, however, there has been one comforting thought for both the WLOZ staff and SGA officials: the station has remained a student operation. The administration has never interfered with decisions concerning programming or other internal matters of the station. With the lines of authority drawn, then, enthusiastic staff members and responsible SGA officials have tried to push the station in a positive direction.

Well, now come the hard decisions. Students must look at the result of their work and ask themselves if they are satisfied. If effort is the main concern, then students have every right to be satisfied; but if performance is the measuring stick, then students must realize that WLOZ has not yet approached its potential.

WLOZ is classified as an educational station by the Federal Communications Commission. Fact is, it's just another music station, not even the "alternative" it has been billed to be. Students and the community as well can find much the same programming on WLOZ as in a half dozen other stations in this listening market. The greatest problem with WLOZ programming is the absence of diversity—very seldom are other forms of music besides rock played, and very seldom are there information and public affairs broadcasts.

The idea of a student-run station is great if it doesn't interfere in the real purpose of the station. Students should be broad-minded enough to admit this to themselves and to the public. And this is where the administration comes in.

If students are to relinquish control of WLOZ, there must be a viable alternative source of support. Logically, of course, that source is the university itself which can give the station the time, attention and financial backing it really needs. The administration needs to recognize the potential of WLOZ to the university and, perhaps more importantly, to the community. Used properly, the station can be the best public relations agent we have, and it can provide more apparent benefits to the community in general than almost any other single resource within the university. The station can also provide valuable laboratory experience for a growing body of communications students, as well as supplementing academic programs in other disciplines.

While the administration is correct to leave the decisions, for the time being, in student hands, they must also indicate their willingness to give a full commitment to the station's development. Such a commitment would be realized in financial support to push the growth of WLOZ and long-range planning to assure we make the most of what we have. University support would mean administrative management, but the administration should also see that the station loses part of its potential when it does not take full advantage of student resources. Thus, the station could remain open to students as a valuable learning experience.

Many students may not agree with "giving up" WLOZ to the university because it appears, to them, another sell-out of student's authority. Those who really want the best for the station, however, must realize what it could mean to have a viable educational FM radio station broadcasting from the center of our university to the community of listeners around us.

Viewed in those terms, the choice doesn't really seem difficult at all.

THIS NEWSPAPER'S OPINION

Positive moves coming from SGA in first weeks of administration

There are feelings of positive motion coming from within the Student Government Association, and that is very good to see. Perhaps it is too early to judge for the coming year, but the first weeks of a new slate of SGA officers have been reassuring after a period of problem upon problem.

Note these examples:

□ SGA President Francis DeLuca has begun to re-establish an important line of communication between SGA and the Student Activities Office, which suffered tremendously under the previous administration. If DeLuca accomplishes nothing else during his term of office, he will have done well to get back onto the right track with the administration officials. This doesn't mean that administrators control SGA, but it does mean that they are there with the experience and advice when needed.

□ The first meeting of the new Student Legislature was probably the most productive and most efficient this year. SGA Vice-president John Wiley seems to know how to run a legislature, and legislators seem to be there for a purpose. However, it is here that the biggest chance exists for a loss of enthusiasm; we hope that does not occur.

□ The decision to allocate Program Board a lump sum has been made and backed up. Added to the outstanding choice of Steve Chiappisi as board chair and a new Program Board constitution, there are good things in sight for programming next year. The board has already begun its planning for the fall.

□ The revised SGA Finance Committee has been working smoothly and efficiently through a week of budget hearing with the support and participation of the Offices of Student Affairs and Student Activities. The set-up of the committee recognizes that the main business of SGA is not money. That's a positive step.

The SGA faces a challenging year next fall with a change in its focus, its methods, and its direction. If these first weeks are any indication, the students in office are prepared for that challenge.

The editorial farewell: Reflections, thoughts, thanks and advice

I sat down to write what would be the traditional "farewell from the editor" article, but was soon engrossed in my favorite pastime: sleep. I was dreaming my favorite fantasy: I was Gene Kelly, singin' in the rain.

Just singin' in the rain.
Then suddenly I was awakened by a gruff voice from the corner, and I saw a short, fat, balding little gremlin. His name was Elvis, and he said he had a mission...

ELVIS: Hey, I said get your butt up. You and I have a job to do.

ME: You and I? What kind of job?

E: What you sat down here to do.

We've got to write your farewell address.

ME: What have you got to do with that?

E: Are you kidding? It's my job, boy. Besides, you weren't doing so hot by yourself. Singin' in the rain, ha! That'll be the day.

ME: How do you know what I was dreaming?

E: It's my business, kid. And you might say the galoshes and overcoat gave you away. Just get quiet and listen. I've got another appointment in a few hours, so we'll have to make this quick.

ME: Make what quick?

E: I told you once--we're going to write your farewell. How the hell did you ever get to be an editor anyway?

ME: Some people think I'm pretty good at it.

E: Yeah, yourself included, so they tell me.

ME: That's not true! Well, I mean, it is true, but it's not like you make it sound.

E: Look, kid, when you've been around the business as long as I have, you learn that it always takes a pretty healthy ego to be any kind of editor. You take a bruising here, a boosting there--it all works out in the wash.

ME: Who are you anyway?

E: Me? Call me Elvis. That's all you need.

ME: But what are you doing here?

E: Questions, questions. Don't you

"You get used to living a six-day week; Monday night is something you recall from your childhood. You finish up Tuesday morning and start all over again Tuesday afternoon."

Bobby Parker

reporters ever stop.

ME: Well, I think I have a right to know a strange man who barges in my apartment.

E: Okay, okay. I'm sent from the Ghosts of Editors Past. It's my job to help you editors say goodbye when it's time for you to go. You know, make sure you say the right things, don't leave anyone out--things like that.

ME: But how do I know to trust you?

E: Look, boy, I've got references a mile long. Last year I did Eric Severeid.

ME: Eric Severeid wasn't an editor.

E: He didn't have to be. He was Eric Severeid--got in on a celebrity pass. This summer I'll be doing Howard K. Smith.

ME: I saw Severeid's closing. He went out with class. That's how I want to go.

E: We'll work on it, kid. Let's get down to business. Let me see what you've got so far.

ME: Well, it's not very good. It needs rewriting.

E: You're telling me. Okay, let's start from scratch. You've got to start off general--what the job has been like, how much you've enjoyed it, what a tremendous opportunity it's been--stuff like that.

ME: I was thinking I'd go for something kind of original.

E: Nothing is original anymore. Believe me, it's all been done somewhere by someone. Just do like I say.

ME: Well, it's been a hard job. But I have enjoyed it. It's been a tremendous opportunity. I've really grown a lot in the job. And I've been able to work with so many different people.

E: Good, good, kid. Keep going.

ME: Let's see... I've learned so much more than I would ever have learned in any classroom. The responsibility has made me reach inside myself and really taught me a lot about myself. I've had to deal with people on a one-to-one basis while at the same time on a me-to-the-world basis.

E: What about criticism? Editors always have something to say about criticism.

ME: Well, there's been a lot of it in almost two and one half years as editor. You learn to take it all in and separate the good from the bad, but you listen to all of it. You learn that you are not always right, but you also learn how to stand up for yourself when you know you're right.

E: Sure do use the word "learn" a lot, kid. Someone would think you're a student.

ME: There are times when I've wondered. I get wrapped up so much in running the newspaper that school takes a back seat. That's the way it had to be sometimes, though. There's a built-in drive that pushes you to get that paper out no matter what it costs, no matter if you haven't read Mark Twain for Dr. Rosset's class. Things usually work out, though.

E: Tell 'em how much time it takes.

ME: I couldn't imagine. On an average good week, about half you're waking hours. In a bad week, more. You get used to living a six-day week; Monday night is something you recall from your childhood. You finish up Tuesday morning and start all over again Tuesday afternoon.

E: But you weren't alone, were you?

ME: That's true. Sometimes you feel like the loneliest person in the world. But then you realize there are other people there, basically after the same thing you are. You realize, too, that you can't do it without them--which is what they remind you of at midnight and the story's unwritten, the photo's under-exposed or they have a test tomorrow and just can't stay tonight. Overall, though, I've been lucky to have a good group of people backing me up. And you really can't do it without them.

E: When does all the work pay off?

ME: That's easy--Wednesday, when the paper hits the stands. When you go to class and more people are reading the paper than listening to the lecture.

When someone trips in the hall because their nose is buried inside. When you hear someone say, "Did you see that article in the Seahawk?"

E: There must be a lot of people you need to thank.

ME: There sure are. First is our adviser, John Justus. He's just started and he's doing a good job--both listening and advising. His headaches have just started, though; mine are over. Special thanks to Jon Greene for arguing the other side, then realizing I was right all along. Someday, maybe, the conclusion of the Big Discussion. Very special thanks to Linda Moore--is it a compliment to say I could always count on you? I think so! The unusual ability to show me all sides and then make me feel I found them myself. Thanks also to Linda Huntley, Sherri King, Nikki Bane, Chryl Kane...

E: Wait, wait, kid. You didn't win an Academy Award, you know.

ME: Just a few more personal thanks. I am still the editor, you know. Thank you Tammy, Beth, Robert, Doug, Dr. Collier, Muriel and B. And all the staff members over the last two years.

E: Are you finished?

ME: I could go on...

E: Don't! Let's wrap this thing up. This last bit's got to be the killer. Put your heart into it--tell 'em how you want to be remembered, advice to the new editor--things like that.

ME: Well, I hear they want to name the new student union after me. Either that or bronze my note pad for the trophy case. Both would be nice. As for Dillon, the new editor: play your own game--but play it as a team.

E: Okay, now something profound, inspirational and quotable for your ending.

ME: Umm... how about, "Now I know I have a heart--'cause it's breaking."

E: Whoa! You've gotta be kidding. It's been done--tin man, Wizard of Oz. Try again.

ME: Well... It's been real and it's been fun, but it ain't been real fun...

E: Fine, kid, you're an original. Now just one thing more before I leave. Whatever you do, don't put "30--" at the bottom of this article. It's corny, it's sentimental, and no one outside the newspaper will know what it means. I think you can take it from here, so I'm off.

Elvis left, and I realized I still didn't have anything on paper. So I decided to print this transcript of our conversation. It says about everything I wanted, and a little more.

Now where did I put that umbrella...

UNCW Board of Trustees learn of progress of new changes

by Bobby Parker
Editor

Meeting on campus April 11, the UNCW Board of Trustees learned of the progress of several campus building projects, development of new academic programs, and a board authorized study of alternatives for football here.

Mrs. Ann Davis, who chairs the board's building and grounds committee, told board members that plans for the new student union had hit some stumbling blocks, but she described them as "not too serious."

The UNC General Administration had requested a proposed $124 per year increase of student fees to finance the new union, Davis said. UNC officials recommended reducing the planned size of the facility by 14,000 square feet, bringing the total to 40,000.

The smaller building could be financed with a fee increase of only $70. General Administration recommended the building be constructed with expansion in mind at a later time.

Other building projects in the planning stages discussed by the board included completion of the third floor of the Marine Sciences Building and a new general classroom building at an as yet undetermined site.

Chancellor William Wagoner also informed the board that UNCW currently has proposals before the UNC Board of Governors to construct two additional dormitories.

Vice-chancellor for Business Affairs Jarry Hunter reported that the dorm now under construction would be ready for occupancy by fall. Hunter also said that there are now 200 students on a waiting list for residence space.

SGA President Francis DeLuca, an ex-officio member of the board, asked the trustees to explore the possibility of increasing the outdoor recreational facilities at the residence halls to accommodate the rising on-campus population.

Mrs. Ellen Newbold, who chairs the trustee's academic affairs committee, reported that a proposal to establish a masters program in business administration is being considered by the UNC Board of Governors. She also said that a masters program in marine biology is still in the planning stages.

Chancellor Wagoner said the business administration proposal as well as a nursing plan are in the "dormant stage" now awaiting action by the Board of Governors.

The nursing plan would allow UNCW to offer both two-year and four-year nursing programs.

The board's students affairs committee was said to have asked SGA officials to conduct an in-depth student survey to gauge support for a proposed football program.

Committee representatives said that the survey would ask students if they are willing to pay additional student fees to support an NCAA division status football team. Funding for any football program would probably come from student fees.

The committee will also seek to determine support among alumni and faculty.

One trustee indicated a desire to insure that football does not detract from the other established athletic programs, particularly the basketball program.

Chancellor Wagoner told board members that enrollment figures thus far for fall 1979 show 1414 new students accepted from 1944 applicants.

Wagoner said this total exceeds last year's total at the same point in time by approximately 150, although he also reported a slight decline in transfer applicants to date.

Ceremony draws anger

To the Editor:

While language is quite appropriate to express my anger with the administration over the procedure for this year's graduation ceremony. Nonetheless, out of respect for civility and decorum, I'll refrain from engaging those familiar words the great majority of the senior class now uses to describe to perpetrators of this year's commencement travesty.

To be short and to the point:

(A) there is no justification whatsoever for the abbreviated ceremony in the realm of sheer numbers. It is not an act of supererogation for the academic dean (or anyone else) to call out a mere 300 names.

(B) Absolutely no attempt was made to assess student opinion when it became obvious the poorly designed survey printed in the Seahawk would not accomplish the purpose.

(C) Student opinion would probably have been irrelevant as the ceremony has been clearly designed without the students in mind.

Decisions originating from Alderman Hall rarely have anything but the convenience of administrators as a reason for their existence. The decision regarding graduation is of extreme concern, however, as it strikes at the very heart of student rights. Graduation is not a day for administrators to show off. It's sole purpose is to honor the graduates. By not even mentioning the names of those graduating, those in charge negate the very purpose of the ceremony.

Apparently those in charge of graduation feel that parents, friends and relatives will be traveling hundreds of miles (in many cases) to hear the featured speaker and gaze upon those who run this institution.

Any senior who dares consider himself or herself a grown man or woman would be a damn fool to let their graduation be so perverted. The administration's habit of announcing controversial decisions during the summer or before major holidays is no accident. Nothing frightens these little Napoleons more than the thought of student opinion. If this were not the case, this latest decree would have been placed forth for public comment in time for alteration, if necessary. The truth is, it was presented at just the right time to minimize the possibility of adverse comment.

Since the administration seems determined to have a graduation for the benefit and convenience of everybody except students and their guests, students should at least have the option of skipping the charade. To make this pseudo-graduation ceremony compulsory is, if nothing else, cruel and unusual punishment of the lowest degree.

Graduation angers student

To the Editor:

I was very disappointed in the plan for graduation presented in the April 11 edition of the Seahawk. I was under the impression, from earlier articles presented by the Seahawk, that UNCW was attempting to upgrade and to add prestige to their graduation ceremony. Apparently I was wrong. I cannot see how recognizing degree groups displays any prestige at all. As a matter of fact, I am embarrassed to invite anyone to the ceremony knowing that the individual student receives such little recognition. I am seriously considering recalling the two invitations I have already sent out.

Isn't the student the whole purpose of the ceremony anyway? To be honest, I was looking forward to shaking the Chancellor's hand and receiving my diploma. It is safe to say that, in the five years I have been going to this school, not once have I seen or met the Chancellor; it looks like the record will remain intact. It may sound a little corny but I thought college graduation was an important step. Maybe I am wrong, but I hope not.

Now the question arises concerning the recognition of the graduates by department; that is just fine for a school four times our size, and a little simple arithmetic displays my point. There are 392 graduates this spring and approximately one-fourth will not be there for the ceremony, leaving about 300. There are 19 academic departments on this campus, so let us assume a fairly even distribution of students. That means approximately 17 students per department. What happens to double majors like me? Are we supposed to shuffle between departments to share a moment with friends?

Honestly, how long can it take to hand out 300 diplomas individually? My graduating class in high school, which was twice as big, did it and the ceremony did not take too long. As for the consensus of students that returned the graduation questionnaires and stressed the point that they wanted a short ceremony, all I can say is: have UNCW mail you your diploma! After four yours (five in my case), is a couple of hours too much to ask? I do not think so.

Oh, by the way, whom do I see to get the $4 I wasted on announcements back?

Ceremony angers again

To the Editor:

I am writing on behalf of the parents of the graduating seniors to ask that you seniors respond to the administration's announcement of no name calling at graduation, with all the determination you can muster, and ask for a change back to calling out the names of the graduates. For four years you have struggled and persevered and now when you deserve the glory of hearing your name, suddenly the rug is yanked from under you. Many parents are driving from 3-6 hours to attend graduation and have looked forward to hearing their son or daughter's name and will be deprived. This isn't fair!

Students, this is your graduation. Do something. If you've ever wondered how to repay your parents for all their support, this is your chance. Don't let this happen. I personally would not drive four hours to hear a speaker but would drive eight hours to hear my son's name called as a graduate. It would be music to my ears after 22 years of dreaming of this very "special" occasion. I shall be very disappointed as will other parents.

It is up to you!

Football budget cut

To the Editor:

After two outstanding seasons, the UNCW Football Club may be on the way out. That's right, out for good maybe. Not because the players are all quitting--on the contrary. The club has heard from over 65 individuals who are interested in playing ball next year. And not from any lack of student support either. The smallest home crowd last year was over 200; the largest was over 2000. No, the reason that the club is endangered is that the Finance Committee of the SGA wants to cut the Football Club budget by over 40 percent.

Last year the club was given about $5700 to operate on. This coming year, the Finance Committee recommends a budget of only $3300. The committee cut out all money budgeted for new equipment which the club badly needs. They propose a cut of all money for spring football. They have even cut money for footballs to practice with.

Right now, the club has enough equipment to outfit 29 players. The league allows 45-man squads. With 65 people coming out for the team, it only makes sense to use as many as possible. But by cutting money for new equipment, the Finance Committee is prohibiting expansion. And with the university expanding at a high rate, shouldn't its clubs and organizations be allowed to expand too? We can hardly expect new players if they have no equipment to play in.

The Finance Committee believes the club should look to outside sources for the rest of the money we need. But really, why should the community support a school organization which can not get support from that school?

While the Finance Committee makes the preliminary judgment, the last decision is made by the Legislature of the school. It is true that the Football Club asked for more than last year's amount. But now, we are fighting just to get what we did last year. We believe our record of success justifies this request. Apparently, the student body, for the most part, agrees. If you signed our petition last week, we thank you. Unfortunately, the president of the SGA postponed Finance Committee reviews until a later date, so the impact of the petition was not as great as it could have been. The petition was, however, submitted to the senate to prove how much support the club did have. In just one day, we received 365 signatures. That's more people than voted for the SGA president.

We urge you to speak to all or any members of the SGA senate. They represent you and vote according to what you, the students, want. We believe the student body would like to see football stay at UNCW. We can only hope that the senate will consider this when the Finance Committee decisions are reviewed, and will support our petition and our organization.

Nuclear energy on the popularity decline in the US

by Ralph Nader

Lately, it seems the atomic power industry crumbles a little more each month.

On March 28, 1979, what was perhaps the worst commercial nuclear power accident in American history occurred at the Three Mile Island nuclear plant in Harrisburg, Pa., when a cooling pump broke and radioactive steam escaped into the atmosphere.

Earlier this March, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) ordered that five reactors be shut down because of faulty designs. Last year, the Commission closed five other reactors because important safety pipes were cracking.

In February of this year, the NRC withdrew its support for the 1975 Rasmussen report, which estimated the likelihood and consequences of a nuclear accident. The report, long the bulwark of the nuclear power industry's defense, largely underestimated the risks.

One manufacturer of nuclear reactors, General Atomic, has already withdrawn from the market. Rumors persist on Wall Street that the nuclear giant, General Electric, will soon be pulling out.

And presently, people are crowding theatres around the country to see "The China Syndrome," a new motion picture about a nuclear reactor accident and an attempted cover-up, starring Jane Fonda and Jack Lemmon. "The China Syndrome" is a fictional thriller to be sure, but its technical reality and balanced script are expected to set the citizenry thinking about the real dangers of nuclear power.

The movement for safe and clean energy is building momentum, but it has not won yet. The building of additional reactors pushes on. However, more and more the public is demanding answers about the safety, cost and reliability of this technology. Is it dangerous? Is it economic? Is it needed?

Now is a good time to review briefly some of the important facts about this hotly debated topic.

1. Nuclear power facilities produce toxins which pose serious health problems. About 40 radioactive elements are produced by nuclear fission. One trillionth of a gram of one of these, plutonium, has caused cancer in laboratory animals. A millionth of a gram can cause massive fibrosis of the lungs, leading to death within days of exposure.

Originally, scientists believed there were "safe" levels of exposure to radiation. But a 13 year federally-funded study by Drs. Thomas Mancuso and Alice Stewart had revealed positive links between different strains of cancer and even minute amounts of radiation. And these findings were supported by a 1979 NEW study and by British studies.

2. Decommissioning reactors and disposing of radioactive wastes present serious, unsolved safety problems. After about 35 years of operation, whole sections of atomic reactors are irreversibly contaminated with radiation, such that routine maintenance cannot be performed. At this point, the NRC says the entire facility must be decommissioned, or "mothballed," for hundreds of years. The entire plant itself becomes radioactive waste and must be contained. The costs of decommissioning may be as much as the original costs of building the reactors.

Moreover, only time can reduce the toxicity of radioactive waste. Plutonium 239 has a half-life of 24,000 years—meaning that in that time the material will have lost only half of its toxicity. Scientists suggest radioactive elements should decay through 10 half-lives before becoming inert. Hence, plutonium must be securely isolated for over 240,000 years.

3. The insurance industry and the nuclear power industry have tacitly admitted the risks of reactor accidents by refusing to accept complete liability for accidents. Take a look at any individual homeowner or auto policy and note the clause excluding protection against nuclear or radiological accidents. No protection against nuclear tragedies is available on the conventional insurance market—anywhere.

To entice private companies to invest in nuclear power, the federal government imposed a ceiling on the amount of financial liability corporations will face in the event of a reactor accident. The government knew the insurance industry would never accept any significant liability, so they passed the Price-Anderson Act in 1956 which limited its liability to a tiny fraction of the damage from an atomic plant melt down.

4. Nuclear power is a marginal energy source, requiring enormous financial expense with low reliability. After all is said and done, it is important to note that nuclear power's total contribution to energy production is three percent. Even if the most ambitious nuclear program were to be realized, at best nuclear power could supply 10 to 12 percent of our total energy needs by the year 2000.

By contrast, the President's Council on Environmental Quality states that "today's fuel consumption levels can be reduced by more than 40 percent" through conservation measures. The Council concludes that it improve our energy productivity, the U.S. should not need more than 10-15 percent more energy by the year 2000. And the government predicts that renewable energy sources—the sun, tides, wind and heat from the earth—could contribute as much as 25 percent of our energy needs by 2000.

What the country needs are energy systems that are safe, clean, reliable—and affordable. Unfortunately, nuclear power doesn't meet any of those basic criteria.

For more information about the nuclear issue, and how to get involved in your area, contact our safe energy group, Critical Mass, P.O. Box 1538, Washington, D.C. 20036.

Seahawk baseball team enters winning streak

The UNCW Seahawk baseball team won five straight games last week, upping their win streak to six and their record to 16-15. It is the first time the team has been above .500 since early in the season, the Hawks defeated Methodist College, Pembroke State, and UNC-Charlotte in single games. They also beat ACC contender Duke two straight in a double-header. Batting leaders for the week were the constant Herbie Dawkins, who hit about .400 to raise his average to a team-leading .376. Dawkins also leads the team in doubles with ten, homeruns with four, and runs batted in with 27. Dawkins, a senior third baseman, has been an instrumental part in a team that has come back from a 10-15 record.

Also high in the hitting lists are outfielders Bubba Baldwin and Ron Peoples. Baldwin is second on the team in hitting with a .347 average. Peoples is hitting .317. Sophomore shortstop John Tallent is hitting .328 after a hot start. Outfielder Richard King is second on the team in RBI's with 18.

The Seahawks, as a team, have a fine team batting average of .286, and are scoring runs at about a 5.5 clip per game. Pitching has been much improved lately. Senior Roger Sutton and Junior David Pope lead in wins with six each. Sutton has thrown a remarkable 102 innings this year, while Pope is the team ERA leader with a 2.11 mark.

The Seahawks play a double-header at Atlantic Christian College today and will have games remaining at home against Charleston Baptist on Friday (7:30 p.m.) and Saturday (2:30 p.m.).

The UNCW athletic teams have experienced an excellent year. It is a tribute to the efforts of the coaches, athletic front office personnel and especially the members of the teams that Seahawk sports have, as a whole, finished with a winning record for the entire school year. As of this week, with six games remaining on the varsity baseball schedule and a post-season tournament left for the women's softball team, the Seahawks have posted a record of 132-107-1 in university sanctioned sports. That is a winning percentage of .552!

Going back to the fall, UNCW got off to a good start. The soccer team, under Coach Calvin Lane, was 11-5-1 and ranked 12th in the south. Women's tennis, coached by Jane Batson, was 7-5. Women's volleyball under first-year Coach Judy Peel was 3-16, although the team was composed mainly of freshmen and sophomores. The club football team competed in the fall and went all the way to the state championship, losing to N.C. State. However, their record is not tallied because they are a club and not a university sponsored team.

In the winter, the Seahawks got a big boost from the men's basketball team. They were 19-8. Coach Mel Gibson's club was also considered for selection to play in the NIT Tournament in New York. Men's swimming under Coach Dave Allen, was 9-2. The women's swimming, also coached by Allen was 2-4, which wasn't bad with only five members. Women's basketball coach Eve Carmen resigned after her young team suffered through a 5-18 season.

As the cold of winter turned back to the warm of spring, UNCW's sports teams took a dramatic upswing. As of this writing, all the spring sports teams have winning records. The varsity baseball team, coached by Bill Brooks and Bobby Guthrie is currently 16-15. The junior varsity, which has completed its season, was 11-7 under coaches Greg Dalton and Ed Finch. Women's softball has been tearing up the competition with a 23-6 record. They are coached by Ann Kraft. Coach Larry Honeycutt's men's tennis team was 15-14.

These were not all the teams that competed for UNCW this year. The cross country team competed in several "open" meets. The golf team competed under a limited schedule with matches at Elon and Pembroke. A crew team competed in meets such as the Azalea Festival meet.

All and all UNCW had a fine season. I would like to wish good luck to all graduating athletes and hope all returning ones will compete with the same success next year.

Tennis team 'nets' winning season

The UNCW men's tennis team completed its season Friday, splitting two matches with East Carolina, en route to a final mark of 15-14.

The Hawks won the first match 5-4, concluding a match suspended earlier in the year due to rain. In singles Paul Gemborsky (no. 1) defeated Love 6-2, 6-1; Rick Watson (no. 4) defeated Campbell 6-1, 6-0; Barry Jackson (no. 5) defeated Cunningham 7-5, 6-4; Chuck Winslow (no. 6) defeated Zingle 6-4, 6-3; and in doubles the no. 1 team of Gemborsky and Sue defeated Love and Winchester 7-5, 6-0. ECU came back strong in the second match, defeating UNCW, 7-2. Winning for UNCW was Chuck Winslow (no. 5) over Zingle 4-6, 6-4, 6-1; and the no. 3 doubles team of Watson and Sumrall over ECU's Winchester and Cunningham 8-4 (pro set).

Prior to the ECU double-header, UNCW had won three of its last six matches. The Easter trip to Virginia provided beautiful scenery and some of the toughest competition the Seahawks faced all season.

UNCW lost to Old Dominion, William and Mary, and Virginia Tech in consecutive matches, each by 9-0 scores. Upon returning home, the Hawks bounced back with a resounding 9-0 victory over Towson State. Then, the team recorded a 9-0 shutout against Pembroke State and a 6-3 victory over Campbell.

Overall the Seahawks played well in the face of probably the toughest group of opponents a UNCW tennis team has ever faced. Old Dominion, William and Mary, Virginia Tech, Armstrong State, Salisbury State, ECU, and UNC-Charlotte all had very strong teams. The grueling 29-match schedule, with 18 road games and 11 at home, was the longest schedule in UNCW tennis history.

Racquetball Club hosts Camp Lejeune

by Mitch Covington

The UNCW Racquetball Club will be winding up its first semester of action soon by hosting the camp LeJeune racquet club in a weekend bout which promises action and excellent racquetball ability. The Seahawk club was started at the beginning of this semester, and has since began blooming into an active inter-collegiate group of enthusiastic members of the student body, faculty and staff. On a recent trip to Raleigh, the Seahawks trounced NCSU's club, requiring the skills of students Chuck Waller, B. J. Smith, J. Medicott, Jerry Monahan, Romaine Lee and Dr. Bob Wolfe, the club's faculty adviser.

In following semesters, the club hopes to travel to other schools across the state, also hosting tournaments and matches. Players are chosen from the top rungs of the ladder which was determined by a club tournament.

It may seem that the club consists only of a small number of players, but actually it is one of the larger clubs on campus, fulfilling also the needs of beginners and intermediate players. The five courts on campus are reserved on Monday and Thursday nights for club members to compete with each other and one court is open to beginners desiring instruction. Any student, faculty or staff member, male or female, wishing to improve their game or meet other players of equal potential is invited to attend the reserved court time or contact the following:

Mitch Covington, 458-8310; Dr. Bob Wolff, 392-0541; Jerry Monahan, 791-9292; or Romaine Lee, 791-1750.

Junior Varsity closes season on winning note

The UNCW Junior Varsity baseball team completed their season on a fine note last week. The Seahawks, coached by Greg Dalton and "Steady" Eddie Finch defeated Chowan College last Wednesday and took a doubleheader from Lenoir Community College on Saturday, 8-3 and 5-2.

On Wednesday the Hawks faced the Braves of Chowan on a neutral sight in Kinston, N.C. With a fine pitching performance by freshmen Phi Vanderbosh and Al Morris the Hawks won handily. The game was highlighted by some excellent fielding by shortstop Tim Whitehead, who was injured in making one diving grab.

On Saturday, the Seahawk J.V.'s again traveled to Kinston to take on the Lenior Lancers. With two complete games, one by Ron Inman, who won the first game, and Jeff Cole, UNCW managed their first doubleheader of the season. The UNCW J.V.'s final record was 11-7.

St. Leo, Ferrum highlight Football Club schedule

St. Leo's is a NCAA Division III football team and should prove a very good opponent for UNCW.

Ferrum Junior College was the National Champs two years ago and have a very tough ball team. They dress about 85 players.

Gallaudet is a fine football team and will give UNCW a hard ballgame.

The rest of the teams are all returning games from last year's schedule. UNCW has beaten them all.

N.C. State and UNCW should once again battle for league title.

All interested students who think they may want to play next year--all of this year's returning players--and anyone who would like to help next year:

There will be a meeting Thursday, April 26th at 3:30 in Room 119 Trask gym.

Everyone must attend this meeting.

Anyone with equipment must bring it at this time.

Dave Wolff

Wolff named MVP

by John Justus, UNCW S.I.D.

Senior co-captain Dave Wolff, the leading scorer and rebounder for the 1978 UNC-Wilmington basketball team, was awarded the Most Valuable Player plaque at the Seahawks' annual awards banquet here last Friday (Apr. 20).

Wolff, a native of Indianapolis, Ind., who was also a nominee for Academic All-American honors, averaged 16.9 points and 7.7 rebounds to lead UNCW to its second straight 19-victory season.

Also receiving awards at the dinner, which featured Texas basketball coach Abe Lemons as the main speaker, were senior guard Ralph Peterson, who earned the team sportsmanship honor, and sophomore Danny Davis, who was voted the most improved player on the squad.

UNCW head coach Mel Gibson also presented certificates to all 13 team members and gave special recognition to the Seahawks' four seniors--Wolff, Peterson, Delaney Jones and Art Paschal.

Women's softball team cruises into playoffs with 23-6 record

The women's softball team, under the direction of Coach Ann Kraft, continued their winning ways this season, posting a 23-6 record.

The results of the last two regular season games that took place in Raleigh on Monday against North Carolina State were not available at press time.

During the month of April the Seahawks won 13 out of 16 games. Early April victories came against Pembroke State 6-3, St. Andrews College 23-0 and 27-3, Methodist College 13-0, St. Augustine College 15-2 and 9-2, and NCCU 6-5 and 12-5.

Defeats during this same period included a 9-1 loss to Elon College and a 5-4 deficit to UNCC.

The team's most recent wins came against East Carolina University 3-2, Campbell College 5-4 and 6-2 (these two victories put the Hawks over the 20-game winning mark), and Chowan College 13-3 and 17-2. In another contest with ECU the Pirates beat the Seahawks 7-3.

Producing one of the top teams in the state, the Hawks will go into post-season play tomorrow as the State Division

II Tournament begins in Graham, North Carolina.

With the potent offense and tough defense that produced a winning season for the Seahawks, the team has an excellent change of still being in Graham on Saturday when the tourney comes to a close.

In any case, congratulations are in order to Coach Kraft and the team on an outstanding season.

Looking briefly to next season, the Hawks will bring back the entire squad. It appears that future success will be in store for the UNCW women's softball team in the coming years.

Work study positions available

There will be work-study positions available on campus for both sessions of summer school. Interested students should file applications with the Financial Aid Office, room 110, Alderman Building as soon as possible. Eligibility is based upon a family financial statement.

Cross's newest album-- Bounty Hunter

Flash: "There are no mos quitos in North Carolina be cause the snakes ate them all." This, as you might guess was cited off of the long awaited new Mike Cross al bum, The Bounty Hunter.

In 1977 during freshman orientation there was a guy sitting on the ping pong table in the Pub, picking his heart out. Admission was free so he got quite a crowd. This crowd of people and numerous others who have seen him perform has made Mike Cross a legend in Wilmington.

I was hoping to get to review a Cross' new album being that his is no last review of the out and the album just came out. I wanted to review an album about someone can relate to.

Mike Cross has come a long way from when he sat on that ping pong table. On his first album, Child Prodigy, Cross played a fiddle, harp and acoustic guitars. On his latest LP Cross broadens the array with a bostring, 12-string acoustic, fiddle, viola, 8-string banjo and a dulcimer.

Cross has definitely improved since his second album, Born in the Country. On The Bounty Hunter Cross leans more towards the serious ballad rather than a cut with the humor of the Scotsman.

Cross again wrote most of the songs on his LP but was again helped out by Larry Reynolds and of course there are versions of traditional material.

The most beautiful song on the LP is the cut "Kentuck Song" which flows and is as peaceful as the song was meant to be.

As for his serious ballad on the LP the title cut fulfills the request. "The Bounty Hunter" is a moving cut which tells of what lengths some of us must go through just to survive.

The fiddling song I liked on the disc was "Scratchy Fiddle Boogie Blues." In the cut you get some great fiddling and some of Cross' humor all together.

The two songs which most fit the style of the old Cross like he was on his first album are "Best Drunk in Town" and "Liquor in the Well." Other cuts on the LP include: "Old Paint Peeling," "Merry Sisters Reel/Fair Headed Mary," "Write Me a Love Song," "The Lord'll Provide," "Bonnie Prince Charlie/Road to Lisduvanna/Lark in the Morning," and "Wake Up My Love."

Atlantis proves to be good reading

Interest in the Atlantis, UNCW's literary magazine, seems to be growing. The material published in this semester's issue supports this belief and provides very good reading.

"The Touch" by Robert Welchel is a beautifully written story telling of the last thoughts of an 84-year-old woman dying alone in a hospital bed. She relives her past and tries to communicate with the stranger left there to watch over her. Welchel's very simple and moving story is the first place winner of the 1979 Jessie Rehder Short Story Contest.

Sherry Nivon's story "Hydrangea Hats and Baby Songs" is a reflective look into the past, a look at all life's setbacks and the strange injustice. The injustice is not related through the first person narrator, but it creeps in on its own.

Another moving story is Joanna George's tragic tale of Jerry Byrd, a retarded youth refusing to give up, in "Coming Home."

"Pieta," by Ellen Honeycutt, provokes powerful emotion. In this story a woman outcast by her illegitimate son looks at him in death and relives the past which led to the tragic present.

On the level of suspense and mystery is Gregg Glickstein's story "The Dead Can't Bite You." The romantic island setting is a perfect atmosphere for a murder.

Aside from the prose the Atlantis contains a representative amount of student poetry. From time to time the reader stops to ask, "what does it all mean?"

The poetry of Catherine Bell reflects the human condition. "John Hardy's Sixteenth Birthday" is a poem of substance showing a boy's struggles to be a man in a man's world.

Bell's "The Last of the Forty-Niners" is full of symbols and could be man's search for the reason for being. He comes up empty handed.

Moving away from reality and venturing into fantasy is Richard Long's "Bucked Space." The poem is powerful, yet beautiful.

Vicki James projects the ugly reality of severed love and dependance in "Exorcism."

"Domestic Drudgery" is Dianne Russell's interpretation of the day-in, day-out repetitive life of a housewife.

On a different key, Bobbi Padgett's haiku are representative of the Oriental style of poetry spoken in few words, but indicative of great thought.

"Hidden Beast" by Padgett is a very good piece of poetry. The symbolism is strong, yet the tools are simple.

Chip Plyler works with images and symbolism in "New Shoes." This poem is symbolic without leading away from reality.

"Artillery Fern" is a lovely poem by Kelly Morris. The interpretation of life is simple yet unusual.

"Fall Flower" by Joanna George is an opposite view of life. Her flower does not survive.

On the lighter side is Dianne Russell's clever work "Fault-line." Alas, the fret of many a fair maiden!

The time has come which many college students nationwide dread: selecting living companions for the summer and next school year.

Compatibility seems to come about only by trial and error. After having spent three years in a residence hall, I have seen it all.

In Galloway Hall, residents have to cohabitate with only one other person while the remaining dormitories have quite different living conditions. Two and four room suites comprise Belk and Hewlett halls as well as the dorm under construction.

Roommates should be a number of persons existing within confines, with similar interests and common knowledge, but most of all, friends. The latter has proven to be the ultimate in coexistence.

But being friends with someone and living with them are two different things. Don't get me wrong, living with enemies isn't all that bad (the bad guys know where they stand) but, it sometimes makes matters that much more difficult.

If you like to sweep and dust and rearrange your room twice a day, find another "neatoholic" to share your constantly changing environment.

If you're known as a habitual slob, someone not quite as messy as yourself is your best bet. Your room/suite might not be too neat, but it will look lived in and slightly comfortable.

Now, getting away from cleaning habits, let us turn our attention to personalities. One of the most important factors in living with someone is their attitude.

The ability to get along with others is essential. You may think that you can get along with just about anybody...until you are forced to live with someone with a different frame of mind.

If you like to stomp around at 7 in the morning, slamming every drawer and door in sight, while others don't have classes for three or four more hours, you should live alone.

If, on the other hand, you are quiet as a mouse in the shower, while blow-drying your hair, and getting dressed, you should be commended for your efforts and awarded the "Best Roommate Candidate" medal.

All in all, roommates can survive if, and only if you try to keep everything in the open and discuss any problems whether large or small.

UNCW may receive trawler

UNCW is one of several universities bidding for a trawler seized by federal drug enforcement officials and now docked in Wilmington which would be used by the marine science program.

According to administration officials, the university stands a good chance of securing the 72-foot vessel because of the strong marine science program here and the fact that it is docked in Wilmington.

Vice-chancellor for Business Affairs Jairy Hunter said Monday that no word has yet been received from the National Science Foundation, which will determine the fate of the trawler.

Hunter told the university Board of Trustees earlier this month that because the trawler is confiscated property, it will not cost the university to obtain it.

The estimated value of the vessel is a quarter of a million dollars.

Maintenance of the trawler would be financed through federal grants.

Walkway or sign?

Trustees debate priorities

by Bobby Parker
Editor

A plan to renovate the central entrance to campus, which has been closed to traffic for several years now, and create a scenic walkway was given a less-than-enthusiastic reception by members of the Board of Trustees at their meeting earlier this month.

The plan, outlined for the board by Chancellor William Wagoner, would have a brick walkway built over what now is a asphalt surface.

One trustee criticized the plan because it failed to include building a sign for the university near the entrance.

"I really think there should be a sign," said trustee Ann Davis.

Both the sign and the walkway have been a topic of discussion at trustee meetings for the past couple of years.

Chancellor Wagoner has repeatedly expressed concern about improving the appearance of the entrance by renovating the roadway, which extends from the central campus mall to highway 132.

Trustee Davis and other board members have repeatedly pointed out the need for some sort of identifying sign for the university near the highway. Wagoner has also endorsed the need for the sign.

The conflict, then, may be a case of priorities: Does the sign come before the walkway, or the walkway before the sign?

Wagoner said the cost of the proposed walkway would be approximately $9000. This would cover necessary and apparently expensive drainage work when the road is bricked over.

Wagoner also said that donations for the project had been pledged by the UNCW Foundation, $3500, and the Alumni Association, $1000.

But Mrs. Davis said there should be a sign out front before spending $9000 on the walkway.

Trustee Roi Penton took a different angle to the situation. A walkway there would "funnel pedestrians to what?" she asked, noting that when they reached the end of the relatively short walkway, pedestrians would be in the street.

Mrs. Penton inquired as to whether other walkways would be built leading from the entrance to other parts of campus, but Wagoner said no such additional walks are planned.

SGA President and ex-office board member Francis DeLuca asked the approximate cost of a sign. Wagoner said he had no estimate.

The Chancellor said, however, that he would explore the possibility of incorporating a sign into the walkway plans.

Swink to close summer theatre after 20 years

by Elizabeth Shoaf
Features Editor

When you think of summer, what comes to mind? For a local theater buff, Straw Hat Theater is usually thought of first.

This year will be the first summer in twenty years without a Straw Hat Theater production because Doug Swink, the producer/director, has decided to discontinue the tradition.

"Twenty years is long enough for any one person to do something," says Swink. He claims he holds three jobs: first as a teacher, second as manager of Kenan Auditorium, and third as producer/director of Straw Hat Theater. "Since I wasn't getting paid for one, that's the one I'll quit," Swink comments.

"I have found out that if a person holds onto something very tenaciously for a long time, he has a tendency to let his work slip. Then he starts copping out and he ends up lowering standards," adds Swink.

Last summer was the twentieth season of Straw Hat Theater. In 1958, "The Imaginary Invalid" was presented. Later, two plays were presented each summer, then it was extended to three. Finally, six to seven plays were shown during the summer, plus two children's plays yearly.

Swink admits that he has no regrets about the theater for the last 20 years. He says that everyone he worked with, associated with, directed with, or who had any connections with Straw Hat Theater was wonderful. The plays always kept up the standards of the theater and were appreciated and admired.

Some of the people who worked with Straw Hat Theater are in professional theater now, some are teaching, others still live in the area. Rick Vance, of Cincinnati, Ohio, who played the leading role in the first play in 1958, returned to direct the production of "Godspell" presented by the Straw Hat Theater in 1978.

This summer, Swink plans to fish and garden since he will not be working with Straw Hat Theater. As a tribute to the closing show, Swink adds with a dramatic gesture, "Like all good actors, I want to close the curtain with the applause still ringing and the audience wanting more."

Ahh, the care package from home.

Now comes Miller time.

Controversy surrounds Nikki Bane

by Julie Russ

Like many flourishing campuses, UNCW has undergone several changes in recent months. One such change involves a staff upheaval and the subsequent resignation of SGA administrative assistant Nikki Bane.

Ms. Bane, who has held her

position for approximately two and a half years, will officially relinquish her duties as of September 1. There is widespread controversy concerning the reasons for her departure. Also there is some disagreement as to whether Ms. Bane chose to resign or was fired.

When contacted, Ms. Bane offered her version of the incidents which led to the termination of her job. "(SGA President) Francis DeLuca and I had a somewhat strained relationship, and he requested my resignation about two days after he took office. On May 4 he wrote a letter to Dr. William Malloy, asking that my position be reclassified to that of a clerk/typist, and my hours increased from four to eight daily. Then I was asked to submit a job description to the State Personnel department in Raleigh."

Francis DeLuca

As a result, Ms. Bane's post was reclassified as that of a clerk/typist, and her required hours were extended to forty per week. According to both Bane and Malloy, she was given until August 15 to decide if she wanted to accept her new position.

In the interim, due to conflicts involving DeLuca and Bane, Bane was bereft of signatory authority. Her signature was no longer valid on various financial forms processed through SGA channels.

DeLuca stated, "I felt Ms.

Bane was not fulfilling her duties and that she was possibly mishandling the books as well."

Continued DeLuca, "I believe we need someone in her capacity who is more accessible to the students. Four hours a day just isn't enough." DeLuca also added that Ms. Bane's salary was "more than fair for the amount of hours she put in."

Bane asked for and received a grievance committee hearing August 10. Her original intent was to file charges against Malloy and Kathy Kiger, Personnel Director at UNCW. According to DeLuca, Bane decided to drop the charges, even though charges had previously been lodged against her by DeLuca. "Nikki mishandled situations many times," declared DeLuca.

At the time of the hearing, Malloy advised Bane "that it would be best for me to vacate the SGA office," explained Bane. She accepted a temporary opening at the Institute of Biomedical Research, located at Wrightsville Beach.

Commented Bane, "I have no bitterness, but I am sorry to see what is happening to the SGA. But I hold no grudges against Francis or Dr. Malloy."

Dr. William Malloy

Dr. Malloy remarked, "I hope this shift is all to the good. I have no quarrel with Nikki...in fact, I'm sorry this ever happened but perhaps it's for the best."

SGA president DeLuca concluded: "There will be a qualified clerk/typist filling Ms. Bane's staff position as of September 3."

Fixler replaces Welch as food service manager in an attempt to improve school menu

by Byron Naylor

One of the newest additions to the UNCW campus is Nadine Fixler. She is the new Food Service Manager and will be replacing Phil Welch. Ms. Fixler is a native of Phoenix, Arizona but has spent most of her life traveling around the country and working with the Professional Food Management Service. She has been associated with the PFM at Case Western Reserve Univ. in Cleveland, Ohio, Northwestern University in Chicago, Illinois, and the University of Evansville in Indiana.

Ms. Fixler said that food service managers have the option to transfer when a new position becomes available and she usually jumps at the chance to move. Ms. Fixler said, "I'm not a desk person. I like to be up and running around."

Some of the problems she is faced with are personnel shortages, menu schedules, and one of the biggest problems is finding what we Wilmington students like to eat. She said that tastes are different around the country. For instance, Cleveland didn't like chicken but it seems that we Seahawks love it. She said that the first couple of weeks is guess work and that, "in the beginning all you can do is hope and pray. We were almost wiped out the first day."

When asked how she compared UNCW to other campuses around the nation she said that she thought it was just beautiful here. "The people are very friendly." She has only been in Wilmington about two months but has found time to visit the battleship and the beach.

With the help of Tim Tyree, buying and service manager, and Howard Poole, production manager, Ms. Fixler is looking forward to her job as the new food service manager on the Seahawk Campus.

A welcome from the Chancellor

It hardly seems possible that the summer months are almost behind us and that a new academic year has begun. That is the case—and classes are already in full swing with the largest enrollment ever here at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington. I am very pleased to welcome each of our students and particularly those who are attending UNCW for the first time. Our records show that over 960 freshmen and 380 transfer students are new to our campus.

I sincerely hope that all of us can help these newcomers to feel at home and to understand the friendly atmosphere which we strive to nurture.

My very best wishes for a most successful year are extended to each of you.

Dr. William H. Wagoner

Francis DeLuca

Greetings from SGA president DeLuca

Welcome back to campus. We are at the start of a fresh year and hopefully will make the most of it. This is first a short note to let everyone in on what is going on.

There will be a meeting of the Student Government Association Legislature in C-218 on Thursday, Sept. 6, at 7 p.m. All students are urged to attend. There will be a new employee in the SGA office starting Sept. 3, 1979. The office will be open from 8-5 daily to better serve the students. I invite everyone to stop in and say hello.

Ford did it, now its Carter's turn

If you had a sense of deja vu while reading the news last week, there's a reason for it. The argument about whether the President should have been out giving whistle-stop speeches is one we have heard before.

Maybe not in exactly the same terms, but close enough to suggest that someone has flipped the calendar backward exactly four years, and has written in Jimmy Carter's name where they previously had used Jerry Ford's.

Knowingly or not, President Carter has hit on exactly the same tactic his predecessor used in the late summer and fall of 1975 in an effort to bolster his own sagging political fortunes. And he is catching the same kind of flack for it that President Ford did.

All this past week, as I read of Carter plunging happily into crowds in the Mississippi River towns where the "Delta Queen" docked, and then saw the editorialists complaining that he should have been at his White House desk instead, I had a feeling I'd been through this before.

And, sure enough, the clips confirm that in this same month of 1975, Ford was moving through much the same territory addressing the American Legion in Minneapolis, visiting the Iowa state fair, dedicating a library in Pekin, Ill.

Just as there was not a canoeist on the Upper Mississippi who was safe from being accosted by the eager-to-press-the-flesh Carter, so in 1975 there was not a convention in America that was immune from being anesthetized by some of Ford's stem-winders.

The National Hardware Week convention heard him. So did the people trying to dedicate a hospital in Fort Smith, Ark. So did the National Federation of Republican Women and the National Association of Life Underwriters, and a score of similar groups.

Somewhere in this blue of stops, William V. Shannon of the New York Times wrote a barbed column decrying "a week of unnecessary inspecting, dedicating, speechifying. Mr. Ford's big discovery in this year," Shannon said, "is that if he gets away from his desk often enough, the presidency is not too hard a job."

Rereading those words, the thought crossed my mind that my friend Shannon is now comfortably ensconced as the American ambassador to Ireland, thanks to Jimmy Carter. If I could just unleash equally heavy ammunition against the junketing Carter, who knows? Maybe his successor would send me to Tobago or Sierra Leone.

AN EDITORIAL

Tempting as that is, I just can't bring myself to dump on the Carter cruise. What I can say is that I think it's motivated by the same conceit that gripped Jerry Ford four years ago and that it is likely to be just as futile for Carter as it was for Ford.

It was Ford's notion that by getting out around the country and receiving the cheers of the multitudes, he would not only lift his own spirits from their Washington summer doldrums, but persuade his potential challenger, Ronald Reagan, that he better not try to unseat.

Ford kept going to California to show Reagan how popular he was, even though mindless ladies kept shooting guns at him out there.

But, for one reason or another, Reagan wasn't bluffed, and Ford had to fight like the dickens for renomination.

Carter is out running around for much the same reason. He believes--I am told on good authority--that the next 60 to 90 days are crucial for his 1980 plans. That can only mean that he hopes to show enough support from the public and the political leaders of his own party in that period of time to dissuade Sen. Edward Kennedy from running against him.

This is a perfectly fine objective, and one eminently worth seeking, for as Ford can testify, it's tough to win an election after fighting a popular figure in your own party for the better part of a year.

So this President, like the last, will probably be driven off the campaign trail he loves so well and back into the White House.

While going through the clips, I came across a story by the Washington Post's Lou Cannon, reporting that, "President Ford's advisers have agreed he should counter Ronald Reagan's forthcoming challenge by spending more time 'being presidential' and less time on the road."

The date of that story was Nov. 19, 1975. In about three months, I expect, you'll be reading that President Carter's advisers are telling him the same thing.

May I see your ID, please?"
My what?"
Your ID. You know—picture, name, number."
Oh, my student ID."
Yes, that's it. May I see it?"
No. Matter-of-factly.
What?"
No."
What do you mean, no?"
You asked me a question, right?"
Yes, I did.
and I get two choices, right? I pick no."
Listen, kid, if you want to go to the bookstore, you've got to have your ID."
Why? Sincerely.
Why? Indignantly.
I asked you first.
What are you trying to prove? Can't you read?"
Sure I can."
Well, then you can read that sign right there which says that you've got to have an ID to get in the bookstore."

Rules, signs say you have to have identification card

"Why?"
"I just told you."
"Oh, now let me get this straight. I have to have my ID to get into the bookstore because that sign says so."
"No, not exactly." Patiently.
"You see, that sign says you have to have your ID because that's the rule."
"Law of the land, huh?"
"Something like that. Look, wise guy, you're beginning to bother me. Do you want to go in or not?"
"As a matter of fact, I do."
"Then just show me your ID and you can go."
"Well, friend—to tell you the truth, I don't have an ID."
"Are you a student?"
"Yes."
"But you don't have an ID?"
"Well, it's kind of a long story. You see, I have this dog that loves the taste of plastic. You know—plastic bones, plastic fruit, plastic flowers, . . . and plastic IDs."

"You got it."
"Why don't you get a new one?"
"Well, I didn't really like the old one. I never could take a good picture. Always looked like an exhibit out of the Smithsonian."
"Well, you still need an ID."
"Oh, I don't know. I never liked the idea of carrying an ID card in the first place. Made me feel like 1984."
"Nineteen-eighty? For what?"
"That's 1984. You know . . . well, maybe you don't."

"Well, anyway, you should get a new ID. You need it."
"For what?"
"Well, for basketball games."
"Don't go to basketball games. They won't ever let me in the door, say I've got to have an ID."
"See?"
"No, I don't see. What's the difference if I don't have an ID?"
"The difference is, you don't get in the bookstore without it. Besides, how else would we know you're a student?"

"I told you that ten minutes ago. Anyway, if I weren't a student, why would I be coming into the student bookstore to buy student textbooks?"
"Well, I don't know. But I don't make the rules here. I just follow orders."
"Hey, I tell you what. I'll give you the money and you can go in and buy my books for me. I've got to be in class in 10 minutes."
"Oh, I don't know about that."

No dogs on campus

In the interests and welfare of the community of people who are concerned with what also exists on the University, it has become necessary to establish the following rules concerning the presence of dogs on our campus.

The General Basic Rule is: NO DOGS SHALL BE BROUGHT ON CAMPUS.
The exceptions to this rule are listed below:

1. "Seeing Eye" dogs in the performance of their duty.

2. Dogs who accompany their masters enroute to another destination and remain in a car. Under NO circumstances shall a dog run loose or be brought into any dormitory, library or any other type of building on campus.

Although dogs are referred to specifically, this policy applies to all "pets" in the broad context of the term.

together and I paid for more than half of it. But it is registered in his name. Each of us was to have use of it.

Now he has split-left town with the car. Does the law say I can get my money back from him?

A. The law says (Am. Jur. 2d Ref: Breach of Contract, Sec. 48, et seq) if you and a guy (both of legal age) agreed to buy a car, you paid for more than half of it, and he has left with the car, he has repudiated your agreement.

You may recover damages for the loss you sustained because of the breach. This would include the amount you paid, plus interest.

Gradt replaces Greene as new assistant director of student activities

by Tricia Wallace

Fall is here again and that means saying goodbye to summer and hello to books, old routines and old friends.

As usual it also means saying hello to some new faces on campus. One new face is Steve Gradt, the new assistant director of student activities.

Steve grew up in Bonne Terre, Missouri and got his Bachelor's degree in industrial arts at Southeast Missouri State.

He taught a shop class in St. Louis for one year before going back to school at the University of Missouri and received his master's in Counseling and Student Personnel. While there, he managed the Student Union and other student activities.

After graduating, he went to East Stroudsburg State in Pennsylvania and served as the advisor for the College Union Board. He was also responsible for the College Center on nights and weekends.

He then returned to the University of Missouri for an interim position of one semester as program advisor for student activities.

After this period, his career took a different direction. He became a booking agent for Variety Artists International in Minneapolis, Minnesota for about five months. His job was to engage concerts for such groups as the Ohio Players, the Beach Boys, Pure Prairie League, and the Dixie Dregs, to name a few.

Steve's outside interests are music, jogging, baseball, furniture-making, and snowskiing--"downhill only," he says.

In the short time he has been here, Steve has already fallen in love with UNCW. He likes the area and the close atmosphere of a small school. "I'm really excited about it," Steve says. "I'll be working as a liaison between the students and the administration. Students should feel free to come by anytime. I like a relaxed open-type atmosphere."

Although only 25 years old, Steve Gradt carries much experience with him. Yet he is still young enough to relate to us as students and understand our problems. In talking with him, Steve seemed to be a very warm and open person.

Linda Moore, Director of Student Activities, says, "I'm looking forward to a real exciting year and sharing it with Steve. He has a very solid background in activities and brings a very high level of expertise to this job. I'm real pleased that Steve has chosen UNCW and we will gain much from his being here."

Steve has only been here since August 1 but he already has a good outlook on the coming year at UNCW. "I don't see myself as a person trying to change things. I'm more of a resource person trying to help students with legal aspects like contracts and university and state regulations and make them aware of them."

Steve's office is located at 101 in the student affairs building.

Writing center offers individual tutoring and counseling

Students who may have difficulty with their writing should take advantage of the services of the Writing Center. The Writing Center's service is provided without charge by the English Department. All UNCW students are welcome to use the center regardless of whether they are enrolled in a composition course.

The center offers individual tutoring and counseling in all types of writing. Students may drop by the Writing Center at any time, but if they attend regularly they will usually notice quicker results.

During their visits, students write and discuss their writing with an instructor. The center's staff helps them with the process of invention, organization, copyreading and revision, and also with the mechanics of punctuation and syntax.

The Writing Center is located in room 105 of the new classroom building. The hours that it is open vary each semester but are posted outside the Writing Center door. For further information contact Lil Brannon, extension 2328, in the English Department.

"Why not? Come on, we're old buddies. We've known each other for almost twenty minutes."

"But I have to stay on my job."

"It'll only take 5 minutes. I'll stand here while you're gone. What do you say?"

"Well . . . I've never been asked to do something like this before. Maybe just this once. But you ought to get another ID as soon as you can."

"Oh, I will, I will."
"OK, but don't you let anyone by this door unless they show their ID."

"I won't, I won't."

"And don't you tell anyone I did this. I can't be making a habit of it."

"Don't worry about it. Here's the money and a list of books. Thanks a lot, friend."

"Now you stay there and don't let anyone in without their ID. You got that?"

"I got it."

"I'll be right out." Opening the door.

"Oh, wait just a minute."

"What is it now?"

"May I see your ID?"

Scholarships announced by Penn

A college scholarship program expanding opportunities in higher education for men and women 50 years of age and older has been established by Colonial Penn Group, Inc., it was announced today by Herbert J. Grubb, president of the company.

Five major colleges and universities have been selected to participate in the 1979-80 Colonial Penn Elder Scholars Program. Wellesley College, Northwestern University, University of Missouri at Columbia, Arizona State University and University of Miami each will be provided with three one thousand dollar Colonial Penn scholarships to be offered to older students.

Scholarship recipients will be selected by committees designated by each school. These committees will be responsible for selecting individuals who best reflect an "ageless" attitude and enthusiasm toward learning and self-fulfillment, exemplifying the many opportunities available to older Americans in continuing their education. The scholarship awards will be announced in September, 1979.

Stated Grubb, "We hope that through the Elder Scholars Program, colleges will be better able to recognize the lifetimes of learning achievement and the ambitions of older Americans, and help these students obtain their degrees."

Colonial Penn Group, Inc., headquartered in Philadelphia, is the nation's leading multiline insurer specializing in coverage for individuals 50 years of age and older.

We want to be the best bank in the neighborhood.

SOCCER

Seahawks working hard for September 7 debut

by John Justus

UNCWilmington soccer coach Calvin Lane likes to make sure his prospective team members stay busy throughout their preseason period. And if Lane's three-a-day workout plan doesn't do the job, nothing will.

More than 20 candidates for spots on the 1979 Seahawk roster have been participating in the grueling practice routine this week as UNCW prepares for what should be another outstanding season.

The 'Hawks, 11-5-1 and 12th-ranked in the South a year ago, open on Sept. 7-8 in UNC-Charlotte's Four Points Tournament, then face North Carolina here on Sept. 12 in their home debut.

In order to be ready for the 17-game schedule, the Seahawks prepare during the preseason in early morning conditioning, afternoon skills sessions, and evening scrimmages.

"We have to work very hard this week," Lane says, "because classes begin on Monday—a little earlier than usual."

"Nearly everyone came back in good physical shape, but we still have much to accomplish before we're ready for actual game competition."

With seven starters return-

Chi Chi Mercado

ing, including All-South performers John Miller and Erwin Mercado, and the momentum of consecutive 11-win seasons, Lane has good reason for excitement as he looks toward the 1979 season.

With the loss of scoring leaders Gil Castilla and Eddie Brock, and the most formidable schedule in school history, however, Lane's excitement may quickly turn to anxiety as he awaits the upcoming year and the task of molding another successful team of Seahawks.

UNCW's 11-5-1 record and 12th-place ranking in the South of a year ago would have been outstanding had it not come on the heels of 1977's 11-5 mark and a final rating of seventh in the South.

Now, with the likes of national power Appalachian joining other regional contenders such as North Carolina, South Carolina, N.C. State, William & Mary and Baltimore, Lane must once again face the prospect of fielding an even better squad but owning a less impressive record at season's end due to the difficulty of the schedule.

"Everyone talks about how tough their schedule is, I guess," Lane says, "but I'll stack ours up against anyone's in the South. We have 11 or 12 quality players, but an injury here or there can hurt us more than it might a larger school with more depth."

"We also often face the problem of playing two or three 'big games' in a row," Lane continues, "and it's hard to ask your players to be mentally and physically at their peak every time out."

Lane knows, though, that he can count on sweeper back John Miller for a superior performance every game. A former junior college All-America at Prince George Community College (Md.), Miller was a fourth-team All-South pick last year and should be considered for even higher honors this season.

The Seahawks' other All-South (third team) performer is Erwin (Chi Chi) Mercado, a quick-footed forward, who scored 13 goals and had five assists in 1978.

Other returning starters include two-year veteran Charlie Ingold in goal, sophomore Ed Donahue at forward, and backs Matt Wight, Nick Stephanos and Doug Powell. Senior Ashley Dixon, who was a '78 starter until an injury sidelined him midway through the year, also should gain a first-string berth.

Chief losses from last year's club were forwards Gil Castilla, UNCW's second leading career scorer (57 goals in three seasons) and Eddie Brock (11 goals, eight assists last year). Also missing are Ted Kort and Gary Wade, who co-captained the '78 squad with Brock.

Lane will be counting on sophomores Dennis Davis, Keith Donnelly and Rusty Aman to step into more prominent roles, with newcomers Dave Karlson, Paul Felsner, Doug Allman and Mike Ruth also ready to contribute right away.

In addition to the opponents mentioned above, UNCW will also be hosting the first Port City Classic—a two-day affair featuring teams from Jacksonville, UNC-Charlotte and N.C. Wesleyan. The Seahawks, who were champions of the Harbor Front Classic in Norfolk, Va., last year, will also be participating in UNCC's Four Points Tournament in early September—an event won by the Seahawks in 1977.

Other top regular season contests involve roadtrips to Maryland-Baltimore County and Methodist, plus home matches with Atlantic Christian, East Carolina, Campbell and Duke.

"We realize the challenge before us," Lane concludes, "but I don't think our players would want it any other way. If we want recognition, then we must play the best schedule possible—and that always makes for an exciting season from beginning to end."

Hawks post best mark in nine years

The best winning percentage in UNCW's nine years of Summer League baseball play was just good enough for second place this summer as the Seahawks finished 21-10, two games behind league champion North Carolina.

Coach Bobby Guthrie's squad also wound up runnerup to the Tar Heels in the postseason tournament, played in Chapel Hill.

"We set a goal before the season began in June to try and improve as the season went along," Guthrie said recently, "and I think that we accomplished this."

"Naturally, we'd have liked to have won the championship, but I'm very pleased with the progress we made, which will undoubtedly contribute to our having a better squad next spring."

Bill Austin

Team balance had to be one of the Seahawk keys to their success. Eight players hit over .280, led by senior centerfielder Bill Austin's .352 average, good enough for fifth place in the league.

Sophomore Clyde Holley, who joined the team midway through the summer, also hit .352 in 15 games. Fellow sophomores Gary Chadwick and Tim Whitehead—both members of the UNCW j.v.'s last spring—also finished strong with .317 and .300 averages respectively.

The 'Hawks set five new school records for hitting in Summer League play, including batting average (.281), runs scored (209), doubles (52), triples (11) and stolen bases (53).

Individually, Whitehead established a new mark for steals with 16, while firstbaseman John Milkovits' nine doubles also was a UNCW best.

Pitching leaders for the Seahawks were seniors David Pope and Mike Williams, both totaling more than 80 innings for the summer.

Williams had an outstanding summer, going 9-4 with 48 strikeouts. Pope finished 5-5, despite having a team-best earned run average at 3.28, just ahead of Williams' 3.29.

Other fine pitching came from Jeff Cole and Ronald Inman, both 3-0, and Rusty Wagstaff, 3-1.

The seahawks started fast

Mike Williams

with five straight wins before dropping their first game at Chapel Hill. In the summer, UNCW defeated Carolina three out of four times at Brooks Field, but lost all four contests played on the Tar Heels' home field.

In fact, Carolina put together a perfect 18-0 record at home during the summer, compared to a very average 8-8 mark on the road.

A midseason slump saw UNCW fall to 13-8, but the Seahawks recovered to win six straight and stay on Carolina's heels throughout the summer.

Seven Seahawks participated in the league all-star game in July. They were: Richard Foy, John Tallent, John Milkovits and Mike Williams—all starters, and Tim Whitehead, Jim Montague and David Pope as reserves.

Although only five teams took part in the league this summer, the outlook for 1980 is optimistic. Both Campbell and East Carolina, two previous members, have indicated that they will re-join the competition next year.

Want to help others while you learn about yourself?

Want interesting out-of-class experiences?

These and many other questions may be answered when students volunteer their time and talents to help serve citizens of the Wilmington community. Approximately 55 social service agencies in the area have requested help in a vast assortment of situations. The choice is yours: you may decide to assist the handicapped, elderly or children; you can work with a group or just one individual; you can be a leader or assistant; you can become involved in social recreational or academic activities.

A large amount of time is not required. As little as an hour a week would be most welcome.

Working in conjunction with the downtown Cape Fear Voluntary Action Center, Director of Student Activities Linda Moore is able to give students detailed information on opportunities in and around Wilmington. Check out the variety of situations with which you can help by contacting the Student Activities Office in the Pub, or by calling the Cape Fear Voluntary Action Center at 762-9611.

University provides student health care

The Student Health Center, staffed by either a family nurse practitioner or physician's associate, is a service paid for by all students (both on- and off-campus residents) enrolled in six or more credit hours. Located near the lobby of Dormitory '79, the Health Center is open from 8:30 a.m. to 2 p.m., Monday through Friday, and a physician is on call 24 hours a day.

The center is equipped to handle all kinds of health situations including diagnosis and treatment of general medical disorders, common infections, diseases, and minor trauma.

The university has entered into an agreement with Wilmington Health Associates to provide general out-patient diagnostic and treatment services similar to those provided in their general office. Out-patient professional services provided by Wilmington Health Associates in the Health Service Center, dormitory, emergency room, and general offices of the Wilmington Health Associates are covered in the agreement.

It is important to note that any in-patient hospital expenses, hospital emergency room charges, or fees incurred in treatment by non-Wilmington Health Associates physicians are borne by the student.

It is therefore important that students avail themselves of the student health insurance policy available through the Student Affairs Office or through his or her family health insurance coverage.

To assure that you receive the medical services to which you are entitled without receiving a bill, it is necessary that you be prepared to show your student ID card. This is especially important when you are referred to the general offices of Wilmington Health Associates by the university nurse.

'Our Town' scheduled for October 4-7

The athletic program is not the only one that has been active this summer. The Drama Division of the Creative Arts Department has also been very busy in preparation for the first theatre production of the season.

Dr. Terry Theodore, who will direct Thornton Wilder's Our Town, has been working on it since early July. He auditioned, cast, and initiated rehearsals before the first day of school.

Our Town, which is co-produced by UNCW and The Thalian Association, is a unique example of collaboration between the university and the community. From 70-90 people will probably be involved in the production.

The play will be presented in Thalian Hall on October 4-7. Further information either on the production or tickets will be forthcoming after Labor Day.

Dr. Theodore would like to thank everyone who has auditioned or helped on the production so far. Please contact him (#2440) if you might be interested in playing a very small role or working backstage.

Second Annual ICP scholarship announced

Larry A. Welke, president of ICP-International Computer Programs, Inc.—the oldest and largest publisher for the information processing industry, has announced the second annual ICP Scholarship. The scholarship, to be awarded for the 1980-81 school year, is designed to be an investment in the future of the information processing industry.

To qualify for the ICP Scholarship, applicants must be enrolled in a computer science or computer technology program as either a sophomore or a junior. The scholarship will consist of one-year's tuition plus education expenses up to a maximum of $5,000.00 at the United States college or university of the winner's choice.

The ICP Scholarship Committee, made up of highly qualified men and women in the information processing industry, will base their selection on: the student's accumulated grade point average in his or her field of study, and overall grade point average; need for financial aid; participation in data processing-related activities; school activities and leadership roles; DP-related accomplishments and awards. The final test for the ICP Scholarship finalists will be an essay.

The first national ICP Scholarship, awarded to Hugh F. Mackworth, a junior at Stanford University, Stanford, CA, was announced earlier this year at the Eighth Annual ICP Million Dollar Awards Ceremony held at the Royal Sonesta Hotel on Bourbon Street in New Orleans, Louisiana. The winner of the second ICP Scholarship will be announced at next year's Million Dollar Awards Ceremony, again to be held in New Orleans.

Applications will be available through the data processing and financial aids departments of all United States colleges and universities. The deadline for filing scholarship applications is October 15, 1979. For further information, contact Carol Stumpf at ICP, Corporate Communications Assistant, INTERNATIONAL COMPUTER PROGRAMS, INC., 9000 Keystone Crossing, Indianapolis, Indiana 46240. Mizerak benefits from famous commercial

NEW YORK, Aug. 25(AP)—If you don't recognize the name Steve Mizerak, you'll probably remember the beer commercial in which a tall, somewhat oversized pool hustler utters the words "even when you're just showin' off."

Mizerak speaks that gravelly voiced line at the end of a 30-second spot for a Miller Lite Beer. The commercial made Mizerak one of the most famous pool players in the country.

How did a 34-year-old pocket billiards champion, a pool hall owner and a seventh-grade teacher of American history get into the business of hawking beer on television?

"They called four guys and we all screen tested for the part," Mizerak said. "One guy took 13 takes, the next guy 23 and the other 38. I took 58 takes for rehearsal.

"I said to myself, 'I've got no chance.' Two days later, they called me and told me I had the part.

"I asked them why they picked me and they said I was the only one who could walk, talk and play pool at the same time and sound convincing."

Mizerak, who lives in Keasbey, N.J., designed the series of trick shots used in the commercial, which was filmed at the Knickerbocker Bar & Grill in Greenwich Village in New York.

The sequence begins with a two-ball combination, one in each of the corner pockets at the far end of the table. The second shot is another two-ball combo, one in the side and the other in the corner. The piece de resistance is a six-ball combination, the last ball going in the near corner after Mizerak lifts a beer off the table. That's when he says those memorable words.

They had to film the sequence 181 times before they got it right," Mizerak said. "I got about six good tries out of 181. Everything had to be just perfect—the beer, the background and the shots.

"When you do three shots like that without picking up the cue ball, it's kind of difficult. There was no editing no cuts no nothing." Continued on page 11

Racquetball court schedule

(1) The racquetball courts are open for faculty, staff, and UNCW students only.

(2) Courts must be reserved in person in the men's Basket Room. Phone calls will not be accepted.

(3) Due to the increased demand for use of the courts, please limit playing time to one hour.

(4) Racquetball balls will be furnished by the Basket Room. Racquets WILL NOT be furnished.

(5) The times set for use are as follows: Monday thru Thursday 8:30 a.m.-9 p.m., Friday 8:30 a.m.-6 p.m., Saturday 9 a.m.-4 p.m.

*Contingent upon class schedules.

Elections announced

The offices of SGA Vice President, Freshman Class President and Vice President as well as Freshman Class Representative and At-Large seats are vacant. Elections to fill these positions will be held on Thursday and Friday, September 13 and 14. All interested students may file for office beginning Wednesday, August 29. (Registration will end Monday September 10 at noon.

Forms to file for office may be picked up in the Student Union beginning today.

Withdrawal

To officially withdraw from the university, contact the Office of Student Affairs in Alderman Administration Building. Failure to officially withdraw will result in the student receiving an "F" in all courses.

Pranks causing alarm across the country

While University students may think "Animal House" behavior is good fun, college officials are growing concerned about the increased violence and rowdy behavior caused by the movie.

"Toga parties" and food fights have become more common in college dormitories, fraternities and sororities.

As a result, a growing number of fraternities have been put on probation or thrown off campus at American colleges.

At the University of Missouri, Delta Upsilon fraternity has been investigated by the school for a rowdy Little Sister party and a later toga party at a resort area.

According to a campus publication, students at the toga party had to remove their underwear in front of other students and put them in the "sacred underwear pile."

Female students had to kiss a "rubber tree" decorated with condoms. "Sacred toilet water" was consumed by guests from condoms. Students say the entrance to the party was a large-scale reproduction of a vagina.

The University of Texas-Austin has drawn national attention for the irreverent stunts of its students. But fraternity pranks there have upset neighbors of Greektown and have resulted in criminal charges and civil suits.

The New York Times reports that a student has sued members of Alpha Tau Omega fraternity for $1.1 million after he was allegedly abducted, beaten, robbed and sexually assaulted by fraternity members. Three fraternity members have been charged with assault and have pleaded not guilty.

The national Alpha Tau Omega fraternity has placed the Austin chapter on probation.

A group of Austin neighbors have banded together to form Save University Neighborhoods, largely to fight what they see as lawless and drunken behavior of fraternity members.

Betty Phillips, president of the group, told the Times that "I just spoke to three people who said they are going to move because of the situation. To me, that is when cumulative nuisances become a menace."

At Duke University, a massive food fight caused $3,000 damage to a dormitory cafeteria and closed the facility for a week. The event was provoked by a scene in "Animal House" where Bluto, played by actor John Belushi, calls out for a food fight — and all hell breaks loose.

Another incident reported by the Times was the alleged beating of 18 pledges by Omega Psi Phi fraternity members at the University of Florida. The incident was more of a traditional hazing problem than an "Animal House" stunt.

At the University of Massachusetts, police arrested 29 students, answered 180 emergency calls and reported $15,000 in damages by vandals of during one 57-hour spree of student drinking and partying.

While the trend toward more pranks and mischief is alarming for college law enforcement officials, so far the problem has been limited to fraternities on each campus which occasionally get carried away.

But college officials may have to return to the early 80's style of Greek discipline — the discipline that the boys of "Animal House" rebelled against in the movie.

One midwestern college official reportedly told fraternity and sorority leaders at a meeting that "If I could, I would take a bulldozer and level Greektown."

It is doubtful that frustrated college administrators will ever go that far.

Freshmen:

College life is definitely here

Campus Chuckles

by Julie Russ

Hail to all you quaking freshmen! Scary, ain't it? But don't despair—the shakes will soon fade and before you know it you'll be headfirst into College Life. And if you're like most newcomers, you got here with thirty-seven suitcases and a handwritten list of instructions provided by your loving mommy. Right?

Here are a few helpful hints that mommy may have forgotten to include on her list:

- (1) "Don't trust everyone you meet." Just anybody with a nice smile and/or a baggie full of you-know-what.
- (2) "Eat something green every day!" Last night I spotted an obviously unhinged freshman sprinkling salt on a terrified Boy Scout...
- (3) "Try to make friends in high places." This does not include the wecdo who meditates on top of the water tower!
- (4) "The gym is a great place to meet people." Sure enough—if you happen to be a basketball.
- (5) "Learn to use the library." Judging from the cash I've already shelled out for overdue books, I'd say the library is using me.

(6) "Always treat a professor with respect!" Even when he's chasing me around the desk, Ma?

(7) "Make friends, but don't try too hard." If people cringe at the sound of your voice, chances are you're trying just a teensy bit too hard.

(8) "Learn how to type; professors appreciate typed term papers." Just between you and me, some professors don't appreciate anything less than bloodstains on a term paper.

(9) "Be prepared to spend a fortune on books." For those of you who have seen me bartering my body on Front Street, now you know why.

(10) "Get to know the nurse." But not too well: She could cure you and then blackmail you! (And wouldn't you rather suffer than have your folks find out how you caught that case of poison ivy???)

There you have it—a list of things your mother may or may not have whispered into your eager little ear. Oh, and one final point: Always, always read your campus newspaper before you use it to line the birdcage!

Dutch-style house fills shot. Trees swaying outside. The explosions of six different shot-gun blasts radiate through the curtains of several rooms. This is the opening scene for "The Amityville Horror", American International's blockbuster hit which has already topped $35,000,000 in boxoffice gross.

The scene shifts to a rather worried and urgent real estate agent showing the house off, a year later, to newlyweds George and Kathleen Lutz. George and Kathy know of the six murders a year before and are somewhat reluctant to buy the house, but finally persuade themselves to do so, with

George saying, "Houses don't have memories."

Shortly after moving in, Father Delaney, invited over to bless the home is chased off by flies and an extreme case of dizziness and nausea. Even when Father Delaney tries to contact the Lutzes later, the phone burns his hand.

It doesn't take the film long to get into the 'happenings,' and the audience isn't left cheated. There's gook in the toilet, ick from the walls, mysterious glowing eyes at windows, icy winds, rank smells and the hoards of flies in the sewing room.

Brolin, Kidder and Steiger all give good performances with other parts well-played by Don Stroud, Murray Hamilton and Natasha Ryan to name a few. Director Stuart Rosenberg does a very credible job handling "Horror" in a diary style. Screenplay by Sandor Stern is good and tight, and loyal to the book by Jay Anson.

Camera work and special effects are top notch. 'R' rating is mainly from the violent murder flashbacks.

American International pictures recently gave up its independent status when it merged with Filmways, due to many financial failures. However, it looks like "The Amityville Horror", combined with "Love At First Bite" will pull AIP out of the red and into the black.

While the trick pool shots were his, the dialogue was "all theirs." And it was a dialogue that has made him recognizable "on the street, in airports and in grocery stores."

The commercial also made him famous with his seventh-grade class at William C. McGinnis middle school in Perth Amboy, N.J.

"Some know me from the commercial, and it helps," Mizerak said. "And you can associate better with somebody's children if the people know you."

"The association between a teacher and beer is a little unusual," he added, "but the kids say, 'You know who this guy is; he drinks beer.'" So he can't be all bad, can he?

Mizerak also is one of several pool players in a movie entitled "The Baltimore Bullet," which will be released this fall.

"I open the picture. The first face you see is me," Mizerak said. "I have a speaking part there. I say the first words in the whole movie. I have another speaking part or two later on."

Mizerak said there were no more movie or television parts in his immediate future, but he said he would like to continue his show business career. "Yeah, sure. Why not?" he asked.

Mizerak has impressive credentials as a pool player. He won four straight U.S. Open championships from 1970-73. He finished second in the 1976

Pool Wizard

World Open, third in 1977 and fourth last year. Mizerak was in New York recently for the 1979 World Open, which offered $25,000 first prize. He finished out of the top five.

"Tournament pool is a dying sport," Mizerak said. "I think the way pool can make money is on television. You see it on television every day. I'd be willing to bet you that you can watch TV all night and see 10 pool tables-on 'Baretta,' on 'Starsky and Hutch'--but you won't see 10 bowling alleys or tennis courts."

Besides owning the Four Seasons pool hall in Metuchen, N.J., teaching school, winning tournaments and appearing in movies and TV commercials, Mizerak "ekes" out a living playing exhibitions.

Mizerak's pool-playing career has spanned 30 years, beginning when he was 4 years old. His father was a New Jersey state champion, and that's how Mizerak got involved.

"He used to go to the billiard hall and bring me with him. One day he thought it would be a joke to put me on the table to see what I could do."

"I was 4 years old. I picked up the cue stick and stroked the '8' ball in the side pocket, and I've been playing ever since."

PARKING Fee too High, Not Enough Parking Spaces, too Many Tickets

by Tricia Wallace

The $25 parking fee and lack of parking spaces seems to be among the most persistent complaints voiced by new and returning students around campus during the early weeks of this semester.

The majority of students who were asked about parking at UNCW felt that "there are too many faculty and staff places" and "that the number of students and student spaces is disproportionate to the number of faculty and faculty places." Another student complained that "there are just not enough parking places, period. I have to ride around thirty minutes to find a parking space before class."

Another frequent complaint is the price of the parking fee. "I think it (the price) stinks. Where does the $25 go?" a junior asks. Another student who refused to buy a decal said, "I ride a bike. The decal price is too high. I only drive when it rains and then I can't find a place."

At present, fifteen parking lots on campus offer 2,688 spaces. Of these, 2,248 spaces are for students and the remainder, 440, are for faculty and staff members. Yellow spaces are designated for faculty and staff members and white spaces are for students.

Sixty-five percent of all students drive to school. Last semester approximately 3800 students were registered at UNCW with an even larger number this semester. Four hundred and eighty-five faculty and staff members were employed last semester with a comparable amount this semester. From these statistics, every parking space on campus accounts for roughly 1.5 registered vehicles.

Even though everyone is not going to park at the same time, a considerable amount of controversy still exists over whether or not parking is a problem at UNCW.

Dr. Jairy Hunter, Vice Chancellor for Business Affairs, feels that there are sufficient parking places for everyone. "At present we are not aware of serious parking problems other than the normal adjustment period of students. We are encouraging people to use the diagonal spaces along Reigel Road and across from Trask in Lot K."

Dr. Hunter also says that the effects of the gas shortage on student driving will be studied this year.

When asked if the number of parking decals sold exceeds the number of available parking spaces on campus, Dr.

William Malloy, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, responded in the negative. He stressed that the parking problem would find some relief if students could be convinced to park in one area of the campus and walk to all their classes. Dr. Malloy has other suggestions to alleviate the parking problem. Students should make it a point to carpool whenever possible. Also zones that are marked off at the end of parking rows could be reserved for motorcycles, thereby making more spaces for cars to park.

Dr. Malloy also thinks that "opening the new lot behind the new classroom building helped the situation a lot."

Officials argue that the $25 parking fee is necessary. Dr. Hunter stated that the money is to be used only for the purpose of campus police security and services, traffic control during special campus events, and the upkeep and construction of parking lots. Campus Police Chief, Charles Long, added that money taken from tickets is also put into the parking fund.

A parking violation is given for parking in a yellow faculty place with a student decal, or a no parking zone, or on a curb, or not having a parking decal.

The first ticket is a warning and is dismissed with no fines but a written account of the violation is kept. A second offense costs $4, a third $8, and so on. A person is allowed up to five violations within an academic year. Five or more violations result in a person losing the right to operate or park a vehicle on campus for the remainder of that year. The next year the charges are erased and the person may start anew. An academic year is defined as from September first to August thirty-first.

within seven days, a letter is sent to the owner of that vehicle. If seven more days pass with no reply, another letter is sent. After seven more days still another letter is sent. This time to inform the owner that the matter has been turned over to the local court. The violator is then responsible for court costs and any additional fines.

Both Dr. Hunter and Dr. Malloy pointed out that on other campuses such as UNC-Chapel Hill, Appalachian, ECU or State, there is usually

by Janet Hundley

Seahawk Staff Writer

Two years ago WLOZ was rated second among the local radio stations by the Federal Communications Commission. Since then, the fate of the station has been questionable.

Chris Mann began as a disk jockey when the radio was first established in November 1977. Later Chris became the business manager and is now temporary station manager until the Media and Publications Board makes a final decision.

WLOZ received their license for a 10 watt station last spring and according to the new FCC regulations, the station must submit a construction permit for a 100 watt station by January 1980. According to SGA President Francis DeLuca, the station will not receive funds to substantiate the 100 watt station, "until the station gets things together". It really depends on what they do from now until then. Chris Mann feels somewhat different about the station and the 100 wattage change. "WLOZ is a good station and the only way for us to become a great station is through support. We need the support of the student body, the faculty, and the administration. We need the 100 wattage increase: without it we will be bumped off the air."

The entire station is maintained by students and their goal is to "break down the history of bad." The controversy which involved the spending of $1000 lead to the resignation of station manager Steve Hess. This controversy caused problems for WLOZ. They lost much support that they thrive on for continual operation. In addition to this, there has been a considerable drop in student interest. "Few people want to fight for the cause. There aren't any rebels to fight for the station," replied Chris Mann.

The present building housing WLOZ was built by students and most of the rewiring inside the building was also done by

NOT FAIR

'We have enough problems with school. Why should we be hassled with the parking.'

It's 9:15 and you're getting ready to leave you're 8:30 class. But wait, the professor holds you until 9:20 before he lets you go.

Once out in the parking lot you find a parking ticket on your windshield. The violations--no parking decal, and parked in a faculty parking space.

At 9:25, you grab the ticket and drive from the Marine Biology Building to Kenan, where you're taking a music course. Yes once again no parking places for students. But also again are the fifteen to twenty faculty spaces that are unfilled and looking at you with their evil eyes!

Sure enough at 10:30 when you get out there's another ticket on the car, you're third this year and school's just begun! (Remember five tickets and you loose you're driving-on-campus privileges.)

If all this has happened to you, don't feel bad, you're just one of the four-thousand plus students who are fed up with the parking situation.

First of all, twenty-five dollars for a parking decal is a monstrous amount for all us poor college kids. (Parents don't pay for everything, you know.) We see the new parking lot, it's nice, but shouldn't our fees cover that? Aren't the campus security people employed by the state? Shouldn't they be paid by the state? Shouldn't the gate money pay for the security during special events?

Second is why do the faculty have to pay to park at where they work! That just doesn't make sense.

Thirdly is if you're in a bind and you can't find a parking space except for a faculty space, why should you get a ticket. Teachers, staff, and students all have to pay for a parking decal, yet it's the students who get in trouble if they are late.

The point is, if we have to pay twenty-five bucks for a 3x5 sticker that says we can park on campus, then we should be able to do just quickly!

If 4500 students, faculty and staff members pay $25.00 a piece that comes to $112,500 or enough cash for 6 parking lots like Lot Number N.

By the way, does Dr. Wagoner have to pay for a decal?

'Truth in Testing' becomes law

WASHINGTON--Until this summer, the Educational Testing Service in Princeton, New Jersey had good success in keeping itself free from much public inquiry. Though its standardized tests were taken by over 8 million consumers--and required for admission at most college and graduate schools in the country--ETS had successfully pulled a cloak of secrecy over their operations, and kept them secret despite the demands of consumer, parent, teacher and student groups for more accountability.

That was until this summer.

In July, while the students it affected were at work or the beach or catching up with summer courses, New York Governor Hugh Carey signed into law the nation's first strong "Truth-in-Testing" bill. The bill requires ETS to make public internal studies on the tests' validity that they have steadfastly kept secret; tell students how their scores will be reported to schools and what they are supposed to measure; and make the questions and correct answers available to students who request them.

Clearly the bill only offers a reasonable modicum of scrutiny of this vast and powerful private corporation. But ETS fought it tooth and nail all the way. Last fall, they succeeded in watering down a "Truth-in-Testing" bill passed in California until it was virtually meaningless. They completely blocked another bill proposed in Maryland this spring.

In New York, they launched their most vigorous campaign to date. College Presidents and high school principals were buried under waves of telegrams, mailings and memos from ETS that misrepresented the provisions of the bill and warned of dire economic consequences if it passed. "I have never--never--received so much mail on an educational bill," said one SUNY University President. "There's been a tremendous amount of pressure applied here," said an associate of CUNY Chancellor Robert Kibbee. "They came on like General Motors," added one Albany lobbyist.

Though the company poured thousands of dollars into the campaign, it was to no avail. A coalition of parent, teacher, student, labor and minority groups led by the New York Public Interest Research Group (NYPIRG) successfully convinced the Legislature of the merits of the bill. Hearings made it clear that any increased costs due to the bill wouldn't be great enough to justify an increase in fees or a decrease in services.

So the test companies turned to their last threat: withdrawing the testing services they were created to provide. Months before the first tests were scheduled to be given under the new law, the Association of American Medical Colleges and the American Dental Association announced on July 17 that they were pulling their tests out of New York--even though those tests are required for admission to virtually every med school in the country. New York legislators are now investigating this blatant attempt to force the state to back off the law.

The testers couldn't punish a single state for demanding some accountability. As Congressman Ted Weiss of New York City said recently, the testers could not pull out of the entire country; they would have to choose between compliance and going out of business.

Along with Representative Shirley Chisholm of New York and George Miller of California, Weiss has introduced a national testing bill, H.R. 4949. Besides extending the provisions of the New York law to the entire country, it would also require the testers to make public information on how they formulated their fees and what they were doing with your money.

Information is power, and the passage of this law would begin to bring into line the balance of power between the testers and the students they are supposed to serve. Their lobbying efforts, as we have seen, have been determined and expensive. To counter that, students should begin writing their Senators and Representatives in support of H.R. 4949; they should also press student groups and administrators to issue similar declarations.

letters to the editor

Seahawk criticized for article

To the Editor:

In recent years, close scrutiny and skepticism has surrounded fraternities and their value to college clientele. This scrutiny has clouded the true meaning of fraternities and their contributions to society. As all fraternity men will explain, fraternity life develops a repair, not just between brothers but with society as whole; but most importantly fraternity life instills a lifelong brotherhood of sharing, caring, and trust that can only be experienced by fraternity life. The most unique quality of fraternities is how it molds leadership attitudes. As a matter of fact all presidents and vice-presidents of the United States, with the exception of two, have been fraternity men, since fraternities were founded in 1824. My fraternity, the Chi Phi Fraternity, has thousands of distinguished alumni such as Rankin Smith, owner of the Atlanta Falcons; Bates Block, noted Atlanta attorney and employer of over 110 lawyers; Walter Crondkite, whose credentials need not be mentioned and many other leaders of our country. The other fine fraternities organizations on our campus also have noted alumni and actives.

I must point out that the fraternities on our UNC-W campus have made a clean sweep of all homecoming and spirit awards throughout the history of our campus. Chi Phi is responsible for support in the annual blood drive on campus, raising 700 dollars for Muscular Dystrophy and achool support in all major activities.

It is our fraternity's opinion that last week's article in the SEAHAWK, which so unfairly criticized the fraternity life by relating their existence to a John Belushi movie was in bad taste and detrimental to our rush efforts. Nikki Bane shocked and angry at statements

To the Editor:

I wish to respond to the article about me appearing on page one of the August 29, 1979 SEAHAWK. Ms. Russ quoted me accurately, for the most part, about the termination of my employment at UNC-W. Assuming that remarks attributed to SGA President Francis Delucca are also accurate, I am both shocked and angry at the outrageous and slanderous statements Mr. Delucca has made about me.

Most damaging and humiliating is Mr. Delucca's statement that "I felt she was not fulfilling her duties and that she was possibly mishandling the books as well". For the record, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs William Malloy, who is my supervisor (and not Mr. Delucca, as the latter would have others believe), has several times remarked, both in Mr. Delucca's presence and to the University Employee Relations Grievance Committee, that he felt I had done my job well and had no complaints whatever about any aspect of my performance in the SGA Office. In fact, neither Dr. Malloy nor any other administrative officer at the University has ever suggested that I was "mishandling the books" or "not fulfilling my duties". It therefore seems highly unlikely that Dr. Malloy would extend to me an offer to accept the newly-created position if there was any question about my job performance.

As a not-incidental aside to this charge, Mr. Delucca, under questioning by the Grievance Committee, admitted that he was really not very knowledgeable about daily operations in the SGA Office, especially "the books" and other financial matters, in spite of the many hours expended by the previous administration and myself in attempting to so inform him.

Mr. Delucca is also entirely incorrect in his statement that "Bane decided to drop the charges (against Dr. Malloy and UNC-W Personnel Director Cathy Kiger)". Absolutely no time were charges against these parties dropped or retracted, and they remained as the basis for my August 9 grievance hearing. However, I did modify my June 22 request that the Grievance Committee recommend a vote of censure against these persons to a more constructive request that the administration establish a set of procedures complying with existing State Personnel Act policy on reallocation (reclassification) of UNC-W personnel. The University has since agreed to this request, and has additionally stated that Mr. Delucca's May 4 letter containing vague but professionally damaging charges of incompetence is to be removed from my personnel file.

With regard to these charges, the Grievance Committee is not empowered to take action against non-employee students enrolled at the university, and thus it would have been inappropriate there to suggest a reprimand against Mr. Delucca.

It is certainly not my intent that controversy continue about my position. It is with considerable sadness that I leave the SGA; it has been a rare privilege to work for students at UNC-W and a great pleasure to know them. However, I decided not to accept the position, with regret, as I simply cannot afford to take a 50 percent reduction in yearly salary.

May I close by expressing my deep gratitude to the many students, faculty and staff who have expressed indignation against Mr. Delucca's scurrilous smear campaign against me and have themselves risked personal abuse in my behalf.

Block Party A Success' Despite Stolen Kegs

by Mark Davis

What's happening, UNC-W? The Block Party Friday night was a big success because of you the students. The band Sidewinder got everything rockin' about 9:00, and from then on it was party the night away. All of us on the Program Board would like you the students to help us. After all, we are spending a large portion of your money. We have a problem, Friday night somebody stole 5 empty kegs from us. That is stupid! Because we put out a bunch of money to buy them and thought that they would be returned. But since someone stole them we have to take out more money to pay for their replacement. What this means is that we will be short a few hundred bucks for our next dance. The more you guys destroy or steal the less we will have parties. The University Program Board has posted a reward for the return of these kegs or any information leading to their return. NO KEGS RETURNED. NO PARTIES!

But back on the lighter side, the Program Board needs you and your ideas. The more people and ideas we receive the more we can do. Our meetings are on Monday afternoons at 3:00 in the Pub. Also if you would like to be a part of the excitement of putting on parties like Friday night, the Dance Committee will be having a meeting on Thursday, Sept. 13 at 4:00 in the Pub. We are looking forward to a really exciting year of progressive programming at UNC-W. Mark Davis, Dance Committee University Program Board

Racquetball Club has first meeting

The UNC-W Racquetball Club wishes to extend a cordial welcome to all newcomers on campus. Undoubtedly there are many racquetball enthusiasts among our new friends, so let us take this opportunity to acquaint you with the club. Any student, faculty or staff member is eligible, regardless of ability. There are reserved courts on Monday and Thursday nights for members with one of these set aside for those who may desire a few pointers from some of the more advanced players. During this time also, players battle for positions on the club ladder which will be posted on the club's bulletin board located outside of the courts. Racquets, eyeguards, and balls are available for those needing them.

Tournaments are included in the agenda, along with competition with other clubs across the state (last we whipped the N.C. State Club). If interested, please attend the club's first meeting on Thursday, Sept. 13 at the racquetball courts, and come dressed to play later. For further information, call Mitch Covington or Jerry Monahan at 791-9292 or the faculty advisor Dr. Bob Wolff at ext. 2264 Trask. We'll be looking forward to playing you!

Artist Henry Jay MacMillan Paintings To Be Shown September 9th Until Spring

"Why did I paint all those pictures of the European front during World War II? Because I am an artist and artists paint what they see," Henry Jay MacMillan told New Hanover County Museum Director Janet Seapker.

MacMillan's paintings will be shown at the New Hanover County Museum beginning on September 9 and the show will run until the spring.

A professional and well known portrait artist, MacMillan was assigned to the 62nd Engineer Topographic Company and saw service in North Africa, Sicily, Normandy, Belgium, Holland, and Germany. As a draftsman, he prepared topographic maps, and terrain studies for the company and for the headquarters of the XIX Corps, to which he was on detached service.

A special assignment was given to MacMillan by the XIX Corps headquarters—illustrating the Normandy hedgerows which the Germans used for defense. The artist could see and record the construction details which defied the photographer. The paintings were used in an official staff publication on hedgerow warfare, and are included in the exhibit.

Most of the paintings were executed by MacMillan during his off-duty hours. His subjects were the historic places around him—the Chateau at Tongres, the Kornelimunster monastery founded in 807 AD by Charlemagne's son and the ancient bridges which span the Rohr River. Many of the scenes only incidentally include evidence of the U.S. Army. GIs in small boats laying cable and outfitting ancient bridges with temporary surfaces; khaki laundry strung in front of a great castle form subtle evidence of occupation by American forces in a war situation. MacMillan worked in three primary mediums—water color, ink, and gouache. By the time he was inducted into the army, MacMillan already was a recognized artist. In New York City his work was shown at the World's Fair and at the No. 10 Gallery; in Rockefeller Center he painted a mural commissioned by the Sperry corporation.

From his early training with Elizabeth Chant in Wilmington, he went on to attend the New York School of Fine Arts and Applied Art (now Parsons School of Design). He studied, traveled and taught in several places in Europe and the U.S. before campaigning for the establishment of the Wilmington Museum of Art and returning here to become the head of the art school at the museum in 1938. The war did not interrupt MacMillan's art but challenged it. Fortunately he was placed with a company able to utilize his artistic talents.

All the paintings exhibited at the New Hanover County Museum were given by the artist in 1973. Through the generous contributions of two groups, the Museum Guild and the Stamp Defiance Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, the paintings have been provided with acid-free mats and backings. The process of matting the paintings was undertaken by a group of volunteers who will be assisting the New Hanover County Museum in other collection conservation projects during the museum's "Year of the Collection".

The exhibition of MacMillan's paintings will open with a reception sponsored by the Museum Guild. The artist, Henry Jay MacMillan, will attend the opening reception scheduled for Sunday, September 9, from 2 to 5 p.m. A cordial invitation is extended to the public. The exhibit may also be seen Tuesdays-Saturdays 9 am to 5 pm and on Sundays from 2 pm to 5 pm. Admission to the New Hanover County Museum is always free.

Gasahol may cut reliance on oil

Gasohol, the mixture of gasoline and a substance similar to vodka, is becoming a big business as Americans seek a way out of their reliance on imported oil.

And while most analysts doubt that it will play a big part in the nation's supply of motor fuel, several large oil companies are now getting into the gasohol business.

In recent weeks, Phillips Petroleum, Standard Oil of Indiana, which sells Amoco gas, and Texaco have joined a number of small independent oil companies in setting up programs to sell gasohol on a small scale experimental basis. Sources in the oil industry say other large oil companies are thinking about following.

Right now, most gasohol is sold in the Midwest, but it is also being test-marketed in other parts of the nation, particularly in the Northeast. In all, industry analysts estimate that several hundred of the nation's more than 170,000 gas stations are selling the fuel.

Gasohol is not the 50-50 mixture of gasoline and alcohol its name implies. Rather, it is made up of 90 percent gasoline and 10 percent ethanol alcohol. The latter, with slight modifications, could make an excellent ingredient for a vodka and tonic.

Gasohol can be used as a substitute for unleaded gasoline without any modifications in the automobile that burns it. Its backers claim it burns cleaner and sometimes improves mileage.

Most of the ethanol in gasohol is made from corn, although sugar cane, wheat, potatoes and even garbage could also be sources. That's a key source of gasohol's appeal: part of it is home-grown.

"It's the American thing to do," said Fred Frezza, whose Pilot station on Long Island near New York City counts on gasohol for more than 15 percent of its sales. "When you buy gasohol, you're paying 10 percent less to OPEC (Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries)."

"The public loves it because they're getting back at the oil companies," said one petroleum industry analyst. "They'd rather given money to the farmers than the oil companies or OPEC."

But ethanol is not cheap. It costs about $1.50 a gallon, so that blending it into gasoline raises the price of the finished product above the price of ordinary gas. Gasohol generally sells for a few cents a gallon more than premium unleaded gas.

That margin is narrowed somewhat by incentives given by the federal government and a few state governments to dealers who sell gasohol. The fuel does not come under the 4-cent-a-gallon federal excise tax on gasoline and is exempted from state taxes in several states.

Some oil industry officials question the tax break on gasohol. "The question you have to be asking yourself is whether for the same money you could be doing better things," one executive said.

He said Congress had been quick to grant a tax advantage to gasohol but had not yet taken similar action that might spur development of other alternatives. "With a $3 a barrel incentive, a lot of companies would start moving on shale oil," he said.

And critics of the fuel claim that harvesting corn and turning it into ethanol may save consumers more energy than it produces. That might be solved by switching to a different source of ethanol.

Switching sources might also be necessary to increase the supply of ethanol, although few analysts believe there is potentially enough ethanol available to give gasohol a large chunk of the gasoline market. The Energy Department has estimated that, at best, only about 1 percent of the gasoline sold in 1985 will be gasohol.

Soccer Team Opens Season in UNCC Tourney

by John Justus

UNC-Wilmington's Seahawks open the 1979 soccer season this Friday with high hopes for a third straight year as one of the South's top teams.

UNCW, which has been ranked as high as fifth in the South during both of the past two seasons, faces UNC-Greensboro at 3:30 p.m. Friday (Sept. 7) in the UNC-Charlotte Four Points Tournament opening round.

The host 49ers and UNC-Asheville meet in the other first-round game with third place and championship contests set for Saturday at 1:30 and 3:30 respectively.

"This should be a good test for us," Seahawk coach Calvin Lane says. "We have four or five new people in our lineup and everyone is still learning each other's abilities."

"Our five seniors will have to play extra well as the new players adapt. John Miller and Chi Chi Mercado (both All-South in 1978) should be outstanding again, while Nick Stephanos, Matt Wight and Ashley Dixon also will play key roles."

UNCW, 11-5-1 a year ago, opens its home schedule on Sept. 12th, hosting North Carolina tive victorious tournament outings. The Seahawks captured the UNCC tourney in 1977 with 3-0 and 9-0 shutouts of UNC-A and UNC-G. In the last four seasons, UNCW has also won the Pembroke State Invitational (1975) and Old Dominion's Harbor Front Classic (1978).

Coach Calvin Lane enters his ninth year in charge of UNCW's soccer fortunes with a fine 68-46-6 record.

The past four years, however, have seen Lane put together a 43-18-1 mark—good enough for an outstanding 70.2 winning percentage. Three of those seasons, it should be noted, have been in NCAA Division One competition (1976-78).

Co-captains for the 1979 Seahawks are sweeper back John Miller and midfielder Matt Wight, who have joined talents before with successful results.

The senior duo were teammates as junior college performers at Prince George Community College in Largo, Md. In addition to being part of a nationally recognized program there, both earned individual honors at P.G.—Miller as an All-America and Wight as an all-regional standout.

This week's Four Points Tournament will not be the last the Seahawks see of the team from UNC-Charlotte.

The 49ers will be visiting Wilmington for the first Port City Classic on October 5-6.

Other participants in that affair are Jacksonville and North Carolina Wesleyan.

Football Team Prepares For Saturday Night Opener

Against Eastern All-Stars

by John Justus

Boasting a defensive line that averages 250 pounds across the front, and an explosive offense led by speedster Cliff Thomas, the UNCW club football team opens its 1979 season at Legion Stadium Saturday night against the Eastern North Carolina All-Stars.

Kickoff time is 8 p.m. for the contests, which will be broadcast locally by radio station WGNI. No admission will be charged.

Don Corry will be directing the Seahawks again this fall after leading last year's team to a second-place finish in the state playoffs.

"This is the first time we've played them," Corry says of the All-Stars, "but we've heard that they're very big and have a lot of speed."

"They also have the advantage of not being restricted as to where they can pick up players. They're centered in Edenton and have mostly ex-high school and college players from that area."

"It's really hard to know who that might throw out there at us."

Whatever the opposition, Corry feels his Seahawks will once again field a strong squad—one that might even be better than 1978's group.

"We're bigger than last year," he says, "and we have more depth at almost every position. Right now, we'll probably be starting five freshmen (four on offense), who I feel will give us some real help."

The depth that Corry referred to will be tested early in the season as three probable 'Hawk starters are likely out for the opener—ironically, all with shoulder injuries.

Fullback David Moore and linebacker Mark Kavanaugh are both sidelined for at least seven weeks with shoulder separations, while Bubba Baldwin, who starred for the UNCW baseball team the past two seasons, is also doubtful at another linebacker spot.

"It will be hard to replace these people," Corry states, "but some other players will just have to pick up the slack."

Offensively, Corry has named Guy Stefanski to start at quarterback in the Seahawk pro-set attack. Greg Buckingham, like Stefanski, a newcomer to the team, is also a very capable field leader, Corry says.

Steve Underwood will open at fullback in place of the injured Moore, alongside the fleet-footed Thomas, who averaged nearly nine yards per carry last season.

UNCW's receiving corps, which Corry says should also be much improved, includes flanker Kenny Watson, wide receiver Paul Wood and tight end David Hooks.

Football team prepares for season opener against the Eastern Carolina All Stars

On the defense, the Seahawks are led by the massive Melvin Tootoo (280 lb.) and Jesse Hayes (245 lb.) at the tackles, and noseguard Dave McLain (265 lb.) in between.

Defensive ends Donald Borden and Hamp Hardison are the "little guys" up front weighing in at 235 and 225 respectively.

"We were real proud of our defense last year, which allowed only 7.6 points per game," Corry says. "This year's squad could be even better and we're expecting a super performance from them."

"The whole team has been working very hard for the past three weeks, and I'd like to encourage all the students and everyone to come out and support us at Legion Stadium Saturday night."

Renaissance Continuing Musical Success

Classical rockers, Renaissance, are finding out the hard way that you can't please everybody--sometimes you can't even please yourself. After establishing a measure of fame for their ethereal combination of classical themes and rock instrumentation, they've changed their style for a heavier sound. And, they've found themselves at odds with both their record company and their fans.

"We felt that we were in danger of becoming irrelevant--and that our records were all starting to sound alike," explained guitarist Mick Dunford. "So, we made our new album 'Azure D'Or' much more rock-oriented, but the fans seem to like our older material better."

"We've been told by our record company, 'You're not our kind of music,'" added singer Annie Haslam, "so we are looking for another label at the end of this contract."

Although Renaissance has been making U.S. tours for six years, they have never broken through to mass appeal and sales. Yet, the age of Renaissance may have already passed according to Mick. "We felt we had our best shot three or four years ago. We were getting a lot of airplay, and if we'd had the right promotion, we could have taken off enormously. But in those days, we had such bad management..." his voice trailed off. "If the management and record company isn't behind you 100 percent you haven't got a chance."

The band also believes they were the victims of a backlash from music critics. "In England the press is very trendy, they'll build a band up in the papers, but when they start to get popular, they turn on them and cut them down. It's starting to sell records," said Mick.

"We feel that the 'classical-rock' tag has held us back," he continued. "We just finished a seven week U.S. tour, and in listening to the radio, we can see that rock 'n' roll is back; and we're definitely heading that way."

"Our new album has 10 songs on it," explained Annie, whose opera-trained five-octave voice is the center of the Renaissance style and sound. "A couple of years ago, we had an album that only had five songs on the whole LP. I sing and the band plays twice as fast now," she said with a laugh.

With their melodic, "listening" rather than dancing-oriented music, Renaissance have found their strongest following in the U.S. and Europe, although they continue to live in England.

"When we play in places like Germany," says Annie, "the fans learn the words and sing along, even though they don't really speak the language or know what we're singing. I'd love to record some material in languages like French or Portuguese for those territories. We're doing a promotional tour to Brazil to do radio and television, because our new record has suddenly started to do well there."

Renaissance was the first pop group to draw musical themes from great classical masters and combine rock instrumentation with orchestral accompaniment. Every album, except their first, "Prologue," combined the five-piece lineup with orchestra, often focusing on the interplay of Annie Haslam's lead vocals with the harmonies of John Tout's piano. One of their best selling albums was their 1976 "Live At Carnegie Hall" which featured the band backed by a 26 piece orchestra.

Today Renaissance is playing as a self-contained band, but as Annie noted: "The audience goes crazy for our older songs, like 'Ashes Are Burning' or 'Mother Russia'--more so than for the new ones. When we play live, we're much more forceful and exciting than on record, and we change the arrangements around of the older songs to make them more fun to play. If you play the old songs the same way all the time, you'd go crazy."

"If we didn't change, there would be no reason for us to continue. I'm not going to start coming on stage in leather or growling out raunchy blues, but we are trying to be rockier," she said. Mick Dunford agreed. "If we were still doing our new albums in the same style as the older ones, we'd be in a lot of trouble."

Renaissance may be caught in a bind between their own preferences for melodic music and the current climate of rhythm and dance oriented sounds, but against all the odds they are managing to steer their own course.

Whether they can continue to make a commercial success of it remains to be seen.

UNCW Fine Arts to present "JAWS"

The UNC-W Fine Arts Committee will present on Tuesday, September 11, the all-famous gripping movie, "JAWS," at 8:00 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium.

"JAWS" is the largest grossing movie in motion picture history. It brings screen-terror to a never-before-imagined level of high-pitched intensity. Gene Shalit of NBC-TV wrote of this motion picture "Single most remarkable film...I've seen 'JAWS' three times!"

In the most riveting sea drama ever conceived, Roy Scheider, Robert Shaw and Richard Dreyfuss become allied in a life-and-death hunt to destroy a devastating killer shark embodying nearly three tons of instant and terrifying white death.

The nightmare terror that chilled millions of readers is brought to the screen with stunning power and almost unbearable suspense. Art Murphy wrote in Variety that this film is "an artistic and commercial smash...a film of consummate suspense, tension and terror."

UNC-W students with their I.D. cards will be charged 50 cents admission. Non-students will be charged one dollar.

'Missiles of October' shown tonight in New Classroom Building

On September 6 the Department of History at UNC-W will present the film, Missiles of October, an award-winning drama about the 1962 Cuban Missile Crisis. Missiles of October was first shown on ABC-TV and won wide acclaim as an outstanding study of the tense confrontation between the United States and the Soviet Union which threatened to bring nuclear holocaust. In taking a behind-the-scenes look at crisis diplomacy, the film stresses the importance of President Kennedy and Nikita Khrushchev in leading the effort to find a settlement. The film follows the buildup of the crisis from the time when President Kennedy was informed that reconnaissance planes had discovered Soviet missile bases under construction in Cuba. It contains many memorable scenes of the emotional meetings in the White House, where the President met with his advisers and his brother, Robert Kennedy, to debate the problem and map out a strategy for dealing with the Russians. William Devane, Martin Sheen, Ralph Bellamy, and Howard Da Silva are among the noted actors who turn in brilliant performances as political leaders of the 1960's.

Missiles of October will be shown in the Auditorium (Room 101) of the New Classroom Building at 7:30 p.m. on September 5. There is no admission charge, and members of the Wilmington community as well as students and faculty are invited to attend.

Because the full, uncut version of Missiles of October will be shown, the program, including intermissions, will last three hours.

This is the first program of the History Department's film series for the fall season of 1979. Other programs, to which the public is invited, will feature the films Alexander Nevsky and a double feature on cultural conflict in the 1920's: Darrow vs. Bryan and Wets vs. Drys.

Health Nuts:

Yes, they are everywhere

First there was the God Squad, with all those sweet little snow-haired grannies out marching for the lord. Then came the runners, like so many lemmings headed for the sea. And now there's...well, take this incident for what it's worth.

I saw this girl walking through Sears last week, munching on a bag of jelly beans. From out of nowhere (or maybe it was Men's Underwear—it all happened so fast!) jumped this hairy bearded guy, waving a bag of granola and screaming, "REPENT! Repent and start living a healthy life!" Well, that poor girl dropped her jelly beans and her teeth (just kidding... she held onto those jelly beans) and winged out of there so fast her Adidas shot sparks.

People the point is this: the Health Nuts are here to stay. Healthy eating habits are definitely in. Remember how much fun it was being the only vegetarian on your block? Wasn't it cool to stuff your face with alfalfa sprouts while all your overweight, self-indulgent friends tossed down steak? (Note: the easiest way to become a practicing vegetarian is to make friends with a to-be t-bone: once you kiss a cow, there's no turning back!)

Health nuts used to be people who turned down a Mounds bar in favor of a hit of Vitamin E. They ran three miles a day through wind, rain, and nuclear fall-out and listened to Mother Earth News religiously.

Those were the good old days! Now, the fanaticism of these granola gurus makes me wonder if they don't mix a little mesocaine in with those dried figs. I mean, sincerity is nice, but how many weirdos go around with signs saying "Stamp Out Sugar!" and "Caramel Kills!"

Sure, I'm a One-a-Day girl, but I don't take so many iron pills that my retainer turns to rust, like one vita-man of my acquaintance (okay, I know that was cutesy!) Nor do I say prayers over my morning mush like another True Believer. I know of (he's not talking to God, by the way, he's telling those little bran buds to kick in and do their thing).

So go ahead and enjoy your sinful snacks, every crumb and calorie! Just sneak 'em in private (preferably in a closet with the lights out) and for your sake, don't pig out in public. Or at least avoid the Men's Underwear section in Sears!

'Get the Knack':

Recently another group with new wave style has made itself known to the world. The group is called "The Knack" and their latest release from Capitol Records is entitled "Get the Knack."

The lead cut, "My Sharona," has become well known to many of us who are avid listeners of the local radio stations. There are four other cuts on the album that, even though they haven't had the same impact as "My Sharona," are moving up the charts at a steady pace. These four are: Heartbeat, Lucinda, That's what the little girls do, and Frustrated.

Listen to it twice

RECORDS

Unlike most bands "The Knack" has only four members: Doug Fieger, rhythm guitar and vocals; Berton Averre, lead guitar and vocals; Bruce Gary, drums; and Prescott Miles, bass. When first hearing this L.P. you may be unsure of your feels towards it, but the second time you'll know for sure that you like it, because it's good.

Music and Drama Department planning ahead

Two years ago about this time the UNCW Drama and Music Departments were putting together the final plans of the largest theatrical performance ever undertaken on campus. On November 4, 1977, Gilbert and Sullivan's, "The Yeoman of the Guard" opened at Kenan Auditorium after months of planning and hard work. Such an undertaking involved the use of every segment of both departments, the community orchestra and many talented performers from the area.

Despite overwhelming odds we managed to pull it off. The director, Anne Fitzgibbon, who's hard work kept things together and running smoothly is contemplating an attempt at another musical this spring. It is not known at this time just what the show will be, but it will undoubtedly be equal as colossal.

no immediate parking on campus and that parking fees are much higher.

One student feels that there are also other ways larger universities handle parking situations. "We should cut down on cars on campus. For instance, at other schools freshmen are not allowed to park on campus. This would be one way to help our situation."

Most students, however, feel that the best situation to the parking problem is to construct new parking lots. Dr. Hunter points out that the cost of construction of a parking lot is $300 per space. For example, Lot N has 67 spaces. Using the price per space times 67 the cost is $20,100.00.

Dr. Hunter stated that the parking fund has a budget of $86,000 this year.

Above cars are parked in "no parking" spaces. "It's the only way to get to class," one says.

Despite the cost involved in constructing new parking lots, students remained convinced this is the only solution. A residence hall student comments, "I've gotten three tickets already because it's been so crowded. Sometimes I've had to park at school and walk to the dorms."

Impeachment charges brought against SGA President Francis DeLuca, court set for September 19th

by Bill Sanders

In its first meeting this year, the Student Senate took the drastic action of bringing charges of impeachment against SGA President Francis DeLuca. The charges are the result of DeLuca's failure to consult the advice of the Senate concerning the downgrading of the Administrative Assistant position in the SGA. Other charges included presenting false information to the Board of Trustees.

DeLuca expressed surprise that the Senate did not have many questions concerning his action to downgrade the SGA position held by Nikki Bane. The reason for the lack of questions revealed itself under new business. Senator Scott Stagg presented the following resolution, "I move that the UNCW Student Senate freeze all funds to pay the salary of student government office (i.e. Administrative Assistant, clerk typist, etc.), also that a special senate committee be appointed to assess the situation and help determine if the needs of the SGA are best met through the use of an Administration Assistant or Clerk-Typist, also that a letter be sent to the university comptroller and the accounting office informing them that no checks of this nature are to be drawn."

The committee is to report back to the Senate when it next meets.

Charles Parsons presented the following resolution which was unanimously approved.

a) That Francis DeLuca, President of the Student Government Association be impeached;

b) That the charges of impeachment be for maladministration and misrepresentation of the Student Government Association;

c) That the student court take the responsibility for hearing these charges of impeachment;

d) That the presiding officer of the senate appoint a special prosecutor to investigate these charges and represent these viewpoints in Student Court."

Following a recess everyone agreed that the Student Court for the trial will be composed of the five members presently appointed. The date for the trial has been set for September 19th, at 7:00 p.m. in the new classroom building auditorium.

The special prosecutor appointed is Pete Johnson.

Fledgling Editor, Rogers, hopes to Overcome problems with 'Good Book'

by Tricia Wallace

Over the past few years UNCW's yearbook, The Fledgling, has had a number of editors--Eric McLamb, Margie McLamb, and Robbie Register--to list the latest.

This year's editor, Stacy Rogers, has three solid goals in sight for this year's Fledgling. The first and foremost, she says, is putting out a good book. Ms. Rogers feels that over the past few years students have lost interest in the yearbook due mainly to previous mismanagement. She hopes to re-establish the importance of a yearbook at UNCW. "We need a very good book," the editor states, "because students don't have any enthusiasm about it. I want to make the book more journalistic with a wider coverage that students will like."

Ms. Rogers emphasized that this year's book will cover more student activities. However, she said it is important for clubs and organizations to get in touch with her if they want an event covered.

Secondly, the Fledgling editor wants to leave behind a trained staff. The five main positions of the Fledgling and Editor, Associate Editor, Photography Editor, Business Manager, and Art Editor. There are also many secondary positions and section heads. "I'm trying to pull as many freshmen and sophomores and juniors into the book as I can. Five years from now when the book is really in good and students really like it, we will have been passing on staffs, talents, and abilities to the point that the book will really have a firm hold on the school," Ms. Rogers says.

Right now, the Fledgling staff is small, but competent. Ms. Rogers stresses that there is plenty of room on the staff for students who are willing to dedicate themselves to putting out a super yearbook. No background experience is necessary.

The third thing the editor will seek to accomplish is balancing out old books and working within this year's budget. She says, "I think that's important because if we can't operate within our budget and put out a good book, then we're awful slack."

Faculty advisor Linda Moore says the budget for this year's Fledgling is a little over $11,000. "This is not a large amount of money for a yearbook. The cost of printing, especially color photographs, is just outrageous nowadays. I think Stacy has quite a challenge ahead of her to take that relatively small amount of money and turn out a quality yearbook." Ms. Moore also says that "Stacy is very energetic and I think if anybody could meet the challenge it would be Stacy. I have confidence in her."

The Fledgling editor knows that there are many deadlines to meet and much hard work ahead for her and her staff. "But," she says, "there is absolutely nothing like the feeling you get when you look at the finished yearbook and know that you've put a year of your life into it."

Stacy Rogers

Elections held today and tomorrow

Student Government fall elections will be held Thursday and Friday at the cafeteria and Library. At stake are the positions of Student Body Vice-President, Freshman Class President, Freshman Class Vice-President, as well as many at-large and Freshman Class senate seats. All students with valid I.D.'s are eligible to vote, and are urged to take a few moments of their time to do so.

Experienced Staff leads Atlantis into new year

by Tricia Wallace

Since 1970, UNCW has been publishing a free literary magazine, the Atlantis. The magazine is built on three premises. It only publishes original student poetry, prose, and art work. It is staffed only by students and funded solely by the SGA. The Atlantis staff also prints a calendar of campus events every fall as a student service.

The editor-in-chief of the Atlantis this year is Lea A. McDaniel. She has worked with the Atlantis staff since her freshman year and has also held the positions of Art Editor and Prose Editor.

The four other editors are Becky Owens--Assistant Editor, Gregg Glickstein--Prose Editor, Tana Bouffard--Poetry Editor, and Thomas Jones--Art Editor.

Each editor works individually and organizes his or her own staff. Ms. McDaniel added that the editors usually spend at least 100 hours printing the Atlantis. All five editors receive a partial tuition scholarship.

Lea McDaniel, as editor-in-chief, oversees the printing and publication, attends Publications Board Meetings, and handles financial affairs. "I don't make any one big specific decision, it's a decision by all five editors. I mainly run red tape and make sure everything gets done smoothly, but it's enjoyable. I really feel like I've accomplished something. I feel good about it. You meet a lot of new people every semester," she says.

This year's editors are all seniors so there is much room for growth.

Dr. James Collier, advisor of the Atlantis, also helped to establish the magazine back in 1970. He feels that the Atlantis is an important outlet for students and also important for university status. Dr. Collier also thinks that the magazine is a good way for students to share interests with each other.

In each issue the Atlantis tries to publish eight to ten short stories and fifty to sixty poems. All poems, prose, and art work are chosen anonymously by the staff. A staff member cannot judge his or her own entry.

Dr. Collier pointed out that because there are so many entries each semester, it's hard to choose which ones will be published. He regrets having to leave out so many

UNCW: Growing in Number Everyday

By Terry Judd

It was hot and crowded in Hanover Hall as students at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington waited patiently to register for the fall semester.

But for the UNCW administration, there had to be a degree of satisfaction, for once again the school was registering a record number of students this time close to 4,400.

UNCW's growth has been remarkable. As recently as 1973, the school only had about 2,500 students. This year its freshman class has almost 1,000 students.

Interest in UNCW has been so great that the institution had to stop accepting new students in late June because of mandatory restrictions. And although school officials have been predicting for years that UNCW would enjoy substantial growth, even Chancellor William H. Wagoner concedes that he was conservative in his predictions.

"I've been wrong in my predictions for 11 straight years since I've been chancellor—I underestimated the growth," he says. "This institution today has an enrollment student-wise, program-wise, faculty-wise where I would have probably anticipated it would be in 1988."

All of us have dreams, but the development has been far beyond my expectations."

Wagoner recalls that when he first took command in 1968 of what was then Wilmington College, all the school's offices, three departments and the library were housed in Alderman Hall, one of only three buildings on campus.

Today, Alderman, which is being renovated, exclusively serves the administration. The reference books are now housed in the Randall Library, and students have access to seven classroom buildings, four dormitories and an indoor athletic complex which includes the large Trask Coliseum.

Wagoner believes UNCW has an encouraging future, even though many colleges and universities are having trouble attracting enough students.

Now in its 32nd year, the institution was founded in 1947 when citizens of New Hanover County approved a tax levy to create a two-year college. For years, the school operated across from New Hanover High School in the old Isaac Bear building, until it moved to its present location on College Road in 1961. At that time, the school only had 1,200 students.

Two years later, the General Assembly voted to make Wilmington College a four-year institution.

Wagoner says when he assumed command at Wilmington College, negotiations already were under way for the institution to become part of the state's university system. By 1969, the General Assembly voted to incorporate Wilmington College and Asheville-Biltmore College in the UNC system—boosting the number of campuses to six.

And by 1971, the UNC system had grown to 16 different campuses. At that time, UNCW only enrolled 1,686 full-time and 868 part-time students.

Wagoner believes much of UNCW's growth can be tied to the state's growing population and the increasing percentage of college-age persons attending four-year institutions.

But more important, he says, is UNCW's location in the southeastern portion of the state. He says UNCW is geographically farther away from any other four-year institution in the state.

These factors, however, could not mean too much, he says, if it weren't for the special kinds of programs being offered.

Wagoner says he is not ashamed to acknowledge that many students are attracted to UNCW because it is near the ocean. But he adds that the school has taken advantage of the ocean by offering a quality marine science program.

"This campus has lapping at its backdoor step a laboratory which the legislature not even with a mandate can move to the Piedmont," he says.

And although he believes all of the school's programs have been attracting students, he adds that the marine science program does draw considerable in-state and out-of-state interest.

"That program is a dramatic program. It is unlike any available in the state in that it does attract a tremendous amount of interest on the part of students in the Piedmont, out of state and so on," he says. "And that in turn creates conversation and really advertises in a good, positive way our other fine programs."

Because he believes all of these factors will be at work for many years, Wagoner predicts UNCW will continue to grow and reach proportions that probably seemed out of the question a decade ago.

I predict that if all of these factors stay intact—in the absence of a national disaster—this campus by the end of the decade will have an excess of 10,000 students and a wider variety of educational programs."

He said the current campus location, which has only been utilized to about one-third of its potential, could handle that large a school. And despite the size, Wagoner says he hopes UNCW's growth will continue to be orderly and maintain the spacious character of the campus.

But even if a 10,000-student enrollment is about 10 years away, the school's academic program is already expanding. Currently the school offers a graduate degree in education and one is slated for marine biology. A masters in business administration is being planned.

But UNCW's recent growth has not been without its problems—most notably the lack of student housing and activities areas.

In the immediate future, UNCW plans to build a new "University Center," better known as a student union; an apartment-style housing complex that will hold 400 students and a new classroom building for behavioral sciences.

In the not-too-distant future an addition to the library will be planned. Wagoner says that by 1984 the library, which will acquire its 200,000th volume this year, will run out of space.

UNCW also has been criticized by some groups as being slow to build up its minority student enrollment. And although there has been about a 45 percent increase in minority student enrollment since 1973, blacks make up only about 8 percent of the entire enrollment.

UNCW has prepared a program to increase its number of minority faculty, which in turn may attract more minority students.

Wagoner says UNCW is committed to increasing its minority student enrollment and admissions officials are scheduling meetings in minority areas in an effort to attract more students to the school.

"We want every single individual of this state, of all backgrounds, to know of the opportunities at this institution and to attract them."

He expressed confidence that UNCW will continue to attract student from all sectors of society.

When looking at UNCW's future, Wagoner says he only sees one trend he is concerned with and that's the danger that universities and colleges will become strictly vocational-training centers.

"I sense a trend across the country that universities are becoming more vocationally-oriented and scholarly-oriented," he says. "Students seem more inclined to ask why they should take a course that may not help them make a living."

"I hope the trend does not inundate the university as an institution in America because there are many reasons why an individual should go to college—one of those is to prepare for living, but we cannot overlook that an individual should continue a scholarly pursuit of all things."

Wagoner says he hopes UNCW will be able to offer courses students will consider relevant, but at the same time continue to stress scholarship.

Students May Soon Find Themselves in Front of Army Review

by Leonard H. Shen

WASHINGTON—Like generations of young people before them, this year's crop of students may soon find themselves standing in their shorts in front of an Army review panel—if legislation proposed this summer passes Congress.

But that doesn't look likely—not yet anyway.

Proposals for the reestablishment of compulsory registration—the first step of the draft—have been introduced in both houses. But an unlikely coalition of conservatives and liberals appear to have marshalled enough votes to kill the bill until at least next year.

The Senate has decided to hold off on its bill until it sees what the House does, and the House is planning its vote for the second week in September—just as students across the country return to the campuses.

Even if the measure is passed that doesn't mean Uncle Sam will start pulling students out of school again for compulsory service. But the bill—which affects males who will begin turning eighteen after December 31, 1980—could mandate full-scale fitness classification, and mental and physical examinations, or everything up to the brink of actual induction. The proposal could even mean the reactivation of the now-dormant Selective Service Act, without any review of the same class and race discrimination loopholes that led to its demise in 1975.

In spite of an apparent mandate from their constituents—three out of four Americans favor registration of all young men—most Congressmen are reluctant to vote for registration. For one thing, the Carter Administration and the Selective Service itself are solidly against the bill. There's also the matter of self-preservation as Rep. Ron Paul (R-Texas) warns his colleagues, "Politicians interested in staying in office should beware. No one will work and vote on behalf of a candidate because that candidate is for the draft. Plenty would work and vote against him for that reason." Indeed, over 30 national organizations and dozens of student groups have already begun lobbying against registration.

These political considerations are buttressed by several studies, including one by the Defense Department itself, which question the need for registration. The Congressional Budget Office, for instance, has found that current computer technology could easily meet the DOD's emergency mobilization timetable, and that inductions would begin only 13 days sooner with peacetime registration.

Not surprisingly, Congress has decided to sidestep the issue—and it's found a perfect vehicle in Rep. Pat Schroeder's proposal to "study" the draft for six months. As an aide to Schroeder remarks, "Everybody is saying, 'I really don't want registration, but I don't want to go back to my constituents and say I voted against the draft.' This gives them a way out."

Led by Rep. Thomas Harkin (D-Iowa), the Schroeder coalition threatens to introduce over 200 amendments if their study proposal is defeated. The amendments have little chance of being passed—one imposes the draft on every Congressman who votes for registration, another requires half the U.S. armed forces to complete transcendental meditation courses, and a third provides for wind-powered torpedoes and coal-drive submarines—but the mere threat of having to spend the required 1000 minutes debating these amendments is enough to swing votes. "We'll filibuster that thing from now until Christmas," challenges Harkin.

Even if Schroeder's stall is successful—an extremely close vote is predicted—the draft will hardly become a dead issue. Congress is only testing the waters of public reaction, and if it doesn't receive enough opposition, compulsory registration or even the draft itself could come back as an issue next January. To prevent this, says Schroeder, "Students will have to mobilize immediately, phone in, write their Representatives, send letters to editors, do everything they can. Without pressure from young people, the force will be on the other side. And that means registration cards, having to report in whenever you move, and before you know it—the draft."

National Research Council to Advise in Graduate Fellowships

WASHINGTON* D.C.—The National Research Council will again advise the National Science Foundation in the selection of candidates for the Foundation's program of Graduate Fellowships. Panels of eminent scientists and engineers appointed by the National Research Council will evaluate qualifications of applicants. Final selection of Fellows will be made by the Foundation, with awards to be announced in March 1980.

Eligibility in the NSF Graduate Fellowship Program is limited to those individuals who, as of the time of application, have not completed post-baccalaureate study in excess of 18 quarter hours or 12 semester hours, or equivalent, in any field of science, engineering, social science, or mathematics. Subject to the availability of funds, new fellowships awarded in the Spring of 1980 will be for periods of three years, the second and third years contingent on certification to the Foundation by the fellowship institution of the student's satisfactory progress toward an advanced degree in science.

These fellowships will be awarded for study or work leading to master's or doctoral degrees in the mathematical, physical, medical, biological, engineering, and social sciences, and in the history and philosophy of science. Awards will not be made in clinical, law, education, or business fields, in history or social work, for work leading to medical, dental, or public health degrees, or for study in joint science-professional degree programs. Applicants must be citizens of the United States, and will be judged on the basis of ability. The annual stipend for Graduate Fellows will be $4,320 for a twelve-month tenure with no dependency allowances.

Applicants will be required to take the Graduate Record Examinations designed to test aptitude and scientific a-

Students Vie for Offices on Campus Today

An open letter to the students of UNCW.

My name is Jon Faili and I am asking you to vote for me for the office of SGA Vice-President. Many of you around campus know who I am, but I am certain that many more have never heard of me. I originally started school in 1974, but after one year left to join the services. I returned to UNCW in the fall of 1977 and since that time have been very active in not only student government, but several other organizations as well. I have served in many different capacities, from being a working member to the leader of several organizations.

This year, as every year in the past, we face many of the same problems: parking on campus, a lack of student participation in student government, disregard of the students by the administration, the list could go on forever. As the Vice-President, my major objective would be student activism. This university is here for students and no one else. In the past, there have been allegations that the student government has made mistakes, but isn't making mistakes part of learning? We need to remind not only the administration, but students as well, that learning is why we are here. Also, very little trust is given us by the administration. Last year, I was concerned that the people who write traffic tickets on campus also sit in judgement for those tickets. This is not only short-changing all students, but also robbing our student court of a golden opportunity to learn more and be more active. Some may say that students judging other students will never work, but I trust our student court to do the right thing.

Currently, the Student Government Association is experiencing very traumatic difficulties. If you will vote for me, Jon Faili, for SGA Vice-President, I will do my best to ensure that the student government not only operates smoothly, but also in the student's interest. Now is the time for all students at UNCW to make a difference. Vote for that difference. Vote for Jon Faili.

To the Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to ask you the students at UNCW to vote this Thursday and Friday for the SGA officials who will represent you this year.

The majority of the upper-class SGA representatives were elected in the spring but all freshman elections and other selected positions are open.

This is a critical time for the SGA, so I hope that you will consider your choice by the candidate's merits. Please select as your representative persons who are strong in leadership, flexible in making the correct choices, but above all select persons who will represent your views and not just their own.

I would like to recommend two candidates who will be running for offices during the election. These candidates are Jon Faili for the office of SGA Vice-President, and Denise Rowlett for Freshman Class President. Both Jon and Denise are persons who are well qualified and care about students and their problems.

I have known Jon for many years and I feel that there is no one more fitted for the office of the Vice-President on campus. He has vast experience both on campus and as an intern at the North Carolina Legislature.

Denise is a freshman, and she is very interested in the workings of the SGA and is genuinely concerned about the issues and problems on campus especially with the incoming freshman.

I feel that you will be proud of both Denise and Jon as the year progresses, so follow me in voting for both of these worthy candidates.

So, you think you know what Pressure is! You've made it through Orientation and all those flaky professors, not to mention a neurotic sleepwalking roommate. Through it all you've managed to merge the old molars into a semi-permanent smile, confident that your inborn sense of Cool would prevail.

Well, let me educate all you uninformed innocents. Pressure is really spelled d-e-a-d-l-i-n-e and every budding journalist knows that tune. Writing for a newspaper ("rag") to us scarred veterans) is like having a term paper due every week for the rest of your college days! It's enough to make you trade in the old typewriter for something less frustrating, like finger paints maybe.

Real joy, though, is having a column such as this one. I coulda gone for something simple like a recipe exchange, but no. I've got this uncontrollable urge to flaunt my kinky little sense of humor. (Plus my kinky little ego just loves seeing my name in print . . .

NEVER HAVE ANOTHER HEADACHE! Never suffer through another hangover! Jerry Teplitz, author of the book How To Relax & Enjoy, will teach you to cure your own (and friends') headaches and hangovers in just 2 minutes. He will also teach you fast, easy ways to totally relax before an exam, to fall asleep the night before an exam or interview, and to energize yourself for less painful all-nighters! All of this will take place on Wednesday, October 3, 1979, at 8 p.m., when Jerry presents his program, "How To Relax and Enjoy Being a Student/Passing Your Exams."

Jerry will teach basic techniques of Shiatsu (Japanese pressure-point massage), deep breathing, meditation, and yoga-techniques you can use

Sometimes there are days when I think the old funny bone has gone into early retirement. When the car pops a piston (anybody wanna adopt a slightly abused '74 Gremlin?) and the dog throws up (ditto offer above) on that $20 genetics textbook, I have to pound my head against the pavement until hydrophobia seems hilarious by comparison.

Yes, the truth hurts, but it must be told. Even for me, Erma Bombeck Junior, it don't come easy. It's tough keeping a sense of humor these days--look at Jimmy Carter. When was the last time he showed those gums in public? Oh sure, to easily and quickly relax. The Shiatsu techniques will also include treatments for sore throats and sinus colds.

"This isn't mysticism or magic," explains Jerry, who is an attorney as well as a Master Teacher of Hatha Yoga.

Actually, it's not that hard to find material to fill this space every week (I just steal lines from the Tonight Show . . . forgive me, Johnny). Honest, all I do is spy on the people around me (sure it's illegal, but after Nixon, who cares?) and sort of absorb events by osmosis, which is a classy way of saying I snoop and pry to gather ideas for this column. So if you should spot this bug-eyed chick with radar ears, watch out--'cause the campus equivalent of Lois Lane is on the prowl again!

SEAHAWK SPORTS

Seahawks capture Charlotte Tournament

Sports Information Department

Although their careers as soccer players here at UNC-Wilmington are only two games old, Dave Karlson and Doug Allman, both natives of Bowie, Md., have already made their presence felt for the Seahawks.

Doug Allman

In last week's Four Points Tournament in Charlotte, freshman forward Karlson earned Most Valuable Player honors, while Allman, a junior midfielder, was also honored with a selection to the all-tournament squad, along with teammates John Miller and Matt Wight.

And if it isn't obvious already, the championship team of the UNC Charlotte sponsored tourney was indeed, Coach Calvin Lane's Seahawks.

"I'm not going to say we was voted the MVP award and how did he feel upon being accorded the honor?"

"I was super surprised," Karlson admits. "Each guy on the team has a job to do and I just try to do my share."

"Coach Lane has shown a lot of confidence in me by playing me so much even though I'm only a freshman, and I'm happy that I was able to contribute to our winning the tournament."

Karlson is not the first Seahawk to walk away with the MVP trophy from the Four Points Tournament, however. Ted Kort, a co-captain on last year's squad, won the award in 1977 with UNCW was also the tourney champion.

The key to this year's victory, according to Karlson, was the team's intensity and aggressiveness—even when it fell behind against UNC.

"When we got behind on

played great, but we did play well enough to win," Lane says with a smile. "and this early in the year, you just want to get off to a good start any way you can."

"Actually, we did play quite well in the tournament finals against UNCC, but we still have a good bit of improvement to go before we can say we are an outstanding soccer team."

UNCW had to rally from a 3-1 deficit to defeat UNC-Greensboro, 4-3, in the tournament semi-finals on Friday, with Karlson providing the spark as he assisted on three of the four Seahawk scores.

Then, in Saturday's finale, it was Allman's turn as he scored the 'Hawks' first goal and assisted Miller on the game-winner with only 32 seconds left.

It was Karlson, though, who Friday," Karlson says, "no one seemed to be discouraged. We just hung in there, got a couple of breaks and made the most of them."

"It was important to us that we get off to a good start this year, especially with all the big games we have coming up. We may have taken UNCC a little lightly before the game, but I know we didn't once we got on the field and saw that they had a good team, too."

The road does surely become much tougher for UNCW this month, beginning with yesterday's match against North Carolina. The Seahawks travel to South Carolina on Sunday, then go to Raleigh to take on N.C. State on Saturday, Sept. 22.

Next home game for the Seahawks is Thursday, Sept. 27 when they host Atlantic Christian.

Lady Seahawk Golf Team Travels to Virginia

Sports Information Department

A new coach, new players—in fact an entirely new team sport at UNC-Wilmington undertakes its first intercollegiate competition this week as the Lady Seahawk golf team travels to Farmville, Va., for the Longwood College Invitational, Friday and Saturday (Sept. 14-15).

UNCW's first women's golf coach is Lea Larson, who led her Austin Peay University (in Clarksville, Tenn.) to four Tennessee state championships the last six years, and the prospects of the newest athletic program at UNCW excite her.

"The college golfer should be looking for a place where she can get a quality education, have the opportunity to play under good conditions, compete against the best competition available," Larson says.

"If you include all these factors in your program—which I believe we can here at UNCW—then you can have an outstanding program."

The fall slate includes trips to four tournaments in Virginia and North Carolina and a UNCW-hosted affair next week, which includes Meredith College and Bowling Green University. Highlighting the fall schedule is the state championships at Pinehurst, Nov. 10-11.

The spring schedule is as yet incomplete, but as Larson points out, "If we can finish respectfully in the fall events, we can get in some more very fine tournaments next spring."

The complete fall schedule follows:

SEPTEMBER
Longwood Invitational (Farmville, Va.); 17-18—BOWLING GREEN, MEREDITH; 28-29—at Mary Baldwin Invitational (Staunton, Va.).

OCTOBER 18-19—at Duke Fall Invitational (Durham, N.C.).

NOVEMBER 3-5—at Lady Tar Heel Invitational (Chapel Hill, N.C.); 10-11—at NCIAA State Championships (Pinehurst).

Football Team Beat Eastern Allstars 16 to 6

by Derrick Anderson

The rugged Seahawk defense limited the All-Stars to 176 yards in offense, 70 of which came on a touchdown run by the Edenton fullback on their first possession of the game. Led by the play of lineman Jesse Hayes, Dave McLaine, Melvin Tootoo and Don "Sugar Bear" Borden, the defense accounted for six turnovers on five fumble recoveries and one pass interception.

During the first five minutes of the game the UNCW defense seemed anything but sharp as Edenton's quick backs consistently gained good yardage. After the All-Star score, the Seahawks rose to the challenge. "That touchdown really woke us up," noted bruising middle-linebacker Bill Morris. Linebackers Steve Phillips, "Tinker" Owens, Rusty Quate and Morris all played solid defense, as did cornerbacks Bob Walker and Bubba Baldwin and safety Mark Doll.

Defensive coordinator Bob

Rosenthal was pleased with the defensive effort. "We need to do some work before this week's game against Carolina," he remarked, "but these guys demonstrated their ability to come back and shut down a potent running attack. We're big, strong, fast, and deep on defense. I think we'll have one or two shut-outs this year."

One of the big reasons for the success of the Seahawk defense was the play of Coach Saul Bachner's specialty teams. While consistently keeping Edenton bottled-up in their own territory on punts and kickoffs, the specialty teams scored four points on two PAT's and a safety.

Bubba Baldwin led the ground attack with 75 yards on 9 carries. Late in the fourth quarter, Baldwin slipped through the line and scampered 30 yards for what seemed to be another Hawk touchdown, but a fumble occurring near the goal line was recovered in the end zone by Edenton and the Hawk drive stopped.

Cliff Thomas added 68 yards on 11 carries as he brought the crowd to their feet on numerous occasions with his swift feet. Thomas had two runs called back because of penalties, one of 43 yards and another of 38 yards. So with a break Thomas would have had 149 yards on 13 carries, and he set out the second quarter.

Steve Underwood also had a big night with 33 yards on four carries and 55 yards on two passes.

Coach Carry is pleased with the effort, but was concerned about the penalties. We had over 160 yards in penalties called on us and we can't do that and still win. We will do a lot of work on controlling that phase of our game. The big improvement we are pleased with now is how the offense moved the ball and controlled the game. Also our kicking game was much improved over last year. We had one kick almost blocked and only went 15 yards but still averaged 36 yards a punt. We kept them in bad field position a lot.

Next game is Saturday, 8:00 p.m. at Legion Stadium with UNC-Chapel Hill. If we can put it together, we should have another good night.

Quarterbacks Guy Stefanski and Greg Buckingham both threw for a touchdown as UNCW's Seahawks smothered Edenton's All Stars 16-6 Saturday in the Football season opener for both teams.

Stefanski hit halfback Steve Underwood on a fifteen yard scoring pass late in the first quarter. Bob Denne kicked the extra point and the Hawks were in front 7-6.

Buckingham found Paul Wood open down the left side line midway through the second period for a twenty-eight yard scoring play. Denne added the extra point and the Hawks were up 14-6.

On the ensuing kickoff, the Hawks tackled Edenton's return man in the end zone for a safety and two more points and a 16-6 advantage.

An anticipated close game never materialized as the Hawk's defense slammed the door on Edenton and the offense kept control of the game and the ball.

63 MFD Announces Raft Race

IT'S THE FIRST ANNUAL 63MFD-DOUBLE Q/BUD-WEISER RAFT RACE! SUNDAY, OCTOBER 7, from 1:30 PM to 2:30 PM, as part of the Old Wilmington Riverfront Celebration. We'll put in the river at the Rumsey Marine and Dry Dock on Highway 421 (we'll let you know what time to be there) and race down the Cape Fear to the boat ramp at the base of Nun Street beside Chandler's Wharf. Prizes will be awarded for originality and creativity of design, most spirited crew, a special sponsor's award, and of course, to the first place finisher.

SOME GUIDELINES:

1) We want rafts--not boats or canoes. Inflatable devices, styrofoam or other buoyant materials are recommended. Paddles, oars, sails, or other non-fuel power sources are o.k.--no motors, just you, the wind, and the river.

2) Every raft must have a captain who is responsible for his or her crew, and the safety of the raft.

3) Every crew member must wear a life preserver and shoes throughout the race.

4) Crew members under 18 must have the written consent of their parents.

5) No glass will be allowed on the rafts.

6) Each raft must have a litter bag.

7) Each raft must be equipped with enough line for docking.

8) Once the race begins, there is to be no stopping along the race route. To do so means disqualification.

9) Raftsmen are discouraged from excessive horseplay which may jeopardize their safety, or the safety of competitors or spectators.

10) No raft can interfere with the progress of another raft.

11) Raft crews should be large enough to launch the raft and pull it out of the water, but not more than exceed safety limits. Minimum crew: 2.

12) Once launched, all cars should be moved away from the Rumsey Marine and Dry Dock area, so plan on bringing a spare driver.

Pop Scene: Here's the Answer

By Barbara Lewis

CANDY CLARK

Q I just saw Candy Clark in "More American Graffiti," and I think she's great. What other films has she been in? Is it true there was a fight between Candy and her co-stars on the set of "More American Graffiti"? Mildred Pierce, Meridian, Miss.

A Candy Clark and her "More American Graffiti" co-stars are still very good friends. Charles Martin Smith, Ron Howard, Cindy Williams and Paul Le Mat are said to have considered the sequel to "American Graffiti" a reunion more than a job.

Candy also appeared in "Handle With Care" (released in some parts of the country as "Citizen's Band") with Paul Le Mat, and starred opposite David Bowie in "The Man Who Fell to Earth."

FOREIGNER

Q I'm a big Foreigner fan, and I'd like to know when they're coming out with a new album. Also, could you tell me if Lou Gramm, the group's lead singer, plays any instrument for the band?--Paul Kelley, Houston, Texas

A: Foreigner is currently in the studio, putting the finishing touches on their third album for Atlantic Records. Roy Thomas Baker (The Cars, Queen) is producing, and new bassist Rick Wills will be making his debut.

Lou Gramm, in addition to singing for Foreigner, also writes lyrics for the band in conjunction with group leader Mick Jones. Such hits as "Cold As Ice," "Double Vision" and "Hot Blooded" have been produced by the writing duo. Gramm doesn't play an instrument with the group.

THE SHIRTS

Q I saw The Shirts in Asbury Park in N.J. recently and they were terrific. Are they going to release another album soon? Does lead singer Annie Golden have any plans to leave the group?--Christina Desmond, Englishtown, N.J.

A: The Shirts have just released their second album, "Street Light Shine," and are currently touring the country.

Annie Golden, the diminutive singer who attracted so much attention for her starring role in Milos Forman's film version of "Hair," considers herself a Shirts first and a film star second. Any future film projects, she says, will be fitted around her schedule with the band.

DEEP PURPLE

Q: I'm still a devoted Deep Purple fan. Could you please tell me what former band members Jon Lord, Ian Paice, Richie Blackmore, Ian Gillian and Roger Glover are doing now? Also, could you list the original members of the band and subsequent members through to their breakup?--Dave Rondeau, Los Angeles, Calif.

A: Richie Blackmore is currently leading his new band, Rainbow, who have just released their fifth album. Roger Glover joined Rainbow as of their "Down to Earth" album. Ian Gillian has formed a new band and they're recording an L.P. Lord and Paice aren't doing much of anything at the moment.

The original Purple lineup consisted of Blackmore (guitar), Paice (drums), Lord (keyboards), plus Nick Simper (bass) and Rod Evans (vocals). Simper and Evans were replaced by Glover and Gillian, who were in turn replaced by Glenn Hughes and David Coverdale.

In their last year as Purple, Blackmore was replaced by the late guitarist, Tommy Bolin.

BEGINNING ROCKERS

Q: What advice do you have for a beginning rock guitarist? How do you get to cut an album, and how do you get started in the music business?--Mike Welch, Bismarck, N.D.

A: The best advice is very simple: practice. Take some of your favorite records and try to learn the guitar parts from them. By imitating, you'll gradually develop your own style. Play with other musicians as soon as possible and get out there in front of live audiences. You'll find out very quickly how you're doing and you'll be surprised by how much you'll learn.

The usual route to recording stardom is to get a major record label interested in you by way of a demonstration tape or a live show. Some, such as Tom Scholz of Boston, made it by recording their own album and then presenting a finished package to a record label.

There are several good books on making it in the music business, so check the music section of your local bookstore.

Firefall Goes On Tour to Promote New Album

"Last year was definitely intense," says Mark Andes, the blond bassist of Colorado's Firefall. "We spent close to six months on the road."

It was a rough period for Firefall in more ways than one.

The band recorded "Elan," their third LP for Atlantic, and decided it just wasn't good enough. They went back into the studio, recorded several tracks, added new ones and then embarked on the most grueling tour in the band's history.

"That period, when an' was released, was sort of an uneasy one for us," Andes explains from his home in Boulder. "There was lots of turmoil involved in redoing the album, and then we hit the road almost immediately--from November into May."

Despite the supporting tour, "Elan" didn't do as well as the band's two previous albums, both of which yielded several hits. Now, though, Firefall has high hopes for their fourth LP, to be titled "Undertow."

Andes speaks glowingly of the disc, slated for a late September release.

"It strikes me as being pretty fresh," he says. "All the songs are new, and they've got a nice, fresh sound. The playing is really good, I think. There's a lot more orchestration on this one than on the other albums."

"I hope it's well-received--it might make a noticeable difference to people who have been into Firefall from the start. I've never been one to be in favor of too many strings and horns," he adds. "I'm into rock and roll. But the material is strong enough to handle it."

Andes says he's particularly pleased with the variety on "Undertow": there is straight rock and roll, several of the band's trademark ballads, and for the first time, a track titled "Business Is Business," featuring unaccompanied acoustic guitar and voice.

Andes says he hears several potential hits on "Undertow," but adds with a laugh, "at best, that's a guessing game."

Judging by Andes' enthusiasm, "Undertow" could be the LP to bring back the days when tunes like "You Are the Woman" and "Livin' Ain't Livin'" were climbing the pop charts.

He says there will definitely be a new tour in support of the album, and adds, "I like touring, but I wouldn't mind getting right back into the studio instead of waiting a year, like we did before."

Little River Band Getting Stronger

Just about this time last year I wrote a record review on a band from Australia which used to be called Mississippi but later changed their name to a name that is becoming very well known. The band is the Little River Band and they have just released their fourth album in the United States.

When I wrote the article on "Sleeper Catcher" I predicted that we would be hearing a lot from the group and their unique style of music.

In comparing their first album "Diamantia Cocktail" and their latest release "First Under the Wire". There are some unmistakable similarities. One is the way the songs and style are so much alike such as the hit single "Lonesome Loser" has the same introduction as the hit "Happy Anniversary" where the song is sung without music in the beginning and breaks in with music when it picks up the beat.

There are also a few more notable songs on the disc. "Hard Life" is a great song with a prelude that is great. Other songs include "The Rumor" and "Man on the Run".

Members of the Little River

Band include: Beed Birtles (acoustic and electric rhythm guitars, lead and harmony vocals), David Briggs (lead electric guitars, acoustic and electric rhythm guitars), Graham Goble (acoustic and electric rhythm guitars, harmony vocals), Derek Pellicci (sonor drums and percussion) and Glenn Shorrock (lead and harmony vocals).

As I said before the influence of the Little River Band is doing nothing but getting stronger.

'Fun with Dick and Jane' shown Sept. 18

"One of the most effervescent comedies offered in years." This is what Frances Taylor wrote in the Long Island Press regarding the next movie offered by the UNC-W Fine Arts Committee. The film is "Fun with Dick and Jane" which will be shown Tuesday, September 18, in Kenan Auditorium at 8:00 p.m.

Jane Fonda and George Segal star in this contemporary, laugh provoking comedy. It is one of the biggest box-office hits of the year. Rex Reed wrote of this film that "'Fun with Dick and Jane' is fun for everyone."

The problem proposed by this movie--how can a happily married suburban couple support their more-than-middle class lifestyle when they both are out of work? Easily--by robbing stores and supermarkets. The Hollywood Reporter wrote that "Fonda and Segal are impressive comedians and their timing and delivery is impeccable." Bonnie and Clyde they ain't.

This is the third movie this semester presented by the Fine Arts Committee. Directed by Ted Kotcheff, this petition for major roles were very keen.

Legal Way

By E.J. DEMSON, J.D.

Campus Digest News Service
When property of a decedent's estate is located in several states, the principles of Conflict of Laws are applied. Example follows:

Q. In our deceased grandfather's will, he names nine heirs. He has real and personal property in several states. What law governs the distribution of this property to his heirs? By the way, our grandfather moved frequently.

A. General Rules of Conflict of Law (Am. Jur. 2d Ref.: Wills Sec.'s 54-70) provides: probate court process of distribution of real property to the heirs is governed by the law of the state where the real property is located and not where the testator or his heirs live. Personal property is governed by the law of the testator's domicile regardless of where in the United States the personal property is located, or where the heirs live.

Domicile in law means the intended home place of a person: it is manifested by where a person votes, pays taxes, attends church, local organizations in which he participates (24 Fed. Supp. 41,42). A person may have many residences but only one domicile.

Q. I know under Federal Tax Reform act of 1976 no federal estate tax return is required if the appraised value of the decedent's estate is, in 1979, $147,000 or less. But what property is included in a decedent's gross estate?

A. Federal statute (Code Sec. 2031-36) says the value of a decedent's estate is determined by court-appointed appraisers who consider all property in which the decedent owned or had an interest at death.

This includes property: (1) decedent transferred within three years of his death, or in which he retained an interest, power, use and possession during his lifetime, (2) property owned at death through the exercise of a power of attorney. All property of decedent is taxable, except that which the state law or the particular nature of the interest suggests a means for excluding it from the gross estate.

Allowance of estate tax deductions for funeral, probate administration expense, claims against the estate, and mortgages is governed by the law where the decedent's estate is being administered.

Q. My uncle has named me executor of his estate. He lives in Colorado and I live in Florida. His estate will be administered in Colorado. My travel expenses will be more than I can afford. Can I collect them from the estate?

A. Rev. Code Rule (7442) issued in Nov. 1977) involved deductibility of a non-local executor's travel expenses.

In a similar case as yours, the executor travel expenses—more than what a local executor would have incurred—were allowed and included in the estate's final accounting. He also received the normal executor's commission allowed by law.

Fellowship Programs funded by Grants

The Committee on Institutional Cooperation has established two fellowship programs designed to increase the representation of members of minority groups among those who hold doctorates in the social sciences and the humanities.

Funded by grants from the Lilly Endowment, Inc., and The Andrew W. Mellon Foundation that total more than $1 million, the program will provide 25 two-year fellowships in the social sciences and 10 in the humanities for the 1980-81 academic year.

The Committee on Institutional Cooperation (CIC) is the academic consortium of 11 Midwestern universities—the Big Ten universities and the University of Chicago. Recipients of the fellowships may use them at any one of the 11 CIC universities to which they are admitted for graduate study.

The fellowships provide full tuition plus a stipend of $4,250 for each of two academic years. The universities will provide two additional years of support if Fellows make normal progress towards the Ph.D.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Stay in the background, observe others, but let them take the lead. Later in the week you can make more pertinent observations. Travel with family members should be exciting over the weekend.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): Although energy may be low, be sure to finish a current project on time. Concentrate on your own affairs—not directing others' lives! Personal relationships, perhaps a romantic one, favor you.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20): Your pace is slower so take this opportunity to take a breather. Relax, get plenty of rest and be ready for an increase in energy next week. Don't act impulsively, jump to conclusions or listen to gossip.

LEO (July 23 to Aug. 22): There's a slowing of pace with the chance to get caught up on jobs left unfinished. Finances are important and you may have to cut down on some leisure-type entertainments that are expensive. A short-term romance is possible.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 to Sept. 22): Watch the tendency toward so much haste to promote a pet project that you step on other people's toes. Review budget and cut down where necessary. Tackle a home project with ingenuity and enthusiasm.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Your emotions are accentuated and it is a time when you long for love and approval. Restlessness or dissatisfaction may lead you into impulsive behavior that can be regretted later. Make decisions that are mentally inventive and creative.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Activity with groups is favored and a special honor may come your way. Look your best, be calm and confident of the special job you can do. You can come to a new awareness about your desires in relationships.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 19): Changes in personnel at work may prove unsettling. Don't lose your confidence and make erratic decisions. There are marvelous opportunities around you. Use your integrity, poise and abilities.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 to Feb. 18): You feel an inner peace and are mellowed out now. Friends are helpful and work goes well. You can sell yourself to someone approached on a business matter, and social activities with those you like most are very happy.

PISCES (Feb. 19 to March 20): The simple pleasures bring you contentment now so seek the company of people with whom you are extremely comfortable. Stick with an organized work plan although there could be many interruptions and distractions.

About 2,000 copies of the Atlantis are printed every semester. Ms. McDaniel says that this amount is sufficient and everyone who is interested receives one. Students pick up every copy.

The editor-in-chief also feels that the Atlantis should continue to be a free publication to students "because going to school is so expensive and there are too many things on campus that cost money."

The deadline for submitting poems, prose, and art work to the Atlantis for the fall issue has not yet been decided but should be announced in the near future, the editor states.

Ms. McDaniel, encourages students who are interested to join the Atlantis staff. No experience is necessary, only the time and the willingness to work. The next Atlantis staff meeting will be held Wednesday afternoon at four o'clock in the Pub. Everyone is welcome to attend.

Ms. McDaniel feels that with more students on the staff there will be more opinions and a better representation of the student body. She adds: "The Atlantis is not mine or the English department's, it's yours--UNCW's."

Photographers to Gain Recognition

The college photographer is about to gain a degree of recognition.

That's a promise from the Paterson Darkroom Club, a national organization of some 12,000 amateur photographers.

"Unfortunately, too many college students go unrecognized for their accomplishments," a Paterson spokesman said. "Aside from sports, there are not many activities that allow a student to receive recognition, even if the recognition is strictly personal."

Some students excel in music, acting, photography and other activities that may shape their future vocation," the spokesman continued. "Since the Paterson Darkroom Club is involved with photography, we believe it would be an excellent public service if we were to award a special Certificate of Recognition to students who have news pictures published in their college newspapers."

To receive a Certificate of Recognition, a student must submit a black and white copy of his or her news photo, along with a tear-sheet from the college newspaper in which the picture was published. Name and address should be included on the back of the picture. Both picture and tear-sheet should be mailed to the Paterson Darkroom Club, 211

East 43rd Street, New York, NY 10017.

There is no deadline when pictures should be received. They can be submitted at any time during the next twelve months.

"This is not a contest," said the Paterson Darkroom Club spokesman. "Editors of college newspapers will have passed judgement on the pictures, and this is sufficient to warrant a Certificate of Recognition for the student."

There is a chance that some photos may be published in the national newsletter, Paterson Developments, it was said.

Meeting Announced

Attention Social Work majors: there will be a meeting of the Social Work Club (Social Works Association for People) S.W.A.P., Thursday, Sept. 20 at 2 p.m. in H104. The club just started last year and we were able to sponsor an author of a human services book and other activities before the year was up. This year we are on the trail of bigger and better things. Some of this year's activities could be a big plus on your resume and you know what that means. So invest some of your time; it will pay off in dividends of fun and career development! So come out and join us Sept. 20 at 2 p.m. in H104.

New Techniques Announced

Amateur photographers have a new source to advance their darkroom techniques.

Braun North America, a division of the Gillette Company, has launched the Paterson Darkroom Club. A membership fee is $5 for one year, or $8.50 for two years.

A members receives a kit of useful information: a layout for a darkroom, a quarterly publication, written by professional photographers, and a "how-to" book on the darkroom. There are some other useful items, such as a darkroom doorknob sign to advise if one can enter the room or should wait. Identification labels for chemical and trays are also included in the kit. But one of the more valuable items is a membership card which provides a 10 per cent rebate on darkroom merchandise bought at a photo store.

Interested? Write: Paterson Darkroom Club, 211 East 43rd Street, New York, New York 10017.

DeLuca Vetos Resolution with Senate Support; Senate Disallows DeLuca Bid for Vice-Presidency

By Helen Hazelton

The student Senate was called to order at 7:05 p.m. Thursday September 12, 1979 in the Pub. Senior class president Frank Colvin presided as vice-president.

President DeLuca vetoed the resolution passed at last week's meeting which froze all funds in the executive account. A percentage of the executive funds are allocated to pay the salary of a clerk-typist for the SGA. This position had been down-graded from an administrative assistant to a clerk-typist by President DeLuca earlier this year. In his report to the Senate, DeLuca said that he vetoed the resolution "in the best interests of the SGA" and later reprimanded the Senate for taking such action to freeze the funds.

majority vote. Senior senator Jack Allen stated that more complications could arise from a 2/3 majority vote to override the veto than was necessary. By a majority vote from the Senate, the veto was not contested.

The Senate passed a motion not to allow DeLuca to run for the office of vice-president of the SGA, in light of his position now as president.

There will be an emergency meeting of the Senate at 5 p.m. in C218 Wednesday, Sept. 19, 1979. This meeting will be held immediately before the impeachment hearing scheduled for President DeLuca. The hearing will be held in the Pub at 7pm.

The next meeting of the Senate will be held Thursday, 7pm in C218. All interested persons are invited to attend.

Concert Is September 26

Cross Feels at Home with 12 String Guitar In Hand

By Tricia Wallace

Mike Cross, a self-labelled "hillbilly, hippie, folksinger," by virtue of his musical talent, guitar pickin', and artful storytellin', is returning to Kenan Auditorium September 26.

Those lucky enough to catch last year's concert already know that from the minute Mike Cross steps on stage, his audience becomes a willing captive as he weaves a web of foot-stompin', tear-jerkin', story-tellin' music.

Mike, who cut his third album, The Bounty Hunter, this year has come a long way from the guy who first picked up a guitar at age 21. At that time he was going to school in Chapel Hill studying to be a lawyer. Larry Reynolds, who writes some of Mike's songs, convinced him to start performing in the college coffeehouse and in a few small clubs around Chapel Hill. One thing led to another. Mike cut his first album, Child Prodigy, and after two years of law school decided that he had something better going with his music and he's best stick with it.

Listening to Mike Cross on any of his albums and listening to him on stage are two separate experiences. Mike's albums are professionally polished with strings, horns, and background vocals added for texture. But the key word to his live concerts is-live. Mike is the only person on stage and he takes full advantage of this by performing acoustically and visually.

Mike Cross

Mike's fingers feel most at home on a six or twelve string acoustic guitar or a fiddle. He confides that for lack of anything else to do one afternoon he started pickin' on a banjo. The Bounty Hunter contains a song, "Liquor in the Well," that bears the fruits of that boring afternoon.

Recording executives have long tried to hang labels on Mike Cross' music. But they just won't stay on. His style is totally unique. His songs have the rich flavor of mountain and Irish traditional tunes, yet still satisfy contemporary rockers.

Mike Cross says his songs are a "fusion of experience and imagination" or "a composite of things that have happened and things I've imagined." Mike loves to tell stories and he makes sure his songs tell them, too. Most people just think Mike's songs are pure fun.

Mike makes his home in Chapel Hill with his wife Laurie and their 18-month-old son. But he says, "Wilmington is my favorite place on earth to play." The people here have made him feel right at home, he says, and have given him strong support in the past.

Mike is looking forward to being in Kenan Auditorium again next Wednesday night where he plans to play old favorites and also introduce some new material. And if folks around Wilmington think back to Mike's last concert, they'll be looking forward to it, too.

Student Involvement Lacking at University

When I cast my ballot for SGA elections on Thursday I was dismayed to see there were only seven candidates for representatives-at-large, with seven seats to fill.

I realize that apathy, and complaints of apathy, have over recent years been the rule of UNCW campus politics. Certainly, many of the students I have spoken with are uninformed with regard to the scope of student authority on many issues that affect almost every student.

Student senators control a budget that is estimated to exceed 120,000 dollars. I have been in attendance at every meeting that this senate has held, going back to when they first met last spring and have nothing but praise for the care they have given these allocations, their personal dedications to the interests of the student body, and their willingness to compromise on issues in order to settle differences of opinion among themselves.

It puzzles me that more students do not take an interest in the SGA, since each student pays fees in order to fund the programs that the SGA charters. These fees are also the only money that students pay over which they have direct control.

This leads me to the dismay I felt at seeing that the ballot did not contain more candidates names. It also contained only one name that I was familiar with, and I make an honest effort to be aware of campus politics.

This is also a common complaint during elections, that most students don't know who the candidates are. In this case, however, it would not affect the outcome of the election of representatives-at-large, all are assured of a senate seat since there were only seven candidates for seven offices. Still, candidates should make efforts to make their views, names, and faces more visible. I understand that it is far too common for most students running for office fail to make their views known.

By no means am I criticizing the candidates who did run for office for at least they, by virtue of seeking office, exhibited interest in the SGA. I am confident they will make important contributions to the senate and will bring the same amount of enthusiasm and dedication that our current senate displays.

Apathy toward student government is likely to continue unless more people become informed of the very real authority that we as students can wield. Once we as students understand that we can have an effective voice in those decisions that are closest to us, perhaps greater student involvement will be the result.

Bill Sanders

Colvin Comes Through In The Clutch

The SGA Vice-President withdrew from UNCW; the SGA administrative assistant position was eliminated; there was no SGA clerk-typist to call on for help; the SGA President was unanimously impeached by the student legislature; there were three SGA Constitutions and no one knew which one was the correct and approved version that was to be used this year; there were only five members on the student court to try the SGA President when there were nine needed.

This is enough trouble to break up most organizations, but one person by virtue of his position stepped up to take over this critical situation. This person was Frank Colvin (the Senior Class President). Frank took over as SGA Vice-President and guided it through the majority of the problems that faced the SGA since this semester began. He took one problem at a time and worked at solving them when he should have been complaining about the terrible situation that he had before him. Frank continued to seek advice and guidance from the members of the SGA, the administration, and unlike some of the SGA representatives he sought out input from the students themselves before he made the decisions that in the long run will effect all of us. He also provided the leadership for the senate and helped fill in for the duties that the present SGA President neglected to do.

A new election has taken place this week, and Frank Colvin will step back down to his regular position, but we would like to thank him for one-hell-of-a-job of pulling an impossible situation back into a productive and credible organization once again. We will miss your determined leadership and problem solving ability. Thanks Frank, friends of the SGA selfes before he made the decisions that in the long run will effect all of us. He also provided the leadership for the senate and helped fill in for the duties that the present SGA President neglected to do.

KEGS FOUND!

All right UNCW! The Dance Committee would like to extend a hearty thanks to the individuals involved in the finding of the kegs.

After much super sleuthing and many dead ends the clues were finally put together last week. The kegs were histed by some local high school kids that came to our Block Party. The University Program Board has decided not to press charges because the kegs were returned willingly (more or less). They were found in the woods out next to New Hanover Hospital and hidden by cut pine trees. Because the kegs were returned it is party time once again. The next party will be Sept. 28; keep an eye out for info pertaining to what's going down.

*Thanks UNCW,
Mark Davis
Dance Committee*

Douglas Searches for Fairness

Dear Editor:

As future leaders of our country, it is going to be our duty to modify the United States system where we democratically decide it needs to be modified, right? Well, I think we ought to start right here at UNCW. I am writing concerning, once again, the parking situation on campus.

As stated in the Sept. 5 edition of the "Seahawk" newspaper, the parking lot fund receives well over one hundred thousand dollars from parking permits alone plus who knows how much more for fines. What I'm talking about is twenty-five dollars a head for a permit. That's steep. For twenty-five dollars I'd expect to pull up to the front door and have someone park for me. But no. On busy days we are to utilize our "privilege to hunt" and probably end up parking on the other side of campus from where our classes are. Personally, I didn't shell out that kind of money for a ten minute walk to class. With the overall large amount of money involved, I expect ample, convenient and an organized system for parking.

Being as it is (or was) our money, I think we have a right to know exactly where this money goes. It was said in the previous article that it goes for the policing and upkeep of the lots. Now, come on, $100,000? I think a print-out of where our money is going and how much there actually is should be posted for public display. Could it be that there is overcharging going on?

If there is to be such an outrageous sum for a permit to park, then we should get what we are paying for. And if there is excess being made, then it should be returned to the students and a lower parking fee be charged.

Searching for Fairness,
Robert Douglas

SWAP WANTS TO HELP

Students, do you need help? There is a good chance that at some point in your stay at UNCW you will be faced with a problem that is just too much for you to handle. It could be trouble with the law, personal problems, or you can't find a place to live.

The Social Work Club (SWAP) wants to help. We feel the students should have a place on campus where they can get information or help in getting help to deal with tough problems. Also the students should have access to counseling, either a professional or a student who can ease the frustration or provide help in dealing with a really bad situation. SWAP is attempting to create such a place but we need to know what the students want. So please take the time to answer the questions below. You may be doing yourself a favor.

TAKE PRECAUTIONS!

Night classes have just finished, and its time to hit the pillow. Parking's as bad as usual and has left me a space at the bottom of the hill. I'm tired, and to quicken my pace would be asking for a miracle. Minutes later there is total silence and the students' conscience has quieted. Time has taken its toll and our campuses first victim was threatened, mugged, and killed. This is only a story, but does it take a true to life murder to get results?

Due to the parking circumstances that each one of us has experienced one time or another, these suggestions have been designed to help us, the victims, to get where we're going...in one piece.

SOMEONE IS FOLLOWING YOU

Let's assume you're on a busy street and being followed. Strike up a conversation with anybody or even explain the situation to them. Go into the nearest place where there are people and lots of them. Chances are that one will be kind enough to understand and help you out. Find a phone and pretend to call or really make one to the police station. Many times this leaves the follower so nervous, he goes elsewhere.

If you're on a deserted street or sidewalk, create a scene. Throw objects through windows, scream, or even run ringing doorbells.

According to Detective Burrascano, by keeping silent, you are just giving yourself up to the attacker. He knows he has made you uneasy and that you're too afraid to do anything about it.

YOU ARE ALONE

If you're alone in your car, drive to a populated area such as a hospital, bus depo, or even a police station. Never keep driving until you become trapped or isolated. Also, never go home to an empty house. This informs him just where you live and gives him the option of coming back.

It May Save Your Life

YOUR MONEY OR YOUR LIFE

Today most girls and women carry purses everywhere they go. If you must, carry it up under your shoulder and tight to your body. Men, carry those wallets inside a jacket pocket or somewhere in the front of your body. Avoid bulky wallets because they only tease the attacker. Now the question arises, what if he's armed and threatening you with a weapon? For heaven's sake give up whatever you have and don't ever fight with the mugger. Money just isn't that important, and he or she may even take your life.

RAPE, HITCHHIKING

Rape occurs because the rapist wants to feel superior, and they're usually acts of violence, not passion. The best thing to do is keep your sanity and stay under control. The rapist is a human being and can be dealt with by reason. Talk to him and try to establish human contact. Never belittle him by fighting back. Remember, he's got the advantage.

And as for hitchhiking, its just asking for trouble. No matter who you are with or where you are, don't do it! Many hikers feel that by traveling in couples, male and female, there is more protection. That is not always true.

At times the guy is killed, and the girl is raped and killed. Many safety rules have been set up to protect the hitchhiker such as stay close to the door, hold onto the handle, and always be ready to jump. Unfortunately, none of them are always 100 percent successful. What if he pulls a knife to your throat? Don't take the risk, lifes too valuable!

So please take these precautions and they may one day save your life.

Government Cites Boston For Violating Inflation Guidelines

WASHINGTON, D.C. (CPS) Ever since President Jimmy Carter announced his voluntary wage-price guidelines last fall, colleges and universities have been lobbying for special treatment. Higher education lobbies argued that they should not be treated as for-profit institutions, and that they should be allowed to raise student costs more than the seven percent the guidelines allowed.

That argument suffered a setback when, just before Labor Day, the Council on Wage and Price Stability cited Boston University for "probable noncompliance" with the guidelines.

Though a final decision has not yet been made, BU could lose some $50 million in federal grants and contracts this year.

The Boston case is the Council's first response to last spring's round of protests over spiralling tuition costs, to numerous individual student complaints to the Council, and the many requests for "clarification" of the guidelines from colleges and universities.

In fact many schools would appear to have violated the guidelines. A report from the College Board estimated that a student going to a four-year private college will pay 10.6 percent more than last year. Public four-year schools' cost are up an average 8.5 percent.

Things are even worse for students who commute to and from classes. The same report shows that total costs for those who commute to two-year private colleges are up 14.7 percent. Commuters' costs at two-year public colleges are up 10.1 percent this year.

Though the wage-price guidelines are voluntary, the Carter administration has pledged to withhold federal contracts worth more than $5 million from organizations that violate the guidelines.

The clash between rising tuition prices and the inflation guidelines has inspired many a trip to Washington by administrators. Council Chairman Arthur Corazzini admitted that he'd gotten a lot of inquiries, but refused to say which schools—or even how many—have requested exemptions from the guidelines.

"The information should be kept confidential," he explained. "It's a matter of propriety."

Corazzini did say that "tuition is a price of an economic unit, just like anything else." AND SHOULD CONSEQUENTLY BE SUBJECT TO THE GUIDELINES.

Yet until the August 29 citation, the Council had not officially moved against a college or university. Even then, the announcement was guarded. Craig Hoogstra, a staffer in the Council's Office of Pay Monitoring, said "it appears to us initially that the schools are in compliance," but that the announcement was not a finding of a violation.

Such a finding, if there is one, will have to await a broadier investigation.

The council seems to be objecting to a new faculty contract, won last spring after months of frequently-bitter negotiations and a strike. As the result, the faculty got a seven percent increase last year, a 10.5 percent hike for the 79-80 year, and will get a 12 percent increase for 1980-81.

Robert Bergenheim, a BU vice president, told Higher Education Daily that the increases were part of a university effort to have its faculty wages "catch up" to average pay scales.

Such increases, of course, influence tuition levels. So do factors like the inflated costs of other college goods and services. BU, for example, is using less oil now than it did before the 1973 Arab oil embargo, but its fuel costs are five times what they were then.

"Colleges," sums up Harvard Finance Director Thomas O'Brien, "are being squeezed by rapid cost increases on the one hand, and depressed revenues on the other."

One reason for "depressed revenues" is the tax-cutting mood of many state legislatures. Legislatures in Massachusetts, North Dakota, New Jersey, Ohio, New York, and other states have insisted that students—through higher tuitions—pay for a greater percentage of their educations.

Until recently, tuition accounted for an average of 11 percent of the cost of higher education. Some legislatures want the figure increased to 25 percent.

Those kinds of pressures have forced tuition at public schools in Oregon up 16 percent this year. Stanford's tuition rose nearly nine percent, the University of Chicago's 9.3 percent, and places as different as New Mexico State and Tufts in excess of ten percent.

Last spring the Council on Wage and Price Stability ruled that tuition was just one part of the price a school charges a student. Consequently, a school would violate the guidelines only if total student charges—tuition plus housing plus student fees—exceeded the seven percent limit.

The increases are part of a long-term trend that pre-dates the tax-cutting fever in most legislatures. From 1968 to 1978, in-state students at public colleges and universities suffered a 72 percent cost increase. Out-of-state students have had it even worse, with a 92 percent increase over the ten years.

With or without council citations, the trend is likely to continue. Estimates for the 1990s are that a degree from a four-year public college may cost some $47,000. Private college will weigh in at $82,000. Even now, as the 79-80 academic year just begins, there are omens. Administrators at Arizona State University and Nicholls State in Louisiana have begun gently warning their students of another round of tuition and fee increases in 1980.

ELECTION RESULTS SHOW 12 PERCENT TURNOUT

By Janet Hundley

Approximately four thousand students had an opportunity to vote for the new SGA representatives, but voter turnout was less than 12 percent. Only 462 students turned out to vote for the representatives. In addition to the low voter turnout, September 13 and 14, several voters voted no preference.

Dixie Dregs Music Is Intense and Powerful

The most difficult aspect about DIXIE DREGS is accurately categorizing the group's music. While some perceive this trailblazing instrumental quintet's materials as rock and jazz 'fusion', the members don't stop there. "We rarely think of labels," says guitarist Steve Morse, "but if we did, it would be something like 'electric chamber music'."

Writing a probing feature for Down Beat magazine, Larry Birnbaum puts it this way: "Eschewing vocals, the Dregs combine equal parts of rock, jazz, country, and classical musics to spin a seamless web of sound with rare freshness and originality."

The past year was by far the most important one yet in the Dregs' history. Playing to a much wider range of audiences than ever before, the group won a host of new fans and admirers in both the listening public and the world of fellow players, further enhancing the band's reputation as musicians' musicians. The recent past also saw DIXIE DREGS make a big entrance into the reputable press with, among many others, pieces appearing in "Down Beat," "Rolling Stone," the "New York Times," "Guitar Player," and "Oenhouse."

A rather unusual origin belongs to DIXIE DREGS, in that they were formed for college credit. The University of Miami School of Music has one of the finest reputations in the country and boasts an innovative and effective jazz curriculum. For example, during the Dregs educational period, some of the jazz faculty included guitarist Pat Metheny, fusion drummer Michael Walden, and Weather Report bassist Jaco Pastorius.

Steve Morse and bassist Andy West had played in an earlier conventional rock band in Augusta, Georgia called Dixie Grit. In Augusta, Morse had been thrown out of high school for refusing to cut his hair, and when he nevertheless applied to UM, the Music Department was so impressed with Steve's guitar technique, his admission was pushed through without a high school diploma.

Violinist Sloan and drummer Morgenstein met Morse and West shortly after the latter two arrived in Miami. Sloan finished a stint with the Miami Philharmonic at the same time that West was talked into also enrolling at UM. The four formed a group and soon added Steve Davidowski on Keyboards.

For college credit, the five, now known as DIXIE DREGS, produced and recorded "The Great Spectacular" album, later privately issued and now a collector's item. After graduation, the quintet moved to Augusta and began playing live dates. Soon their reputation reached Capricorn Records, and DIXIE DREGS were signed, later moving to Atlanta.

Quickly the group's individual and collective prowess became cohesive with a musical identity that was at times serious and exploratory, at others playful and humorous, frequently awesome. The debut LP "Free Fall," produced by Stewart Levine, was released in the spring of 1977.

Later that year keyboardist Mark Parrish replaced Davidowski as the band played more and more dates, widening their near fanatical following. Momentum increased with their second LP, "What If," released in March 1978 and produced by Ken Scott, noted for his work with Paul McCartney, John McLaughlin, and Supertramp. At this point, the attention grew by leaps; in San Francisco the Dregs bedazzled the editors of "Guitar Player," "Contemporary Keyboard," and the "Examiner"; after an LA performance, praise came from notables like Jean-Luc Ponty, John McLaughlin, and Stanley Clarke, among others. Then came the invitation to appear at the historic Montreaux Jazz Festival.

Montreaux went so well for DIXIE DREGS that one side of their new album, "Night of the Living Dregs," represents highlights of that performance including the fascinating title tune, the rollicking uniquely-country flavored "the Bash," and the lively, witty "Leprechaun Promenade". Ken Scott, who also produced the live side, then took the band into Chateau Records. They emerged with the scintillating studio half, including "Punk Sandwich", a heavier rock piece than previous Dregs outing, and

"Country House Shuffle", featuring solos by Morse and Sloan and written when the group was practicing in an antique store. "The Riff Raff" shows a more delicate side of DIXIE DREGS, with Sloan and Morse in an acoustic duet described by Steve as "the most challenging piece that I've yet attempted". The introspective ballad "Long Slow Distance" highlights the entire band, set in place by West's dazzling bass figures and Morgenstein's articulate drumming.

"Night of the Living Dregs," according to Steve Morse, is "much more mature, with even more superior production. We like to keep things changing, ever improving, and we think 'Night is a very good representation. A lot of credit has to go to Ken Scott, he doesn't tamper with the music, but he tells us what will work, which is invaluable in arranging."

As the studio side was completed, Mark Parrish left the band, being replaced by Tee Lavitz, a Miami native and also a UM alumnus. "He was a member of the hottest jazz group at the University," says Steve, "and Tee's improvisational ability made him a natural."

While the DIXIE DREGS' music defies categorization, it definitely is intense and powerful listening.

The stellar performances on "Night of the Living Dregs" are, if anything further proof.

Continuing Education Offers Different Kinds of Classes

The office of Continuing Education is an arm of the university that really tries to extend its resources into the broader community and makes available some things other than the traditional kinds of classes.

These services also benefit the campus clientele—students, faculty and staff.

According to Dr. James C. Edmundson, director of the office of Continuing Education, his office is getting involved in a wide variety of short courses, workshops and community needs which may be met by college resources.

Many people are participating in these activities. The office has had an increase of 47 percent in growth during the past year.

Edmundson emphasized that his department will be trying in every way possible to benefit campus clientele. One such way is to offer a cost reduction plan for students. For example, students will be allowed to buy season memberships for a cinema series which starts September 13. Fourteen films may be seen for a fee of $5. Continuing Education hopes to set up many other such activities during the year, Edmundson said.

The office must be operated under a budget. Fees are charged for most events. Some things are done for public service which are free of charge. These are mostly co-sponsored. Included in this category are the series of lectures.

"We like to work in that area as much as possible, but we do have fees attached to a lot of our programs, which is a necessity from a budget standpoint," said Dr. Edmundson.

The fall schedule for Continuing Education involves numerous courses. The present offerings scheduled are not all inclusive. As other things come up they'll be added to the list.

Joining the staff as program coordinator is Mr. Marvin Davis, originally of Wilmington. He will be working primarily in two capacities. One will be in the area of family violence, assisting local agencies in doing some training work and in public awareness with the goal of cutting down the incidence rate of family violence.

In his second capacity Mr. Davis will be working in the teacher-in-service training area.

There is a management development program that involves not only faculty from this school of Business Administration, but also some faculty from N.C. State University. There also is a speakers' bureau. This brings talent where it is needed. There will be printed another brochure this year that lists various faculty and administration from the university who have certain topical areas that they would like to speak on and be available to the public. Continuing Education handles these calls and inquiries and the service is free.

Lenient Pot Laws Expected

WASHINGTON, D.C. (CPS) The leading marijuana lobbying group thinks that President Carter's summer shake-up of the cabinet and the White House staff may have cleared the way for more lenient federal pot policies.

Larry Schott, director of the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws (NORML), has hopes that new Health, Education and Welfare Secretary Patricia Harris may be more sympathetic to NORML's efforts than her predecessors. Schott says that Joseph Califano, the HEW Secretary who preceded Harris, ignored NORML pleas to end curbs on medical uses of marijuana and forced the lobbying group to sue in federal court. The case is still pending.

But Harris' appointment, confirmed by the Senate of July 31, "may send the whole matter back to HEW," Schott says. He'd like to give Harris "an opportunity to recommend re-classification of marijuana. Harris is known as both independent and fair-minded."

Schott is similarly heartened by the confirmation of Benjamin Civiletti as the new Attorney General. Civiletti told "Meet the Press" in August that, while he opposed decriminalization of marijuana, he did favor relaxing penalties for certain "mild" strains of grass.

Accordingly, NORML wired President Carter its support for Califano's ouster, asking for a White House "push" for a "sensible drug policy."

During the presidential campaign, Carter pledged to work for more lenient marijuana laws. However, NORML lost an important ally in the White House when Dr. Peter Bourne was forced to resign after writing a false prescription for another White House staffer in 1978.

Improve Your Skills

Students can now improve their study skills, as well as reading rate, retention, and comprehension, through a new service offered free by the Counseling and Testing Center, located in the Pub.

Edward Riley, a specialist in reading and study improvement, will supervise and assist in the self-study program, which is available Mondays through Fridays from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

According to Riley, the reading and studying lab has been designed to benefit all students. Whether a student reads on a sixth grade level or just wants to sharpen his or her skills, the lab can help; he said.

Interested students should see receptionist Pam Caudill in the center for an appointment.

Practice Resumes

[After Upset]

Sports Information Department

"We thought the South Carolina game was ours, but a couple of things happened that we couldn't control," Dixon says, referring to two crucial officials' calls. "But I think we'll be ready for State. Once we start practicing again this week, that will take our minds off the loss and get us thinking about what's ahead."

No one took that loss to the Gamecocks any harder than Dixon, who is a self-admitted "boiler guy," whose constant banter at times can be considered somewhat antagonizing.

"I know I'm a very emotional person," he states, "and a lot of times I say stuff on the spur of the moment that shouldn't be taken seriously."

"Some times it hurts me, but other times I feel that people need to be reminded of things and be motivated a little. I realize that I'm not as skilled as a lot of our players, but I try to make up for that with hustle. That can overcome a lot."

"Our schedule is a demanding one, but this is the best overall team I've played on in my four years," Dixon concludes. "We have a chance to finish with a very good record and I'm confident that we can."

A victory at N.C. State would be a big step in that direction, not to mention the personal satisfaction it would give one Ashley Dixon--Raleigh's contribution to Seahawk Soccer in 1979.

UNCW COACH CALVIN LANE COMMENTS:

The game at State on Saturday will, of course, be another tough one. They have been placing more emphasis on soccer the past couple of years, especially in the number of scholarships awarded, and have built a fine program.

State has beaten us two years in a row and the team this year is probably the best they have ever had.

We have played two other very good teams the past week, however, and could easily have won both (tied Carolina, 1-1, lost to USC, 3-2), so we feel that it should be a great soccer game this week.

FALL SPORTS BEGIN

Volleyball, Cross Country, and Women's Tennis--Get Under Way

WILMINGTON--Fall sports begin in earnest this week at UNCW Wilmington as the volleyball, cross country and women's tennis teams all get underway.

Two new coaches will also be making their debuts for the Seahawks--Bill Atwill in cross country and Debbie Dowd in tennis.

Judy Peel returns for her second season as head volleyball coach, however, and she is quite optimistic about her team's prospects.

"The enthusiasm and skill level of the girls is much better this year," Peel says. "I'm encouraged by our progress and looking forward to the season. We should be much improved."

The Seahawks spikers, whose 14-player roster lists nine freshmen, open Thursday (Sept. 20) at North Carolina Central in a tri-match with Greensboro College.

Top returnees from last year's 3-16 club are Lisa Montague and Sara Gaither.

The cross country squad sees its initial action on Saturday (Sept. 22) in the Pembroke State Invitational. New coach Bill Atwill has been putting 11 runners through fall workouts and feels the team is making progress.

"We're striving to strengthen the program at the team level," Atwill points out. "We have a fairly busy schedule and most of our people have been working hard."

Paul Lupica heads the returning competitors, while freshmen Arnold Houston and Robbie Burke should contribute right away.

The Lady Seahawk tennis team, under first-year coach Debbie Dowd, is also a young squad, composed mostly of freshmen. Conchie Gemborys and Brenda Kalevas are the lone returning players from last year's 7-5 team.

"Our lineup right now is uncertain," Dowd, who will also coach the softball team at UNCW this spring, says. "We hope to use our fall schedule to gain the experience for our younger players, in preparation for the spring matches and the state championships."

Opening match for Dowd's netters is Friday (Sept. 21) at Elon.

Bob Hope says, "Help keep Red Cross ready."

USC Gamecocks win

Battle of Birds with 3-2 victory over Seahawks

WILMINGTON--As the UNC-Wilmington soccer team prepares for Saturday's visit to North Carolina State, probably no player on the Seahawk squad wants to win more than senior midfielder Ashley Dixon.

UNCW meets the Wolfpack at 2 p.m. Saturday (Sept. 22) on the State campus field.

For Dixon, the trip to Raleigh is a familiar one--one that he has made many times the past four years as he has traveled from Wilmington to his hometown.

A former standout player at Sanderson High, Dixon knows that the game this week will be his last athletic visit to Raleigh, and he desperately wants to enjoy it.

"Winning at State would be a big accomplishment for us," Dixon says. "We lost up there two years ago (3-2), then they shut us out last year at our place, 3-0."

"They have a couple of players from Raleigh who are tough, particularly Jim Mills in goal, and there are always a lot of my friends and people I know at the game. This will be my last chance to beat them and I want it bad."

Even more frustrating for Dixon was that he had to live last year's defeat, the first time UNCW had been held scoreless in 32 games, from the sidelines with a broken foot.

The Seahawks stand 2-1-1 after Sunday's loss at South Carolina, 3-2, and will have no easy time returning to the win column against a highly touted Wolfpack team.

State is led by All-ACC goalie Mills, midfielder Jim Burman and striker Tom Fink, who scored twice against UNCW last year. The Wolfpack are 4-1-1, including a 1-0 victory over North Carolina on the way to the championship of the Mayor's Cup Tourney in Greenville.

Varsity Swim Team

Invited to N.C. State

The UNC-Wilmington swim team, entering only its second season of men's varsity competition, has been invited to participate in the Atlantic Coast Relays, Nov. 10-11, at North Carolina State University.

"This is a tremendous step forward for our program," UNCW coach Dave Allen says.

"The meet will give us something to point toward in our early training and give us some valuable experience against outstanding competition."

The meet, which is hosted annually at N.C. State, consists of relay events only with no individual competition or awards.

Big Four schools State, North Carolina, Duke and Wake Forest are yearly participants, while other Atlantic Coast Conference members and other area schools often take part also.

UNCW completed the 1978-79 season with a fine 9-2 dual meet record. The Seahawks will be meeting Wake Forest in a dual meet this season in Winston-Salem.

The complete 1979-80 schedule will be announced later.

Sports Information Director Valued Tremendously

John Justus, Sports Information Director, describes his job in two words: "Busy! Great!" Justus, who has held his position since August 1977, is an invaluable asset to players and coaches alike.

Some of his duties include "handline publicity and information pertaining to statistics, athletes, and coaches." Justus also oversees the editing of various team brochures, which list players and their accomplishments in previous seasons. "During basketball season we try to put together the brochures so that they will catch the eye of recruiters," explained Justus. He added that he is also responsible for seeing that an athlete's achievements make the sports page in his hometown newspaper.

Graduating from UNC-Chapel Hill in 1975 with a degree in Journalism, Justus went on to receive his master's degree in Athletic Administration at Ohio University in 1976. Following this event he was employed in the Commissioner's office of the Atlantic Coast Conference in Greensboro.

"Then I heard about the position opening up here at UNCW," Justus continued. "I was really excited because this is the first time there has ever been a sports Information Director at this university."

John Justus
Sports Information Director

Although he is vitally involved with all aspects of the campus sporting scene, Justus has "a great working relationship with Mel Gibson (head basketball coach) and members of the Seahawk basketball team. Mel has really made me feel a part of the basketball program; I've travelled with the team to out-of-town games and we've shared some memorable experiences." Justus also remarked that he has had nothing but positive experiences with faculty and administrative members.

In addition to his job as SID, Justus also serves as faculty advisor for the Seahawk staff. He has only recently assumed this responsibility and commented "It's all sort of new to me, but I don't intend to influence editorial opinions or censor articles. The staff is doing fine and I'm just there in case problems should arise."

Justus' office, which is located in Hanover Hall, is open to all interested students. "Anyone who is interested in working as a student assistant in my office can come in and see me. Some duties would include writing, keeping statistics and helping out at games. It's one way to learn sports from the inside out."

Lady Seahawks Finish Fifth

What do Sheila Lang, Connie Poole, Robbie Roberts and Darci Wilson have in common? Answer--together, they comprise the first ever women's intercollegiate golf team at UNCW and they officially opened their initial season this past week.

The girls finished fifth in the tough Longwood Invitational in Farmville, Va., last week-end with Lang, however, capturing medalist honors in the eight-team event.

Monday and Tuesday of this week, UNCW met Bowling Green University (of Ohio) and Meredith College in a tri-match here at the Wilmington Municipal course, finishing second to Bowling Green by three shots.

Next action for the Lady Seahawks is Sept. 28-29, when they travel to the Mary Baldwin Invitational in Staunton, Va.

Observations of A Barfly

Picture the scene: It's ladies night at the Crest, a local jam joint. The band is stomping, screeching, and sweating simultaneously (no easy accomplishment...ask any cheerleader). A few feet away from the stage, an age-old drama is reenacted. Eye meets Thigh-er. Boy Meets Girl.

But wait! A new element—equality, for cryin' out loud!—is present. Here's how such an encounter might now take place in today's liberated society.

Guy ogles girl, drooling gently. Girl eyes guy. He leers, she sneers. The mood has been established. Finally, she speaks.

Girl: Hey, nice buns. Guy (confused): Huh? Me? Girl: I'm not talking to Oscar maver buddy.

Guy: Oh, are you one of those uh, rear-end chicks? Girl: More or less. What are you?

Guy: Ahh, Capricorn. Girl: Jesus. I meant, you know sexually.

Campus Chuckles by Julie Russ

Guy (hopelessly lost): Oh, I dig it. Sex, I mean.

Girl (wearily): No kiddin'.

Guy: Hey, you've got nice legs. I'm a leg man, myself.

Girl (checking out his long hair and fragile wrists): Man, huh?

Guy: Well, I try.

Girl: Good for you. Wanna beer?

Guy (blushing): Naah, I'm driving. You know how it is.

Girl: Help me, Lord.

Guy: Hey, I'm no goody-goody, y'know!

Girl: Oh yeah? Prove it.

Guy (turning pale): Mgfwm?

Girl: Let's head for the dunes.

Guy (outraged): What kind of person do you think I am?

Girl: Hey, I was only hoping.

Guy: Yeah, will, so much for your hopes, Get lost, scag!

Girl (irritated): Look, kid, here's a dime. Go buy yourself a better attitude.

Guy (turning away): Yecch! You women are all alike, just after one thing. You're disgusting.

Girl (sighing into her beer): Just human, bud, just human.

At this point the guy leaves the scene and the girl proceeds to drown her sorrows in Heineken. Another meaningless encounter for these swinging singles. And yet, irony of ironies, both will be in the same place at the same time next week...which only goes to show, some things never change!

Led Zeppelin Never Fails to Pull us Through

In these trying times of disco, punk rock and fading balladeers, it is comforting to know that there are still remnants of the old guard of rock and roll to pull us through. In this particular case, the old guard is in the form of Led Zeppelin, rockers par excellence. Their new offering entitled "In Through The Out Door," is in its second official week of release and is already in the coveted number one position in Billboard magazine. An album that does so well so quickly deserves careful examination but only after a brief word about the boys in the band.

Ever since their incarnation in late 1968 as the New Yardbirds to fulfill contractual obligations of the original Yardbirds, Led Zeppelin was an immediate success. The partnership of Jimmy Page (guitar), Robert Plant (vocals), John Paul Jones (bass, keyboards), and John Bonham (drums) signaled a new era of rock with the descent of the Beatles. The Byrds, Buffalo Springfield and Cream. After the debut of their classic first album simply entitled "Led Zeppelin", the ensuing years presented their fans with seven more albums, including their masterpiece "Led Zeppelin IV" or "Zoso." Then in 1977, tragedy struck. While on tour in the states, Plant's five-year-old son died suddenly while recuperating from an illness. A shattered Plant and his comrades returned to the mother country, putting the future of Led Zeppelin quite understandably on the back burner.

In the time that followed, the rumors began circulating. It seemed that either a grief-stricken Plant had left the band or that John Paul Jones had departed to pursue a solo career. It was even reported that Page, bored with his band's hiatus, had split the group to record a solo album. Soon it became three years before a new LP graced record racks, but then the talk of a new album cloaked under a shroud of secrecy began to find hopeful ears. Finally, the last week of August presented all with a new Led Zeppelin album and it was definitely worth the wait.

Side one begins with "In the Evening," a song destined to become a Zep classic. It's a grinding rocker that one can see Plant throwing back the lion's mane of falling blond hair and painfully delivering the lyrics to "South Bound Juarez" follows and this is cut in the mold of "Custard Pie" from Physical Graffiti. "Fool in the Rain" in a piano oriented effort that leads into a reggae influenced song, but not so much as to offend anyone not of rastaman dedication. "Hot Dog" rounds out side one and is the sole Plant-Page composition, as this album marks the birth of Plant-Jones collaborations. It is a rock-a-billy song straight out of the Elvis Sun-session era that is great fun to listen to and one can easily imagine Plant not to laugh his way through it.

The second side starts off with "Caroncelabra," a ten-minute song that John Bonham illustrates that he's a better drummer and not as heavy handed as critics have charged. No time is wasted

Here's The Answer

by Barbara Lewis
Pop Scene Answerperson

Q: I'm a big Cheech and Chong fan, and I have all of their albums up to 1974. Did they make any albums after that?—Todd Kjortanson, Gilman, Manitoba.

A: Cheech and Chong have released two LPs since then: "Sleeping Beauty" in 1975, and the soundtrack from their movie, "Up In Smoke," last year.

The comedy duo are now on Warner Bros. Their previous albums were on Ode.

BAD COMPANY

Q: Is it true that Bad Company decided to break up after their current American tour? Also, can you tell me if their hit "Ready for Love" was originally done by Mott the Hoople? And who was lead singer Paul Rodgers with before joining Bad Company?—Jackie Morse, Bangor, Maine.

A: Bad Company has no plans to break up—they're just getting started again after a lengthy absence from the recording and touring scenes. The critics are in agreement that their new "Desolate Angels" album is possibly their best yet, and that the group is stringer than ever in concert, if a little more subdued than in the past.

"Ready for Love" was written by Bad Company guitarist Mick Ralphs when he was a member of Mott, but the group never recorded it because neither he nor lead singer Ian Hunter had the vocal range necessary to sing it—so Bad Company put it on their first LP.

Both Rodgers and drummer Simon Kirke were founding members of the much-underestimated band, Free, which had one hit in the early '70s with "All Right Now." Bassist Boz Burrell came from King Crimson to join the group.

MONTY PYTHON

Q: Whatever happened to the new Monty Python movie, "Life of Brian"? Is it ever going to come out here? If so, when?—Eddie Condon, San Luis Obispo, Calif.

A: Warner Bros. and Orion Pictures jointly acquired United States and Canadian distribution rights to "Life of Brian." It will premiere in Los Angeles and New York in late August, and it's second wave of openings will be on September 28 in approximately 20 major cities. By the end of October, the movie will have opened throughout the country.

A cockeyed, R-rated comedy,

"Life of Brian" features the entire Monty Python troupe, including Graham Chapman, Terry Gilliam, John Cleese, Terry Jones, Eric Idle and Michael Palin.

The movie reportedly received tremendous audience response at various sneak previews. The last Python venture to play the theaters was "Monty Python and the Holy Grail."

LED ZEPPELIN

Q: We think Led Zeppelin is the greatest band in the world.

Could you please answer a few questions about their new album and possible tour plans? When will the new album be released? Also, if Zep is touring, when will they play the Philadelphia Spectrum or Madison Square Garden?—Two Diehard Zeppelin Fans, Beef and Chuck, Jermyn, Pa.

A: As reported in this space awhile back, no definite announcements have been made concerning the new Led Zeppelin album, except for the fact that it's been completed and the group has been busy putting the cover art together. It may be out by the end of the year.

The band has no tour plans so far—in fact, the only date they're playing this year is England's Knebworth Festival. Of course, there's always next year...so we'll keep you posted on further developments.

Lead Singer Steve Perry Adds

New Touch to Rock's Journey

by Ernest Leogrande

Steve Perry, lead singer for Journey and a man with a mischievous smile, is basking in the success of the group's new single, "Lovin', Touchin', Squeezin'," a song marked by his vocals and his words.

In song or in conversation, Perry is not a man at a loss for words. "Lovin'" has been picked up by AM as well as FM stations, and Perry had something to say about that: "Listen to this! People tell us they heard us on AM radio and we're commercializing out."

"It's the old 'sold-out' vibe! Well, we write album concepts. We don't think about singles. We have always been top 40 FM and top 40 AM is listening to FM. You can't ignore something that won't go away! Our last two albums have been platinum," he explained.

The new LP, "Evolution,"—actually inching toward platinum—and "Infinity," introduced a new emphasis on vocals for the group that had previously emphasized its instrumental skill.

A tragedy in Perry's professional and personal life brought him to Journey: Perry had been playing with the Los Angeles band, Alien Project. The group was under consideration for a Columbia recording contract, he said, when the bass player, Richard Michaels, was killed in an automobile accident. Michaels' 17-year-old girlfriend survived the crash and Perry is writing a song about the incident titled "Seventeen." The song is likely to be included on Journey's next LP.

"We (Alien Project) tried to replace him," Perry said, "but it wasn't possible. We were the two focal points of the group. There was such interplay between us. He had a higher voice than I do and could hold a note longer."

"A couple of Columbia representatives suggested I would be an excellent addition to Journey," explained Perry, "but my first impression was negative, because I saw the band as sort of a progressive jazz band and Alien Project was a straightforward little rock and roll band."

Eventually, Perry was persuaded to take a trip to Denver to visit Journey—and he like what he saw. "Neil and I hit it off," he said, "and I figured it was something I wanted to get into." Neil is Neil Schon, Journey's guitar player who was formally with Santana. Journey's keyboard player, Gregg Rolie, another alumnus of Santana, occasionally sings lead vocals.

Journey member Ross Valory plays bass and Steve Smith has recently replaced Aynsley Dunbar on drums.

"Basically," said Perry, "Aynsley (formerly of John Mayall and the Mothers of Invention) has a definitive style. He's still the best at what he does, but there was a certain kind of music coming out of Neil and me, and it was different from what he was doing."

"I'm still myself, the person I was before I joined Journey," Perry said, "but I've adapted and grown with the guys—as they have with me."

Perry and Schon had developed a writing rapport. Perry refers to one of their cooperative efforts, "Patiently," as a group "anthem."

Perry thought Smith would be right for the group after he heard him play with gigs where Journey was playing.

"I started as a drummer-singer," Perry explained, "and I knew this guy was capable of playing anything, hard rock to jazz to funk to country and western—if we ever come to that! He and I may do a double-drum number in the next show."

The group has just finished a tour that began in February and took them from Hamburg to Hawaii. Now there will be a bit of time to rest.

"We're going to try to do some spectacular things in the next show," Perry said. "Not typical garbage explosions. Even lasers are becoming obvious. We don't want to get too theatrical, because once you set that precedent you have to keep topping yourself."

"One thing you have to keep in mind," Perry said, "is that rock and roll was never meant to be anything but good old rock and roll."

ELO Hits the Spotlight with "Discovery"

The Electric Light Orchestra's latest album Discovery opens and closes with the two released singles.

The ELO style of presenting their music in short, precise notes with good instrumentation is obvious in the first cut "Shine A Little Love" which climbed quickly up the charts. The latest release off their 9th album is also the last song on the LP "Don't Bring Me Down" is about the closest to Rock & Roll ELO is going to get.

ELO has been strongly influenced by one of the best groups ever, The Beatles. This is very evident in "The Diary of Mort Wings" which echoes from the Beatles album Sgt Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band's cut "She's Leaving Home."

Other cuts on the LP include a variety of styles.

The Ballad "Need Her Love" is beautiful and is magnified by the exceptional job done with the strings.

"Last Train to London is a closet disco cut and has some strong points.

Members of ELO include Jeff Lynne (who wrote the words & lyrics to all cuts on the lp), Ben Bevan, Richard Tandy, and Kelly Groucutt.

Capricorn One Presented Sept. 24

The UNC-W Fine Arts Committee will present this coming Tuesday, September 25, the fourth movie for this Fall season. It is the compelling "Capricorn One."

Starring in this action-packed movie are Elliott Gould, James Brolin, O.J. Simpson, Hall Holbrook, Sam Waterston and Brenda Vaccaro. Time Magazine referred to "Capricorn One" as "a breathless progression of incredible plot twists and daredevil aerial stunts."

The all-star cast is excellent in this suspenseful story about a conspiracy, executed by the national space agency to deceive the public and three astronauts who are duped into a phony flight to Mars, leaving their lives and the lives of their families in danger.

Elliott Gould plays a journalist who accidentally stumbles upon the conspiracy. In defiance of attempts on his life, he begins to unravel the multi-billion-dollar deception.

"Capricorn One" will be shown at 8 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium. It is in color and rated PG. Admission for UNC-W students with I.D. cards is 50 cents while non-students will be charged only $1.

here as Jimmy Page demonstrates why he's easily one of the best guitarists in the business. "All of My Love" follows and is a pretty ballad type affair written by Plant and Jones. Although not known as a singles band, this would be the obvious choice for a single. The side closes out with "I'm Gonna Crawl," a blues tune that finds Zeppelin continuing a pattern of playing the blues and doing it well, established on their first album.

This album reinforces the emergence of John Paul Jones as more than a sideman for Robert and Jimmy, as his handy work is evident throughout this album. Plant's vocals aren't worn and tired as rumors have suggested. They have simply matured while not losing any of their original bite. As for Jimmy Page, he ages like fine wine. Page plays clean, tasteful licks and this album showcases why there are few better than he. A well-produced effort, "In Through the Out Door" is the best album that Led Zeppelin has released since "Zoso," and is a bargain at any price.

Delta Zeta Growing Stronger Each Year

By Tricia Wallace

"DZ everybody knows, golden lamp and Kellarose" —these were the sounds emanating from the Pub last Tuesday and Thursday nights during Delta Zeta's first rush at UNCW.

Delta Zeta has come a long way since a small group of college girls back in November 1978 decided that the time was ripe for a sorority at UNCW.

Since then, Delta Zeta has grown proud and 41 girls strong. The Delta Zeta girls have worked hard to establish themselves as a full-fledged sorority at UNCW. Now with last week's rush behind, their efforts have paid off tremendously.

The first weekend in November, exactly one year later, will be a landmark victory for Delta Zeta. The festivities will begin with the invitation of new pledges and be topped off with the installation of the entire chapter.

The word sister has taken on a deeper meaning as the girls learn to share, trust, and uphold deeply rooted traditions that are the core of Delta Zeta.

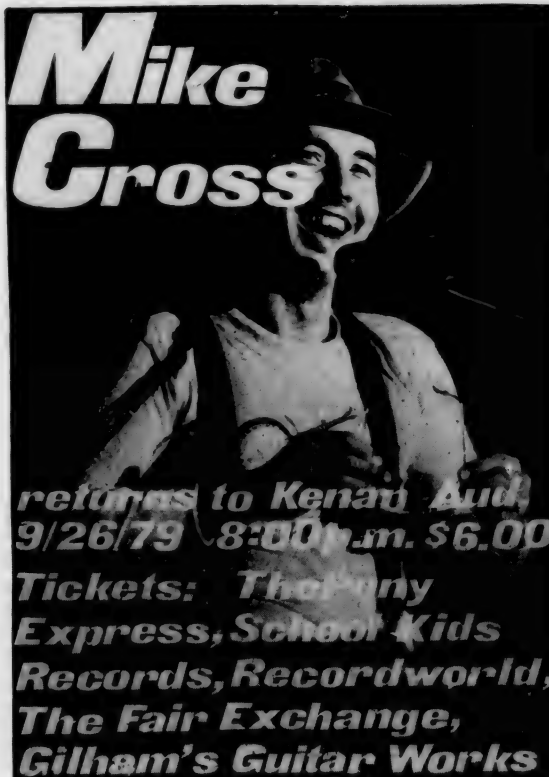

These were the ideas passed on to girls during rush. Tuesday night was open house where girls could meet Delta Zeta, ask questions, and just plain socialize.

Thursday night was more serious with a formal ceremony in which rushees were given a silk rose, a Delta Zeta symbol. Bids were extended at the end of the ceremony.

Delta Zeta would like to congratulate the following girls who were pledged in Sunday afternoon: Darlene Barker—a sophomore from Clinton, NC; Lisa Casteen—a freshman from Wilmington, NC; Ann Carr—a junior from Stedman, NC; Kim Church—a freshman from Matthews, NC; Stephanie Holmes—a sophomore from Morehead City, NC; Sally Johnson—a freshman from Stedman, NC; Cindy Lockamy—a freshman from Stedman, NC; Debbie Marino—a sophomore from Wilmington, NC; Donna Moore—a junior from Wilmington, NC; Carol Pittman—a freshman from Wilson, NC; Susan Preston—a freshman from Wilmington, NC; Amy Purser—a junior from Wilmington, NC; Nancy Roberson—a freshman from Wilmington, NC; Rebecca Rumbough—a junior from Fayetteville, NC; Carla Scott—a freshman from Wilmington, NC; and Jackie Wilson—a junior from Wilmington, NC.

Delta Zeta would like to extend their appreciation to the student population of UNCW for their support, and to all the people and especially to Jan Johnston, Vice-President in charge of membership.

FRANCIS DE LUCA RESIGNS

"Senate Was Allowed To Play In Their Little Sandbox"

Francis X. DeLuca

By J. Dillon Bryant

In a stunning move Tuesday morning, SGA President Francis X. DeLuca announced his resignation effective October 15, 1979.

In a news release sent to the Seahawk Tuesday afternoon, DeLuca stated, "I, Francis X. DeLuca, do hereby resign the office of Student Body President of the University of North Carolina at Wilmington. This resignation is effective 5:00 p.m., October 15, 1979."

"Basically, I am resigning because everything is just a bunch of bullshit. I could stay in office, but I just don't want to. I want time to myself without 'prosecutors' following me around every time I go to the bathroom," DeLuca says.

DeLuca continued, "What was done by the Senate (impeachment) was not initiated by the students but by outsiders with questionable motives."

It appears DeLuca was referring to Ex-UNCW employee Nikki Bane and her husband who have recently been attending every senate meeting.

To emphasize his point, DeLuca stated, "If you look at what happened after the trial where the prosecutor was shamed you can see what I mean. Assistant Prosecutor Scott Burton ran up to me and said, 'Make one slip and we'll nail your ass'. That is no kind of climate to work in."

"I just don't feel that the atmosphere is conducive to the proper functioning of the SGA."

"I've been trying to straighten the SGA out. I hope my work hasn't been in vain. Take a look at the Program Board. I can't take personal credit, but I did push for its adoption and method of funding last year. If you'll look around, there's a higher level of entertainment this year."

"With the help of SGA Treasurer Sharon Starnes, we've been standardizing SGA financial practices. This has caused trouble with a few clubs because they don't seem to have the mentality to follow directions."

"As far as my successor, Jon Faill goes, watch him, he's a political opportunist, who will play which ever side has the most to offer."

"I think the administration took the proper stand in not getting involved. They allowed the Senate to play in their little sandbox, build their little sand castles, and allow me to knock them over."

To the Students of UNCW

Effective 5:00 p.m. October 15, 1979, I am resigning the office of Student Body President of UNCW. I do so with regret, not for myself but for the SGA. I feel I am leaving the SGA in the hands of students who are motivated more by politics than by what's right.

Everybody who has read the Seahawk probably feels that I have done something wrong. If I had, I never would have allowed myself to go to trial. Rather than bore you, I hope you will believe me that any actions I took were with the best interests of students in mind.

What has caused this mess is the vengeance some people feel that they must gain for an imagined wrong. The legislature has compounded this by using valuable time to try to persecute me. I thank those in the legislature who have supported me. It is up to them to ensure that the small-mindedness as evidenced by the past month does not run the SGA in the future.

I finally thank all those people who voted for me for President. I feel I am letting you down but I owe it to myself to do what I think is right. A special thanks to Sharon Starnes, SGA Treasurer for all her help and support. There is much to say but so little space to do it in. Just enjoy yourself, and the best of luck to all.

Impeachment Case Dismissed by Unanimous Decision

By Helen Hazelton

The impeachment case against President Francis DeLuca was dismissed by members of the Student Court last Wednesday night. Chief Justice Doug Browne, along with four other court justices: Mike Sanders, Daniel Goforth, Lowery Sorenson and Derrick Anderson, dismissed the case against DeLuca by a unanimous decision.

Chief Justice Browne read the charges against DeLuca as brought up by the Student legislature several weeks earlier. These charges included two counts of maladministration in the handling of the administrative assistant's position to that of a clerk-typist, and a letter written to the university board of trustees in which DeLuca had allegedly made false statements concerning the funding of several clubs on campus. Both incidents had transpired during the summer session, and without the approval or disapproval of the legislature.

DeLuca's attorney, Joseph DeLuca, pleaded not guilty to the charges and asked for a dismissal of the case shortly after the floor was opened for opening statements. Citing such grounds as the court's lack of notice to DeLuca, a fair and impartial hearing, and necessary information concerning the proceedings from the court itself, Joseph DeLuca asked that the charges be dismissed.

Dr. James Dixon, a professor in the Political Science department, took the stand in the defense of DeLuca. Announcing, in his opinion, that the charges made against DeLuca by the legislature were "unconstitutionally vague", Dixon continued to say that the charges made against DeLuca were not clearly presented and could not be impeachable offenses. Dixon stated that "no specific charges were actually made" against DeLuca.

Joseph DeLuca also argued that the members of the court were not impartial, and therefore could not make a fair judgement in the trial. He cited that court justice Sanders had written an article which appeared in the Seahawk concerning the impeachment motion of the Senate.

The court then recessed for twenty minutes to determine the verdict.

Newly-elected vice-president Jon Faill presided at the Student Legislature's weekly meeting Thursday, September 20. Another motion for impeachment was introduced on the floor. This motion, far more precise in its allegations of maladministration by DeLuca, was voted down 12-10.

DeLuca, in his address to the Senate, was questioned repeatedly by senate members about his reasons of downgrading the position of the administrative assistant as well as many other decisions made by him during the summer.

Senators Floyd Thomas, Charles Parsons and Maceo Bragg, angered by the actions DeLuca undertook this summer, left the meeting and broke the quorum. The legislature requires a quorum to carry on business.

The next meeting of the Senate will be Thursday night, September 27 at 7 p.m. in C218. All interested persons are urged to attend.

Francis DeLuca smiles as case is dismissed.

Nikki Bane: "Francis Wants to Do it Himself"

By Janet Hundley

Apparently the administrative assistant position in the SGA was created in 1976 because of inaccuracies in bookkeeping, accounting and communication within the SGA. The state auditors then suggested that the SGA hire someone at the appropriate level to take care of these problems.

Donna Simmons was the first administrative assistant for the SGA. Following her termination, Nikki Bane was appointed to take her place. The administrative assistant works most closely with the President, but they also work for the entire student government. In addition, work is done for the senate, various committee chairmen, treasurer, and the SGA secretary.

Previously, Mrs. Bane worked with three SGA presidents before Francis DeLuca took office. Mrs. Bane commented enthusiastically, "I had, I think, remarkable, maybe luck, in the fact that all the Presidents up until recently that I worked with had been just delightful people. Paul Laird was an outstanding person. Karin Whaley was just a delight and we remain good friends. She's an outstanding administrator. Wayne Dunlap I had known before he came into office because he had been working with the SGA. I was delighted when he did take office. In every way, I think he is the ideal leader; a true leader. The position in that office, to be really effective, requires real close relationships. You have to be able to work with each other; a lot of give and take."

When reflecting about Francis DeLuca's style of leadership, Mrs. Bane pointed out, "All students that are in the leadership position have their own style of leadership. There are some people in the leadership capacity that are very strict authoritarian types who want to do things their way and they are not into decision making. There are others at the other end of it that are very democratic in their leadership style and I would say that the other three Presidents with whom I worked with were very democratic. They were very much into decision sharing. They let a number of people into the process so you could get the best minds. Francis exemplifies, to my way of thinking, the type of leader who wants to do it himself; who really doesn't have, I feel, much of an opinion for the way other people want to do it."

The second day after Francis DeLuca took office, he asked Mrs. Bane to quit. Mrs. Bane agreed to leave as soon as she found another job. Then on June 19 Mr. DeLuca and Dr. Malloy informed Mrs. Bane that her position had been downgraded to a clerk typist as of June 1. Mrs. Bane then asked for a grievance committee. According to Mrs. Bane, "I could not as the type of person I am work with Francis."

In conclusion, concerning the SGA itself, Mrs. Bane replied, "I would love to see the SGA get on with the business of governing. I never wanted this thing blown up at all. My grievance committee was not in the least against Francis. It was against the university and they have taken steps to correct that and see that this kind of thing doesn't happen again. I love the kids in the SGA. They were and still are a terrific bunch of individuals and I am very proud of having worked with them. I think this is going to be a good year, but that rest with the type of individuals that are in the senate rather than the oral office."

Library Staff Adds Three New Employees

By Triela Wallace

Contrary to popular student opinion, libraries are not all composed of dusty books and old spinsters whose one word vocabulary consists of "sh-h!"

It's time that UNCW students realize that getting to know three very important people in Randall Library this semester could be very much to their advantage.

The first person is the new Assistant Reader's Service Librarian, Sue Ann Hyatt.

She attended Ball State University, located in Muncie, Indiana where she graduated with a teaching degree in Social Sciences. While student teaching during her senior year at Ball State, Mrs. Hyatt decided that she didn't enjoy working in a classroom situation but still wanted to work with people in an academic setting. For this reason she returned to school at Indiana University and received her Master's in Library Science.

After two and a half years of working as the Head of Reference at the Public Library in her hometown of Marion, Indiana, Mrs. Hyatt became dissatisfied with her job and her location.

She confides that she chose Wilmington for a variety of reasons. The most important ones, she says, are the climate, the ocean, and the opportunity to work in an academic library. "Academic libraries are much more challenging," she says, "The information that people request is more complex than in a public library."

Mrs. Hyatt feels that "when you're first starting a career you don't want to get stuck in the same slot. You don't know what area you want to work in unless you've experienced them both." But she also believes that "it's not wise to leave a position for at least two years" in order to get a real understanding of the job. "I intend to be here for quite some time. I like it here and I'm real proud to work here," she adds with a smile.

At present Mrs. Hyatt's du-

ties mainly consist of helping students find information and using the collections. She also gives presentations to groups of students on how to use the library.

Mrs. Hyatt believes that "People are more appreciative when you help them more on individual levels rather than in the classroom."

Circulation Librarian Arlene Hanerfield returned to UNCW in August after she took a leave of absence in 1978 to complete her Master's in Library Science at UNC-Chapel Hill.

While attending UNC-Greensboro she worked in their library in the circulation department until graduating in 1975 with a degree in Economics. The next two years Mrs. Hanerfield spent at Randall Library in the circulation department before returning to school at Chapel Hill.

Arlene Hanerfield

"Since I've worked here before," she says, "it's real good to be back and working with the same people."

When Mrs. Hanerfield first came to Wilmington, the big attraction was the beach. She worked downtown at the Hilton until the job at Randall Library became available.

She feels that a smaller library is easier to get to know and that the atmosphere provides a better place to study and be more comfortable.

Unlike Mrs. Hyatt, Mrs. Hanerfield has always worked in an academic library. She stresses that, "I'd like to be able to help students realize that the library is more than just a study hall. They should know that there's a lot of information here to help out with their studies."

Randall Library's Technical Assistant Debbie Sewell deals mainly with inter-library loans and circulation. She worked in the library while attending UNCW and her present job became available during Mrs. Hanerfield's leave of absence.

A native of this area, Mrs. Sewell hails from Holly Ridge and graduated from UNCW with a business degree.

"Someday I hope to get my Master's," she says, "but I haven't decided in what area yet."

Right now she's taking a computer science course here at UNCW. She feels this could be helpful to her in using the computer terminal in Randall Library. Mrs. Sewell also thinks, "libraries are moving toward computerized systems, especially in the inter-library loan departments. I don't think it will be long before the circulation and check-out systems here in Randall go computer if we can get the money. Most larger libraries already use it."

Mrs. Sewell enjoys working with students and is looking forward to being at Randall Library and watching UNCW grow in the coming years.

ORGANIZATION

It Leads a Life of Luxury

Why is it that we're always late for class or wait to the last minute to get our assignments done? Why are we always trying to beat the clock and end up running around in circles? Organization. We are seriously lacking the sense of organization. Since we were kids, our parents have always told us wait to do and where to go at what time. Life was so simple that all we had to do was roll the dice and move ahead two spaces. Wasn't that easy? Things have changed, though. Now we're a step ahead as responsible and independent college kids. Independence includes making our own decisions and taking life into our own hands, right? Maybe. The only problem we have here is that this is easier said than done. Being on our own is such a new experience for us that we don't have enough time to worry about systems—or do we?

Getting organized is a simple way to put your life in order and let the time work for you. Take control and forget about the confusion! Here are a few handy shortcuts to a no-fuss management of time and deadlines to make your life a lot easier:

1. Haven't you ever accidentally planned two dates for the same night and ended up spending the evening alone?

Keep a calendar of special dates, tests, appointments, and events throughout the semester. This will help you to avoid conflicts and last minute rushes.

2. Haven't you ever spent more time wondering what you had to do than actually finishing the work itself?

Make a list every morning of things you would like to accomplish that day, and keep it posted in a popular place such as on the refrigerator or bedroom door. Cross out each job as you go along and presto! You'll probably have the rest of the day off for your own personal plans.

3. Haven't you ever remembered that you had a written assignment due but you couldn't remember whether it was on page 42 or 24?

After every class, make a little note to yourself of the upcoming due dates and re-read them when you get home. Many times little details such as homework pages and dates just slip your mind and it's impossible to finish without them!

4. Haven't you ever said I'll wait till after this movie and ended up falling asleep until that next morning?

Make a schedule of when to do each classes homework and stick to it. In the end, your work will be a lot more complete and the grades earned a little more satisfying. They may not be straight A's, but your common D's and F's will vanish.

5. Always leave your schedule flexible enough for small breaks or emergencies.

If your day is so crammed that you get exhausted thinking about it, all of this organizing was done in vain. Allow yourself enough leisure time for boosting up your energy such as having a coke, eating a bite, or just going outside for a breath of fresh air.

6. Haven't you ever heard the phrase, "Don't put off till tomorrow what you can do today?"

That's not just a bunch of fancy words showing a touch of class. If you sit down and do a little each day, the nights could be left up to you without having any guilt feelings. Also, when you save work until the next day, that next day gets so busy that you save work until the day after. Soon this turns into a continuous cycle and nothing ever gets done.

SO GET ORGANIZED. AND LEAD A LIFE OF LUXURY!

Workshop Set for Thursday October 4

An interest in children and a little spare time are all you need to take advantage of the Tutors' Workshop on Thursday, October 4, from 9 to 12 noon at St. John's Episcopal Church, 1219 Forest Hills Drive.

The Cape Fear Voluntary Action Center in conjunction with the New Hanover County public schools is presenting the workshop for volunteer tutors in mathematics and in reading for students in kindergarten through sixth grade.

Maurice C. Hawes, Director of Instruction of the New Hanover County public schools, is in charge of directing volunteer programming. Christine Gentry, a member of the VAC Board of Directors, is chairperson of the Tutoring Program Committee.

The workshop will be conducted by two professionals both assistant professors in the School of Education, UNCW: Dr. Grace M. Burton in the field of mathematics education and Dr. Hathaia A. Hayes in reading.

Dr. Burton will speak on how to work with children in mathematics with specifics regarding "Numbered Concepts of Mathematics." She received her Ph.D. in mathematics education from the University of Connecticut, and has worked with teachers and parents in several states where she has taught.

Before coming to UNCW, Dr. Hayes was director of the Reading and Language Arts Program in Oglethorpe County, Ga., and was a language arts consultant with the N.C. Dept. of Public Instruction. She has an Ed.D. in reading from the University of Georgia.

As in other parts of the county, the New Hanover County school administration is now encouraging volunteer tutors as well as volunteers in other capacities such as helping in the school office, bus monitoring and field trips.

Parents, retired persons and older students can all help a boy or a girl reach his or her potential by giving time and attention in a one-to-one encounter, and with the teacher acting as coordinator. At no cost to the taxpayer and with the volunteer contributing time, individual attention can be provided that will most benefit the student. At present, each of the 22 schools with kindergarten through sixth grade has both a parent and a teacher coordinator.

No teaching experience is required for this workshop or to volunteer as a tutor. You will be given practical information to help you help a student in mathematics and in reading, as well as the procedure for volunteering in the public schools. This cooperation between the Cape Fear Voluntary Action Center and the New Hanover County public school system offers a real opportunity to move ahead toward the national goal of quality education.

Scotland Senior Highland Regiment to Visit October 10

The Black Watch is Scotland's senior Highland Regiment and originated from the independent companies raised in 1725, to police the Highlands, where there was still much unrest following the Jacobite rising of 1715. Later they served courageously in British military campaigns around the world, including many in the American War of Independence, where they were especially active in the New York area.

From their inception they wore a dark tartan derived from the families of those who commanded the independent companies (the Campbells, Munros and Grants) and were known as Am Freiceadan Dubh or The Black Watch in contrast to the English soldiers, who wore red coats. (However, the pipers wear the Royal Stewart tartan.)

The Black Watch was formed into a regiment in 1739 and first paraded together at Aberfeldy in Perthshire in 1740. They won their first battle honour at Fontenoy five years later, and in these 230 years the regiment gained 162 battle honours, 52 of which are emblazoned on their colours.

In 1749 while serving in Ireland they received the number 42nd by Royal Warrant and later during the conquest of Canada, after distinguishing itself at the historic battle of Ticonderoga, were granted the title Royal. Highland soldiers had been so successful that a second battalion was raised that year, and was numbered the 73rd Highland Regiment of Foot in 1786. This battalion earned outstanding battle honours in the campaign against Tipu Sahib in India. In addition the Duke of Wellington obtained his first commission as an ensign of the 73rd.

The Red Hackle, the vulture feathers worn in the bonnet of The Black Watch, has been their well known emblem for over 160 years. Legend associates it with the Battle of Geldermalsen on January 5, 1795 when Highlanders rescued two guns of the 11th Light Dragoons which had been captured by the French. For their gallantry on this occasion The Black Watch was awarded a distinctive badge, the Red Hackle. Subsequently they gained exclusive rights to this emblem in 1822 and celebrate Red Hackle Day every January 5.

Among their many glorious battles in which they have fought is the Battle of Alexandria in Egypt in 1801. In it they were described as standing pre-eminent for a gallantry and steadfastness which would be difficult to match in the history of any army. At Alexandria the regiment won the honour of bearing the Sphinx with the word Egypt as a badge on its Colours after holding out against superior odds and repelling Napoleon's invincible forces. The capture of a French eagle was later commemorated by a silver presentation from the Highland Society.

The Black Watch served in the Peninsula, gaining ten more Battle Honours and both battalions took part in the Battle of Waterloo. In the Crimea, the 42nd saved the day at the Battle of Alma when it was led forward by Sir Colin Campbell to capture the Russian positions.

Twenty-five battalions fought extensively in World War I, earning special honour at Mons, Ypres, Loos, the Somme and on The Hindenburg Line. In World War II battalions fought in almost every campaign, but the break-out from Tobruk in 1941, when the 2nd battalion was played into battle by Pipe Major Roy was one of their finest exploits. At the end of the war three battalions fought at I Alamein, and raced each other to cross the Rhine first.

More recently the 1st battalion gained its last battle honour against overwhelming Chinese opposition on the Hook in Korea. Subsequently the 1st Battalion served on active operations in Kenya and Cyprus and on policing duties in Gibraltar, Hong Kong and Northern Ireland.

Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth, The Queen Mother, whose family have close ties with the regiment has been Colonel in Chief since 1937.

Brigadier the Lord Ballantrae became Colonel of the Regiment in 1969 after his return from New Zealand where he was Governor General.

Health Service Center Located In New Dorm

The Health Service Center of the University of North Carolina at Wilmington will meet the outpatient health needs of the majority of students during the school year. Anyone who is taking six or more hours of courses can have these medical services when needed.

The center is located in the new dormitory. The hours are 8:30 a.m. to 12 noon and 12:30 p.m. to 2 p.m. The phone extension is 2533.

The staff consists of Linda Jasinski, Family Nurse Practitioner (FNP); Catherine Vangellow, Physician's Assistant (PA); and Sande Kirby, Medical Technician (MT). The FNP and PA are educated and trained to do many of the things that are traditionally done by the physician--that is, to obtain medical history, perform physical examinations, diagnose and treat.

"Students shouldn't hesitate to come in when they have any health-related problems," Ms. Vangellow said. They should be sure to bring their ID cards.

At the center, students are treated for colds, sore throats, and primary health problems. If a problem is complicated or urgent, the student is referred to the Wilmington Health Associates, with whom UNCW has a contract to provide general outpatient diagnostic and treatment services similar to those provided in their office.

A student has what appears to be a sore throat due to a streptococcal throat infection, the staff takes a throat culture and starts the student on an antibiotic. The report usually follows the next day. If a strep infection is found, a prescription is written and the patient is treated for the ten-day course.

According to Ms. Vangellow, many patients are bothered by urinary tract infections. The center is available to check people for venereal diseases, to do cultures, draw blood, and to treat the conditions.

The Health Service Center also gives allergy shots for people who are on desensitization and acts as a referral agency for women who have questions regarding family planning.

One of seven physicians in the internal medicine practice of the Wilmington Health Associates is always available at night and on weekends to take care of medical emergencies. A sore throat that begins on the same day is not considered an emergency, Ms. Vangellow stressed.

If emergencies do occur when the center is closed, students should call the Wilmington Health Associates at 763-8251 and ask that a physician meet them at the emergency room in New Hanover Hospital. Such a call will enable students to avoid paying a fee to the hospital emergency room doctor. Campus Security personnel can be of great assistance in transporting students who need immediate hospital treatment due to serious accident or illness, Ms. Vangellow said.

The staff hopes that students will not hesitate to come to the center with questions regarding their general health and well being, as well as their emotional problems.

ETS Offers Opportunities

Princeton, N.J.--How can minority college students planning for graduate school find the right opportunities for advanced study?

One way is with the Minority Graduate Student Locator Service, developed by Educational Testing Service (ETS) and offered by the Graduate Record Examinations Board.

Through this free service, college juniors, seniors and graduates who are members of racial and ethnic minorities in the United States can make their intentions known to graduate schools seeking such applicants.

Last year, for example, more than 20,000 students made use of the Locator Service, and student information was provided to more than 150 graduate schools around the country. And it's easy for students to participate.

Students sign up by completing the registration form contained in the GRE/MGSLIS Information Bulletin. It is the same form used to register for the Graduate Record Examinations, comprehensive aptitude and advanced tests used in the admissions process by many of the nation's graduate schools. But students do not have to take the GRE to use the Locator Service.

To take part, students describe themselves by answering questions that ask for ethnic background, undergraduate major, intended graduate major and other information about educational experience and objectives. This information is placed in the Locator Service file and made available to participating graduate schools upon request. GRE scores are not included in the Locator Service file.

Each graduate school establishes its own criteria to select students from the Locator Service file based on ethnic background, intended major field of study, degree objective and state of residence. The names of students who use the Locator Service and meet the criteria set by a particular school will automatically be sent to that school.

Students who want to make information available to graduate schools three times during the school year must have their registration forms in by Sept. 28. A student who misses that deadline but has the form in by Nov. 12 will be able to participate twice.

Graduate schools will contact the students in whom they are interested to inform them of application procedures.

Because of the interest among graduate schools throughout the nation in attracting qualified minority students, a student's name often will be sent to several institutions. Because a graduate school may not wish to contact all students whose names it receives, students are not informed of the identity of those institutions to which their names have been forwarded.

The Locator Service is not an application to graduate school or for financial assistance and does not constitute a guarantee of admission or financial aid. It is designed only to supplement a student's own efforts to locate and seek admission to a suitable graduate program and to find resources for financial assistance.

Information students supply for the Locator Service file is treated confidentially and is released only to participating graduate schools and scholarship programs.

The Information Bulletin explains all students must know to participate in the service. Copies of the bulletin may be obtained at most colleges or by writing to MGSLIS, Box 2615, Princeton, N.J. 08541.

The GRE and the MGSLIS are administered by ETS under policies determined by the GRE Board, an independent board affiliated with the Association of Graduate Schools and the Council of Graduate Schools in the United States.

Black Watch to Appear in Trask October 10

By Tricia Wallace

Scotland's Senior Highland Regiment, the Black Watch, whose history dates back to 1725 will be at UNCW in Trask Coliseum October 10 at 8:00 p.m.

According to Development Director Tyrone Rowell, the group of eighty to ninety men is "one of Her Royal Majesty's most illustrious battalion." The men, ranging in age from 19 to 21, "put on an excellent show full of colorful ceremony, brass, and bagpipes," Rowell also stated.

The concert is being sponsored by the Friends of UNCW, a group of more than 250 concerned community people who for the past 13 years have been supporting UNCW with their time and annual gifts to the university.

Led by President Mrs. Lynn Thomas Garner, the Friends of UNCW raise funds by soliciting contributions from individuals and businesses and holding membership drives.

Since 1965, the Friends have contributed an excess of $75,000 to the William Madison Randall Library and other programs. Proceeds from the Black Watch concert will be donated to the library.

Library Director Eugene Huguélet said, "We now have things in the library--books and equipment, that were necessary and without the support of the Friends would not have been possible. The library collection is infinitely richer because of money donated to the library by the Friends over the years."

Mr. Rowell said that the Friends of UNCW have "shown tremendous loyalty and dedication on behalf of the library. We owe a great deal to them. They are the heart and soul of the library."

A check from this year's fund raising projects will be presented to Mr. Huguélet by the Friends of UNCW at their annual reception in the Chancellor's home. This money is to be used at the library's discretion.

Activities planned for the Black Watch members include invitations to the senior officers to attend various dinner parties in the community and also a catered post-performance reception will be hosted by Delta Zeta in the Pub for the entire battalion.

Tickets are on sale at the Trask box office for $6 and $5 for students.

The Black Watch are presenting an excellent opportunity for UNCW students to enjoy a fine show and also support an organization that is beneficial to the school.

SEAHAWK SPORTS

Penthouse Lists 20 Worst Football Teams

Just in time to inject a note of reality into alumni hopes for a winning football season, Penthouse magazine's October issue identifies what sports writer Lawrence Linderman calls "The Penthouse 20 Worst Football Teams of 1979-80."

These teams are not obscure teachers colleges; they are, or have been, potential rivals of the best. But all have fallen on hard times in recent years, and Linderman sees little hope for the football season soon upon us.

The list:

1. Northwestern. Its 0-10-1 record set last year "figures to be even worse in 1979." Says the magazine: "Northwestern's major problems are offense and defense, in both of which they are deficient."

2. Wake Forest. Last season's 1-10 record may turn out to be better than 1979's likely outcome. "Wake Forest may well lose every time out in 1979, including its curtain raiser against unheralded Appalachian State."

3. University of Texas, El Paso. UTEP has won only one game per season since 1975, "and they won't do any better this time around. UTEP's gridiron specialty is the equal-opportunity defense, which allows opponents to score five touchdowns a game without regard to race, creed, color or talent."

4. Vanderbilt. Finishing 2-9 last year, "this fall Vanderbilt will again be atrocious and nothing new that head coach George MacIntyre can say or do will help the Commodores escape what seems to be paramount possession of last place in the Southeastern Conference."

5. Idaho. Last year's 2-9 record isn't likely to be much better this year, but Penthouse concedes that the team might be able to give us less than the 36 points per game it yielded in 1978.

6. Texas Christian University. "Defense will again be the Froggies' short suit, but the same can be said of their offense." Look for another 2-9 season this year.

7. Virginia. After 1979's 2-9 record, Linderman says: "I look for the Cavaliers to beat James Madison this year.... And that's about it."

8. Columbia. "The doormat of the Ivy League" in 1979 after last year's 3-5-1 season. Graduations have made the outlook look dimmer.

9. Oregon State. This school had a winning season—in 1970.

Last year's record was 3-6-1 and 1979 looks like the ninth consecutive losing season.

10. West Virginia. Another losing season after 1978's 2-9 record, but there is hope: the state legislature has approved a $20 million new stadium, and "high school athletes always have an edifice complex. The Mountaineers will begin getting their share of blue-chip players quite soon and should show marked improvement within the next couple of years."

11. Rice. Rice's record for the last three seasons is 3-29. This year, says the magazine, "the Rice defense will again give up twice as many points as the offense can score, which is why the Owls can be expected to check in with a record that will approximate last season's 2-9 performance."

12. Army. The once-mighty football school hasn't been able to attract top high school players, many of whom don't find four years in the Army after graduation an enticing prospect. The loss of eight starting seniors from the '78 season won't help Army either. (Navy, incidentally, is not on the Worst 20 list.)

13. Illinois. Last year's 1-9-2 record foreshadows this year's results. Failure to take to the air with the forward pass was to blame last year, and likely will be again in '79.

14. Boston College. "Hollywood producers could do worse than to study Boston College's 1978 football season for possible adaptation as a movie comedy," Penthouse says. Head coach Ed Chlebek was fired last year—but rehired after his players pleaded that he be given a second chance. After last year's 0-11 record, Boston College "will improve, although not dramatically."

15. Kansas. "The Jayhawks are a decent enough college team, but unfortunately they're playing a murderously tough conference." Last year's 1-10 record may be a taste of the current season as well.

16. Syracuse. Once the symbol of Eastern football power, the school of Jim Brown, Ernie Davis, Floyd Little and Larry Csonka, the Orangemen have fallen on hard times. This year, "the Orange will be mostly black and blue."

17. San Diego State. Used to winning seasons, this school found introduction to the Western Athletic Conference last year a sobering experience. For '79, "the team has been so depleted by graduations that its chances of finishing near .500 seem very remote."

18. Tulane. The Green Wave's last winning season was 1973, and the next isn't likely to be this year. "One reason for Tulane's protracted decline is its somewhat steady offense," the magazine says. On the other hand, "the defense won't be able to stop a sneeze."

19. Washington State. Despite the services of the nation's "finest collegiate quarterback," WSU last year had a 3-6-1 record. "Since Washington State was the PAC Ten's easiest team to push around last season, look for their conference foes to really stick it to the Cougars this season."

20. Memphis State. Last year the Tigers were 4-7, their first losing season since coach Richard Williamson took over in 1975, "and this fall will seem like a replay of 1978. It's easy to diagnose what ails the Tigers: their defense has as much muscle as Bianca Jagger."

Seahawks Host Atlantic

Christian in Crucial Match

On a schedule with the likes of Southern powers Appalachian State, South Carolina and N.C. State, a contest with in-state rival Atlantic Christian might be overlooked, especially with the long-awaited trip to Boone looming ahead this weekend.

But such is not the case for Coach Calvin Lane's UNC-Wilmington soccer team. In fact, Lane and the Seahawks are approaching this week's game with the Bulldogs as the most critical date on the schedule.

UNCW hosts Atlantic Christian Thursday (Sept. 27) at 4 p.m.

"I hate to be in the position of having to win," Lane says, "but that's almost where we are for this game. We need to get turned around now."

The Seahawks, 2-2-1 after consecutive losses at South Carolina (3-2) and N.C. State (3-1), must not look past the visitors from Wilson toward Sunday's clash with national power Appalachian either, Lane stresses.

"A.C. has a fine team and always seems to play well against us," the UNCW coach says. "If we're not ready, we'll have a repeat of two years ago."

Lane remembers well the 1977 season, when following victories over highly rated North Carolina and Rollins, UNCW climbed to fourth in the South Region poll—the highest slot ever occupied by the Seahawks—only to lose on its home turf to the Bulldogs, 2-1.

UNCW came back to defeat A.C. last year, 3-0, and holds a 6-2 advantage in the overall series between the two schools.

Following Thursday's encounter, the Seahawks take to the road once again, journeying to Boone for a Sunday meeting with the powerful Appalachian State squad. But the 'Hawks won't worry about that until Thursday night—hopefully, after a return to their winning ways at the expense of Atlantic Christian.

Seahawks Lose 7-0

A deflected pass midway through the third quarter resulting in a 30 yard gain turned things around for Gallaudet College in a 7-0 victory over the UNCW Seahawks.

Pinned at their 16 yard line after a fine Bob Roy punt into the wind, the Bisons passed long up the middle on second down. Dale Fisher, about to intercept, had the ball bounce off his shoulder pad into the arms of Gallaudet's Ed Jones. The play was the second in the Bisons' 12 play, 84 yard march to the game's only touchdown. For the second week in a row the Seahawk defense allowed just one sustained drive—and for the second week in a row it was decisive.

Penalties, plaguing the Seahawk offense all year, stalled drives again Saturday. In all the Seahawks were penalized a whopping 95 yards.

Both teams played solid defensive games. The Bisons netted 183 yards, the Seahawks 167. Five interceptions highlighted the mobile UNCW defense.

The Seahawk offense again anchored by a strong running game, was led by Cliff Thomas' 57 yards in 7 carries. Guy Stefanski's 67 yards in 12 carries, and Bubba Baldwin's 56 yards in 5 carries.

UNCW travels to Jacksonville, North Carolina, Saturday September 29th, to play the New River Marines.

It's a Busy Week for Volleyball Squad

The UNCW volleyball team, which dropped its 1979 opener to North Carolina Central last Thursday, has a busy week ahead with five matches on tap.

The Seahawk spikers travel to Methodist for a tri-match which includes Greensboro College on Tuesday (Sept. 25), then go to St. Andrews for a three-team affair with Elon on Thursday (Sept. 27).

UNCW's first home match of the young season is set for Saturday (Sept. 29) when St. Augustine visits Hanover Hall for a 2 p.m. meeting.

The ady Seahawks made a gallant comeback in the loss to Central, winning two straight games after falling in the first two. The critical fifth game, however, was all Central, 15-0.

Golfers Return

The UNCW women's golf squad will participate in the Mary Baldwin Invitational this Friday and Saturday (Sept. 28-29) in Staunton, Va. Sophomore Sheila Lang, who gained medalist honores in the Longwood tournament, is the leading She-hawk, but Darcie Wilson, Connie Poole and Robbie Roberts—the three remaining members of the team—also performed well the second day of the recent tri-match, as the girls totaled a 324 for the final 18 holes.

In-Laws Have Genuine

Things To Say

Avid moviegoer that I am, I find experiencing a truly entertaining film a rarity. Alas, the search is over! For its second time in the Wilmington area, the In-Laws is appearing at New Centre Cinema III. I missed this masterpiece the first time around, but I'm glad I enticed myself to finally go. COLUMBO's PETER FALK is at his prime again—this time as an "international business executive!" If you delighted in his zany antics as an undercover cop in COLUMBO, you will further that opinion of his acting ability in the In-Laws. Personally, I have never seen Alan Arkin act in anything that I can recall. I can say with affirmation that his ability to portray Falk's "straightman" is excellent. Arkin, who is also executive producer of the movie, portrays a six-figure 5th Avenue Jewish dentist whose daughter is marrying Falk's son. He becomes Falk's "patron" in a caper that will leave you laughing and sweating! From racing in a BMW in a New Jersey suburb to flying in a Japanese-manned airplane headed for—the British Honduras!

*Remember Howard Sprague's innocent girlfriend Millie in the old ANDY GRIFFITH SHOW? She plays Falk's bemused wife! Co-anchor person, Nancy Dessault, formerly of the GOOD MORNING AMERICA SHOW does an excellent job of creating the upper-class wife of Alan Arkin. Sex and violence are not large components of this movie—for a pleasant change! The only "sex" is an affectionate kiss or two, and the only violence is so haphazard that the only reaction it elicits is laughter—if you can take your tongue out of your cheek!

Just a suggestion

I recommend your finding the time to see the SEDUCTION OF JOE TYNNAN, now playing at the Oleander Cinema. I recently saw Alan Alda (not to be confused with Alan Arkin) in an interview on the MIKE DOUGLAS SHOW. Hearing what the star and writer, himself, had to say about his production has made me want to see the film again. He does not want people to be misled by the title of the movie, nor what some people may think is its main theme. He says the movie is most assuredly about the "political world," but most importantly the movie is for women, and about the seduction of spirit—so try keeping these ideas in your thoughts, and take in the movie some afternoon or evening. Possibly you will discover it has some genuine things to say!

Movie Ratings:

Do They Really Work?

For the past two or three years, a controversy has been growing in Hollywood, and it concerns the current movie ratings. Many producers and directors are complaining loud and long.

The present rating system is as follows: G—General Audiences, All Ages Admitted; PG—Parental Guidance Suggested; R—Restricted, those under 17 must be accompanied by an adult; and X—No one under 17 admitted.

The beef concerns, mainly, the 'R' and 'X' ratings. For example, "Alien" is rated 'R', and this causes a loss of money, because many science-fiction fans are too young to go by themselves, and their parents aren't going to fork out an additional $3.50 to carry junior to see something "hatch" from an egg.

What probably kept "Alien" from getting a 'PG' was the use of certain four-letter words that are taboo, according to the MPAA (Motion Picture Association of America.) However, "Jaws" has as much, if not more, gory scenes as "Alien" and only received a 'PG'.

Producers want a new system, one that specifies what is 'R' material in a film. For example, if a film contains violence, add a V to the 'R' for a new rating of 'RV'. Hence, 'RS' would mean 'R' rated sex; 'RL', R rated language, or any combination thereof.

The same would apply to the "X" rating. George Romero's "Dawn of the Dead" went into release without a rating, which is allowable if a warning is printed stating that no one under 17 will be admitted. George's reason? According to Variety, he said that if he had submitted the film to the ratings board, it would have most certainly received an 'X'. He added that the 'X' would be for the extreme violence in the film, but it would automatically make people think that it was porno, and there is no sex in the film. Many foreign films made for adults are branded 'X', whether there's sex in them or just violence.

Ratings have a peculiar effect on the moviegoer's mind. A 'G' naturally turns off a teenager. George Lucas had to insert one curse word in "Star Wars" so it wouldn't end up with the dread 'G'. It seems that Disney is the only studio that can make a tidy profit with a 'G' film, but even this is changing. Disney will release their first PG movie ever this Christmas. It's a science fiction epic entitled, "The Black Hole" and is costing 17 million dollars.

Many studios want to do away with the G rating completely. However, it may be a while before the MPAA decides.

DIXIE DREGS IN CONCERT

October 8, 1979 8:00 p.m.

By Michael Bloom

BECAUSE THEIR music falls somewhere between progressive rock and fusion jazz, the Dixie Dregs are an extremely unlikely Southern boogie band whose fun-loving high spirits help them avoid the generic pretensions of the former and the bombast of the latter. On Night of the Living Dregs, these guys use subtle counterpoints like middle-period Gentle Giant, generate some really unusual timbres and exhibit a perdurable instrumental skill. But they don't make their training or technique glaringly obvious. The group's most noticeable traits are ebullient power chording, the bluesy bending of notes and an unflagging rhythmic drive.

Part of their secret is that they've injected into the progressive/fusion mixture two other genres that call for an equal virtuosity: bluegrass and old-timey country music. Leading the Dregs are Steve Morse, a guitarist adept at both Chet Atkins and Al Di Meola stylings, and Allen Sloan, who erases the distinction between "violin" and "fiddle." Country inflections seep out of the Stanley Clarke-flavored title tune, dominate a barn-dance romp called "The Bash" and continue to spice the rest of the record—especially side two, an awesome live recording from last year's Montreux Jazz Festival.

Wings: Back to the Egg Needs More Good Cuts

Ever since the break-up of the Beatles, Paul McCartney has been his own best PR man. An example of this is the "coincidental" recording of a song or two with an all-star line-up consisting of Pete Townshend (The Who), David Gilmour (Pink Floyd), Gary Brooker (ex-Proto-Harum), Kenny Jones (ex-Faces; The Who), John Bonham and John Paul Jones (see last week's review) after his contract with Capitol Records had expired. These all-star line-ups don't really excite anyone anymore with the possible exception of greedy record executives. In this case, McCartney's bit of parading netted him a rumored twenty million dollar contract with Columbia Records. There is now pressure on Paulie to produce a solid work of McCartney magic, especially since his last studio effort, "London Town" didn't fare so well.

The McCartney or Wings debut album for Columbia is called "Back to the Egg." The members of the troupe consist of Paul McCartney (bass, guitar, keyboards, vocals), wife Linda (keyboards, vocals), long-time pal Denny Laine (guitar, bass vocals) and newcomers Laurence Juber (guitar) and Steve Holly (drums). The latter pair are replacements for the departed Jimmy McCulloch (guitar) and Joe English (drums) who now plays for Sea Level. Whoever plays drums for Wings isn't required to be brilliant as simply being competent is gracious plenty. On the other hand, McCulloch was a fine guitarist and Juber isn't in the same ballpark as his predecessor, but enough of this, on with our tale.

Side one kicks off with "Reception," a little more than a minute's worth of nonsense anchored by a lazy McCartney bass line that serves as a lead in for the first single pulled from this collection, "Getting Closer." McCartney is very definitely a singles artist and a couple of hit forty-fives can sell a few million copies of his LP for him, but this song, although a strong rock 'n' roll song, didn't do what was expected of it. "We're Open Tonight" follows and this consists of only Paul and an acoustic guitar. It sounds like it should be an opening for a song that isn't there. When McCartney was working with John Lennon, he had someone to aid in fusing together separate bits of songs into major compositions like "A Day in the Life." Nothing's changed, as Paul still needs a talented partner to goad him on to better things. "Spin It On" is next and is a stab at being punk, but as with most punk, it falls short. "Again and Again and Again" is a Denny Laine composition that deals with losing a love, a topic that's been dealt with many times before and with more effectiveness. "Old Siam Sir" is a musical work that McCartney may very well have written after one too many drinks. It's a good time tune that finds our hero yelling lyrics rather than singing them. The side closes with "Arrow Through Me," the second single released from this album. Although it's not the best love song McCartney ever wrote, it's nice.

The second side cranks up with the first of the two aforementioned all-star cuts "Rockestra Theme" is highlighted by lots of piano and good guitar, resulting in a rocker despite itself. "To You" ensues and is a rock song that uses some electronic gimmickry. It's a mediocre song that just as easily could've stayed unreleased. "After the Ball/Million Miles" is a hymn-like affair that should be in a church, not on the vinyl. The best song in this collection is "Winter Rose/Love Awake." "Winter Rose" finds McCartney in a rough voice, much like he was probably searching for when he recorded "Oh Darling" for Abbey Road. "Winter Rose" is a lamenting love song that goes into "Love Awake," a cheerful melody that is reminiscent of the Band on the Run era. "The Broadcast" is nothing more than an excerpt of a narration put to music. "So Glad to See

You Here" is the other all-star song that again finds Paulie doing more yelling than singing. It's good rock 'n' roll that leads into the finale, "Baby's Request," a ballroom tune that easily recalls earlier ventures like "Honey Pie" and "When I'm Sixty-Four."

The bottom line on McCartney is that he can produce better work than this. He tends to be lazy because of who he is and also because he has vast amounts of talent. His Columbia debut LP is

By David Carter

RECORDS

spoiled by halfworked songs that have no endings, fused into other songs of the same category. There are a few nice items on the record, but with prices as high as they are and a talent the caliber of McCartney's, five or six good cuts out of fourteen simply aren't enough. Only die-hard Paul McCartney fans should purchase it, because they are probably the only ones who will like it and some of them aren't real thrilled with it.

Beatles are Asked to Reunite

By LEE MOORE
Pop Scene Columnist

THE BEATLES

There it was, in the Sunday, September 9 New York Times: a full-page advertisement headed "An Appeal To John, Paul, George and Ringo."

With the financial aid of two friends, Sid Bernstein, the promoter who brought the Beatles to New York in the 1960's, is now attempting to reunite the group—not for himself, but for the Vietnamese refugees.

"The music you created in the '60s still is heard in every corner of the world in the '70s," the ad reads. "The joy that you gave to people everywhere...gives you a unique place in history...it also gives you an importance and a voice, to make a difference in the lives of many human beings who need our compassion and immediate help."

Bernstein proposes that Lennon, McCartney, Starr and Harrison "perform one day in Cairo, one day in Jerusalem and one day in New York...on one stage, individually, collectively, or both, to symbolize to the world that people can get it together..."

All proceeds from a live album, seats at closed-circuit TV venues, a film, souvenirs, etc.—which, according to Bernstein, could total $500 million—would go to aid the Vietnamese boat people.

Can Sid Bernstein pull it off? Can he get the Beatles back together? He thinks so.

"They're good people," Bernstein says. "Their history is one of caring."

Bernstein says the idea came about one evening while he was talking with two friends, Mary Lea Johnson and her husband, Martin Richards, who are the promoters of the Broadway musical "Sweeney Todd." Bernstein told them he liked the idea of an advertisement, but didn't have the money to finance it. Three days later, Johnson and Richard called and told Bernstein they would fund a full-page ad in The New York Times—to the tune of approximately $18,000.

"Reaction from all over the world has been incredible," enthuses Bernstein. "This doesn't have to be under my auspices," he adds. "I just hope the performers themselves will set a precedent for the 1980's, that huge stars will get together once a year from now on, just give on day of their lives, to help others. Bringing John, Paul, George and Ringo together again would be an excellent way to begin. I'd like to see the 1980s become the decade of the heart."

Has Bernstein received any response from the principals involved in his appeal? "There's got to be a lot of soul-searching before they come to a decision," Bernstein says. "I do know, from a close source, that McCartney is aware of the ad and is thinking about it heavily."

"Our Town" is Scheduled for Week from Tonight, 8:30 p.m.

by Carol Pitak

On Thursday, October 4, UNCW students will have an opportunity to attend the best theater in the Wilmington area free. That evening UNCW and the Thalian Association, Wilmington's amateur community theater group, will kick-off their respective seasons with a co-production of Thornton Wilder's "Our Town". Dr. Terry Theodore of UNCW's Creative Arts Department is directing the play. The University likes the idea of students having the opportunity to work with the facilities in Thalian Hall while the Thali-ans see the joint venture as a chance to beef up their technical staff.

In the play Wilder attempts to portray the value of ordinary events in our daily lives. The action takes place between 1901 and 1913, and the plot focuses on Emily Webb and George Gibbs [who eventually marry] and their families. The three acts portray different aspects and time periods in family life: Act One, growing-up; Act Two, courtship and marriage; Act Three, death. In "Our Town" Wilder does away with the use of scenery and realistic props. Much is left to the imagination of the audience. He uses the stage manager as a narrator/story-teller who also works the few props and fills in for certain townspeople. If there is a moral to "Our Town", it would have to be that life is humdrum and ordinary only when it is taken for granted and not fully appreciated.

Dr. Theodore calls the play "hauntingly beautiful and depicting the best in the American character and the American way of life. It is a play which must be experienced-felt rather than read."

Students and faculty in the cast include: Greg Bell [part-time music instructor] as the Stage Manager; Jim Martin as Dr. Gibbs; Marjories Megivern [wife of Dr. James Megivern, Professor of Philosophy and Religion] as Mrs. Gibbs; Richard Pennington as George Gibbs; Serena Blakenship as Rebecca Gibbs; Bob Brown [Professor of Psychology] as Mr. Webb; Sheila Burkhart as Mrs. Soames; Mike Mazinga as Farmer McCarthy; and Diedra Brewster, Sheila Bur-hart, Carolyn Creech, Mike Mazinga, and Sheri Shepard as townspeople.

Other cast members are: Jack Green as Joe Crowell, Rosie Geier as Howie Newsome, Nonie Scarborough as Mrs. Webb, Todd Weeks as Wally Webb, Yolanda Evans as Emily Webb, Vern Moore as Professor Willard and Joe Stoddard, Jack Dillon as Simon Stimson, Michael Johnson as Constable Warren, Steven Apicella as Si Crowell, and Al Boulogne as Sam Craig. People in the Auditorium are played by Andrea Harkin, Anita Gross, and Anne Tunney. Other townspeople are Cheryl Bryant, Carole Caudle, Nancy C. Hamilton, Marianne Kunz, Wally Kunz, Robin Kusika, Billy Lewis, Scott Miles, Elaine Roseboro, Nonie Scarborough, Keri Shepard, Terri Shepard, Karen Smith, Cathy Valley, and Maureen Wilson.

UNCW contributors include: Carolyn Creech, Stage Manager; Christine Naval, Publicity Artist; James Burke, Recording Engineer; Carol Pitak, Publicity; Anne Fitzgibbon [Assistant Professor of Drama], Make-Up Artist; and Barbara Caldwell and Mark Meekins, Light and Sound crews.

Legal Way

If proceeds of a foreclosure are insufficient to pay the mortgage debt, the mortgagee's other property may be liable.

Q. If at the foreclosure of our home for default on our note secured by a mortgage, the purchase amount received is insufficient to pay the amount due, do we have to pay the balance? Can my pay be garnished? We live in California.

A. Unless you, the mortgagee, provide in the mortgage against a deficiency judgment for the balance after foreclosure (Ca. C.C.P. 580), the court may grant the mortgagee a deficiency judgment which gives him the right to collect the balance due from your other property, including your salary.

With slight variations other states grant such deficiency judgments.

Q. My daughter, who lives in Florida, unknowingly married a man who had lived in Ohio with his common-law wife and their two children for a long time. Is this bigamy? Should the law be notified?

A. Ohio recognizes a common-law marriage contract properly established (Ohio 97 N.E. 832). Florida has no law which prohibits foreign marriages.

The law (Am. Jur. 2d Ref. Bigamy Sec. 1-16) defines bigamy as the act of contracting a second marriage by one who has at the time a lawful living spouse by a prior marriage.

Statutes of all states hold bigamy a criminal offense. The essentials of the crime are: proof of an existing marriage, and that the second marriage was unlawfully contracted by the victim, as in the case of your daughter. You need more assurance about the Ohio marriage.

Q. Does holding real property, a home, in joint tenancy apply to an unmarried couple? We each paid one-half of the down payment. The deed appears in our names as joint tenants with "the right of survivorship." Upon the death of either tenant does the home pass to the survivor without probate court order? We live in the home which is in Maryland.

A. The law (Am. Jur. 2d Ref.: Joint tenancy Sec. 55 et seq.) says joint tenancy may be vested (owned) by any number of natural persons (male, female or mixed).

In Maryland the law (Md. Code Sec. 2-117) says no deed or any other writing may be construed to create an estate in joint tenancy unless it is expressly provided in the instrument that property is so held with the right to survivorship, then it shall pass to the survivor upon the death of either of the two holders without probate administration of the Maryland Orphans Court.

Upon the death of a joint tenant, the survivor is required to file the death certificate with the county recorder to establish the sole title with the survivor. Clearance with the estate authorities, federal and state, is required.

Senate Wants DeLuca Out of Office Immediately

By Helen Hazelton

SGA Vice-President Jon Faili called the Student Legislature to order last Thursday night in the Chemistry/Physics building. In his report to the Senate, President Francis DeLuca announced his resignation to the Senate, effective October 15.

Vice-president Faili, in his report to the Senate, discussed a list of projects to be undertaken, such as a workshop for members of the senate and other elected officials, an investigation into the parking situation on campus, and a more formal way of presenting business to the senate. Faili also reprimanded the Senate for adjourning without finishing the business at hand last week.

Pete Johnson, Attorney General, addressed his plan for a consumer action program in his report. This program, geared specifically toward students, would be available in the form of pamphlets. These pamphlets would look into off-campus housing, restaurants, in and around UNCW and other problems found by the students at UNCW.

Steve Chiappisi, Program Board Chair, announced several events planned for the spring. These include an all-night animated film festival and a seaside jam, similar to the Springfest held in Chapel Hill each year.

Jack Allen, Constitution Committee Chair, discussed a list of proposed amendments to the Constitution. These amendments were passed.

Mike Schmitt was elected to the WLOZ investigation committee. This committee, born out of the Media-Publications Board, is investigating the radio station and the problems recently encountered concerning its management.

Also unfinished business, John Ward was appointed to chair a committee to investigate parking on campus. Mike Stroud was approved as vice-president of the sophomore class, and Vice-President Faili announced that the seats of special and graduate senators are vacant. Anyone desiring to fill these vacancies are asked to see Jon Faili.

Two motions were passed by acclamation concerning outgoing President DeLuca. Mike Stroud moved to accept DeLuca's resignation effective immediately. Citing a relationship not conducive to work, Stroud pointed out that several quotes made by DeLuca in the September 27 issue of the Seahawk made the Senate look bad in the eyes of students. Jack Allen also moved that DeLuca escort Jon Faili, SGA president-to-be, to the October Board of Trustees meeting. This was also passed by acclamation. There had been some feeling that DeLuca would deny Faili this courtesy.

The meeting was adjourned at approximately 9 p.m.

The next Senate meeting will be held in C218 at 7pm on Thursday, October 4.

Incoming SGA President is Full of Plans

"If that's the worst thing I'll ever be called in my life, I'll get off pretty easy. I think everyone will recognize it as being a cheap shot." Jon Faili, SGA vice-president and successor to Francis DeLuca, commented on DeLuca's statement, "... he's a political opportunist ..."

Jon Faili has been associated with the SGA since he first attended UNCW. After his first semester in school, Jon was appointed to the SGA

Senate and, "since then I have been involved."

Concerning his projects while in office, Faili commented, "I'm full of plans. Something I've done as a vice-president which I'm going to carry through as a president is there's always talk about there's so much apathy here; people just don't care. I don't think that's the truth." Faili concludes that there is apathy at UNCW, but apathy cannot be singled out as the problem alone. The main problem, according to Faili, is the lack of communication or just miscommunication. "We're going to let the people know what the student government is doing as a whole and not just what each individual club is doing."

In addition to improving communication, Faili would like to investigate the parking situation. Where does the money go that they receive from the decals? Why are the people who give you the tickets the same people who you pay? Why shouldn't the student court handle these too? These are some questions Faili would like to answer while he is president.

Entries in Literary Contest must be in by October 12

Entries in the Atlantis Cover Contest and Poetry Contest as well as all general submissions to the campus literary magazine must be turned in to the English Department by 12 pm on Friday, October 12. The Cover Contest winner will receive $50. The artist's work will be on the cover of the fall issue of Atlantis.

The Poetry contest offers $50 for first place, $30 for second place, and $20 for third place. There will also be two honorable mentions, which will receive no prize money. Prize money comes from the North Carolina Junior Sirrhosis Society. The contests are sponsored by the English Department.

On Thursday, October 25, at 11:30 a.m. the winning cover will be shown and the winning poetry will be read. Monetary prizes will be presented at that time. Location of this event will be announced at a later date.

One must be a student at the university enrolled in at least two classes to submit any work to Atlantis. Students can be enrolled in any field of study. All work must be original.

Atlantis is not obligated to publish any poetry submitted to the contest and the author or artist of any work can choose to release his work for publication or not. All works will be copyrighted to Atlantis and to the artist or author.

All works are selected anonymously, and the staff cannot judge their own work or any work they recognize. According to Dr. James Collier, faculty adviser, this encourages a wider range of people in different fields to submit work to Atlantis.

The fall issue will be the tenth volume of Atlantis. All submissions will be selected by November 2. Atlantis is scheduled to be in circulation by November 30. All works are returned to the artists or authors.

Anyone wishing to join the Atlantis staff can contact Greg Glickstein, Prose Editor, at 256-2192; Tana Bouffard, Poetry Editor, at 686-9422; Becky Owens, Associate Editor, at 256-4085; Tom Jones, Arts Editor, at 256-2996; or Lea McDaniels, Editor, at 791-5846. Interested persons may also notify Dr. Collier or Dr. Jo Ann Corbett in the English Department, or the English Department secretary.

N.C.S.L. Holds Interim Council on UNCW campus

By Charles Parsons

This past weekend, the North Carolina Student Legislature held an Interim Council meeting on the UNCW campus.

The activities began on Friday night with an informal reception, at the Wrightsville Beach Holiday Inn, for the various member schools and other interested persons. The reception was highly attended by over one-hundred persons. It was dubbed the best reception of the year, and maintained the UNCW delegation's reputation for always having the best I.C. reception.

On Saturday, starting at 9:30 a.m., the N.C.S.L. met in the New Building Auditorium. The N.C.S.L. discussed plans for this upcoming year, and debated various topics of interest concerning North Carolina. This year, the N.C.S.L. took another controversial stand by passing a resolution opposing any effort to legalize organized formal prayer in public schools. The resolution was then mandated to the United States Supreme Court. Next, Dr. Hosier, of the Biology Department, gave an informative slide presentation on the Coastal Land Management Act.

Looking towards the future, the N.C.S.L. made announcements for various resolution topics to be presented at the next I.C. Such topics will be resolutions calling for a Constitutional Convention to balance the U.S. Budget, and resolutions about the Federal Government's relaxation of E.P.A. standards, and the disposal of radioactive wastes.

Also in attendance at this week's meeting were Tom Rebon, Representative to the N.C. General Assembly for Pender and Brunswick County, and Ron Taylor, Representative for Bladen, Columbus, and Sampson Counties.

The UNCW delegation must not go without mention. Their planning and hard work deserve much recognition.

The N.C.S.L. wishes to express appreciation to Chancellor Wagner for the use of the New Building and to the Professional Food Management personnel for Saturday's meal.

Also, thanks go to State Senator B.D. Schwartz and Stud Tyson for their generous financial contributions. Further appreciation to Lyle's Vineyard, Farmer Boy Delicatessen, and other community businesses that aided in making UNCW's I.C. a successful one.

Senator Defends Case Against DeLuca

To the Students:

I feel compelled to answer some of the recent allegations concerning the Senate and its case put forth by the President, Francis X. DeLuca.

I feel that it is unfortunate for the students, in the first year that the Senate has begun taking important, constructive action on a number of issues, that we have been saddled with a dishonest and inefficient President. The case against Mr. DeLuca was not mere "bullshit" (to use the President's term), but was based upon firm, verifiable evidence. The case against Mr. DeLuca was never heard in court, however. It was dismissed on a technicality. The members of the prosecutor's staff, feeling that the students have a right to understand the case we have against Mr. DeLuca, have therefore placed a file, available on request, in the SGA office. This file contains some of the evidence we have against him, along with the resolutions of impeachment. The students may then see for themselves the report issued by Mr. DeLuca to the Board of Trustees. Among the statements it contained were:

1. A section on the funding of various clubs by the SGA. Seven of the clubs which we supposedly fund we do not;

one does not even exist. Mr. DeLuca stated in his explanation to the Senate that this section was a simple mistake, and that he merely followed a format set down by his predecessor, Wayne Dunlap. He further went on to explain that we have funded all those groups in the past. (Unfortunately, he was incorrect.) At any rate, when one considers that Mr. DeLuca made it a point of serving on the finance committee during the budget sessions of last spring (over, I might add, the vociferous objections of the Senate), and that the finance committee is responsible for all the budget recommendations of the Senate, if anyone should have known the status of funded and unfunded clubs on campus, it should have been Mr. DeLuca. Further, the treasurer's report states which clubs are funded, if Mr. DeLuca had any doubt, he simply had to consult the records. However, let us not be too harsh on him—perhaps checking his facts before he presented his report to the Board of Trustees was simply too much of a burden for him.

2. Contained in the report is also a section on the accomplishments "The formation of a true Program Board". In the file you will find a page from the SGA minutes which predated Mr. DeLuca's election by several months, mandating the formation of a Program Board. Thus, the Senate formed the Program Board before Mr. DeLuca had even run for office. The single main difference between that Program Board and Mr. DeLuca's Program Board was in the mode of funding. Among his so-called accomplishments you will also find his statement that the finance committee operating rules and by-laws were written during his administration. In the file you will also find a set of finance committee operating rules which again predate his election by several months. These rules were drawn up by Jon Faili and Nancy Regan, as well as other members of the finance committee, again before Mr. DeLuca even ran. Interestingly enough, you will also find a document which is one of the copies of the rules drawn up by Jon and Nancy. Some sections have been blacked out, and it bears the notation "Nikki—will you please type on mimeo. . ." That notation came from Mr. DeLuca, and those are the finance committee rules that he set up; someone else's work, which he took credit for.

One should also consider some of the statements contained in this report in light of some of Mr. DeLuca's recent rhetoric in the press. For example, one of Mr. DeLuca's stated goals is "Increased student participation in the SGA," yet in the Wilmington Star-News he states that he would not recommend Student Government at UNCW to anyone. Mr. DeLuca also states in the report that he has re-opened communications between all sections of the University and the SGA, yet in the September 27 issue of the Seahawk Mr. DeLuca slams the Senate, unnamed "outsiders", Jon Faili, the student body vice president, and clubs "which don't have the mentality to follow directions". Such slurs seem to be rather an unusual way of opening the lines of communication; one wonders which University Mr. DeLuca was referring to.

Among the things which cannot be included in the file are the testimonies of various individuals to Mr. DeLuca's dishonesty and inefficiency. Pete Johnson, the Special Prosecutor, and I can testify to

Faill Places Priority on Directory & Workshop

At last Thursday's student legislature meeting, a great deal of work was accomplished. The most important was a series of constitutional amendments that will make our constitution workable until a new and better constitution can be prepared (to be finished before the end of this semester). Mike Stroud was appointed the Sophomore Class Vice President, Johnny Ward, Representative-at-large, to head the investigation concerning the parking situation at UNCW, and Steve Schmidt, Freshman Senator, was appointed as the legislature's representative to the Media and Publication Board's investigation of WLOZ. The student legislature also approved President DeLuca's appointment of Mike Hutchins to the Student Court.

VICE-PRESIDENT'S REPORT

By Jon Faili

There are two projects which I have placed a priority on: 1) the publication of a SGA directory in the Seahawk, and 2) a workshop for all interested students, student leaders (both in SGA and other organizations and clubs) and the general public.

I would like to urge all interested students to attend your student legislature meetings. This is our student government. The meetings are on Thursday nights, at 7 pm in room 218 of the Chemistry-Physics Building. If anyone would like to talk to me, I will be available for one hour before the meeting. See you there!

The BLACK WATCH

Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II

In bringing THE BLACK WATCH to these shores during the autumn of 1979, Columbia Artists Festivals is privileged to remind America of a great and noble heritage. As one of Her Majesty's most illustrious battalions, THE BLACK WATCH is Scotland's senior Highland Regiment whose history dates back to 1725.

Thrill to the spectacle of music brilliantly played by the band and the pipes. Thrill to the precision of the sword dancers and the drummers. Thrill to the marching and intricate formations by these stalwart men: Feast your eyes on the dazzling uniforms and regalia handsomely accented by the sweep of powerful lights. Acknowledge the throbs of your pulse as their tunes of glory—music of the past and the present—punctuate this glorious presentation.

With mutual admiration, two great nations touch hands across the sea at every brilliantly colorful performance by THE BLACK WATCH.

Baseball, Hot Dogs, Apple Pie, Chevrolet, and a Pencil?

"We use them for homework, to leave phone messages and draw sketches. We chew on them during a major crisis and as kids we tapped them on our desks to drive our teachers insane. They were used for the first drafts of Leonardo Da Vinci's paintings, behind every operation as the starting point for an incision, and the beginning of almost every industrial invention. What's the name of this priceless possession? Our everyday and commonly used pencil. This valuable instrument is approximately less than 2 centuries old and is sold around the 2.5 billion mark annually. All of us ask, where would we be without them? Let's travel back in time about 415 years to see exactly how the pencil came to be.

During a thunderstorm in 1564, a large tree was blown down in Cumberland, England. There, at the base of the tree's trunk where the roots once laid, were large deposits of a blackish mineral. This mineral's name was graphite and is still currently used today. Local shepherds broke off chunks of this stuff to brand their sheep and sly tradesmen cut it into sticks to write with. These were then hawked on street corners as "marking stones" for merchants on crates and merchandise. Those sticks, however; had two major defects. They were easily broken in half and always left a blackish stain to your hands. Years later, an unknown thinker wound string around the whole writing stick and loosened it as it was used.

This helped solve the problem of dirty and messy hands. The solution to brittleness was found in 1761 by Kaspar Faber, a part-time chemist. He pondered the graphite and added to it sulfur, antimony and resins. This made the stick much stronger and last longer.

Around the War of 1812, William Monroe, a Massachusetts' cabinetmaker, became the newspaper's front page man. In his shop, he used his delicate machines to make long grooves in narrow wooden slats. These grooves were cut in length of 1/2 the thickness of the molded graphite and then the 2 pieces were closely glued around the molds. Further down the assembly line, a metal tip was added at one end to hold a little rubber eraser for getting rid of mistakes. And here you have it, the very first modern pencil!

But just like everything else, changes were made to improve the pencil's efficiency and looks. Technology has a way of making its rounds. Today, our standard 7 inch pencil can draw a line 35 miles long and write at least 45,000 words. It's been tested to withstand 17 sharpenings and will end up having a 2 inch butt that can still be held. The most fascinating fact about our pencil is its yellow color. Manufacturers have tried many other shades such as blue, red green, but the original yellow stain is still the most likely chosen on a store's shelves. A test was given to show how true this really was. Five hundred green pencils and five hundred yellow pencils were given to a few people who constantly had to use them in their work or schooling. Even though the two were made exactly the same except for coloring, complaints were commonly made about the green pencils. They were either too hard to sharpen, smudgy or their points were easily broken. Hurrah for tradition!

So as you can see, pencils have come a long way since the thunder storm in England, but this basic and everyday necessity still holds the number one popularity as a writing tool. As a matter of fact, it should be right up there with baseball, hot dogs, apple pie and chevrolet!

Library Fines and Lost Books, Misconceived

There are many misconceptions about library fines and lost books at Randall Library on campus. There is no grace period for overdue books and lost books must be reported and paid for so they can be replaced.

Due to high mailing costs no notices are sent until overdue fines on general circulations reach 50 cents. However, when the fine reaches 50 cents, the full amount must be paid. Mrs. Arlene Hanerfeld, Circulations Librarian said, "We simply choose not to collect the fine unless it is 50 cents."

If a fine is not attended to, a notice is sent to the borrower. If the fine still remains three weeks later, a letter is sent to the borrower stating that the cashier and registrar will be contacted. If these measures are taken, the borrower cannot pay tuition, get transcripts or receive his diploma until the fine is paid.

Fine money goes into a general college fund and in no way benefits the library directly. Mrs. Hanerfeld stated: "We don't charge it to buy other things. We do it to encourage people to bring back books on time."

If a book is definitely lost, it is best to come in and pay for it before an overdue fine accumulates on the book. It is best not to pay for the book unless it is definitely lost, though, because after the money is sent to the cashier, no refunds can be given if the book is found.

The money paid for a lost book is used to replace the book. If the book is out of print the borrower must pay one and on-half times the cost of the book to pay for an out-of-print dealer searching for a copy of the book. If an identical replacement cannot be found one that deals with the same subject matter is purchased.

The library charges 10 cents per day per book on regular circulating books, 25 cents per hour on 2-hour and 24-hour reserve books and 25 cents a day for 3-day reserve books.

Want to go to Israel?

Israel? You can experience it yourself. A six week dig is planned for the summer of 1980, according to Dr. Gerald Shinn, professor in the Philosophy and Religion Department.

Students from UNC-W, Apalachian, Charlotte, Louisville and Rockingham are all invited to participate in discovering ancient artifacts of Israel.

In this six week dig students may earn 3 hours credit from UNC-W and 4 hours credit from Tel Aviv University.

The cost is $1,100 per person. This includes the flight, room and board, as well as tuition at both UNC-W and Tel Aviv.

For more information contact Gerald Shinn in the Philosophy and Religion Department.

Housing Policy Has Been Changed

Are you aware that the housing policy of UNC-W has been changed? It has, with the hope that residence living will become more pleasant, explained Dean of Students Helena Cheek.

In past years, the residence halls have been supervised by upper classmen, with a position of chief resident and a resident's assistant, (RA) in each building. They have also always been co-ed.

This year, however, the policy is different. Raymond May has been hired as Housing Area Coordinator. This full-time position has replaced the former system requiring an upper classman as chief resident.

May lives in and manages Galloway while supervising the staff in the other three dorms. His assistants in Belk, Hewlett, and Dorm '79 are, respectively, Ramona Lopez, Synclair Harris, and Pete Divoky.

When asked what he wanted to do, May cited the hope for a Residence Hall Government Association. This organization would be responsible for programming in the residence halls, whether social, cultural, or educational.

It would also supervise the spending of money (from the vending machines, for example) for the students. May expressed a genuine need for the council and students who would be interested in working with it.

May would also like to see a system of judicial councils established. May explained that this council would provide peer discipline for students within the residence halls, determine their guilt or innocence, and levy a just sanction accordingly.

Through such councils, May said students might realize their potential power and influence as a unified group while using the proper channels.

He continued by saying that students are needed who have a real interest in rules and regulations and who are eager to work with the administration.

This year, Dean Cheek concluded, the Students Affairs Office is hoping that with the addition of Raymond May, there will be better organization with more programming which should make residents living more pleasant.

Checks Are Ready

The Financial Aid Office sends out an important reminder to those students who still haven't claimed their checks. All checks need to be received and endorsed by their owners immediately.

Many students mistakenly believe that their checks will be automatically accredited. However, the checks will not be valid unless they are endorsed by the recipient.

Students are urged to report to the Financial Aid Office (Alderman 110) to complete any unfinished business.

73 Foot Trawler Awarded to Marine Science Department

By Laurie Lanier

This fall, the "Lady Ellen" began her new career at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington. The "Lady Ellen," a 73-foot trawler, was awarded to the UNCW Marine Sciences Department in early June by the National Science Foundation, and is designated for research and education in the area of marine studies.

Dr. Gilbert Bane, Director of Marine Sciences stated, "Officially, the award was made in conjunction with the marine sediment research grant of Dr. William J. Cleary." In addition, "Many others of the UNC administrative and University system General Administration have worked arduously over the past several months to prepare for its acquisition."

While we now possess the vessel, there is still a great deal of work to be done before the is fully operational," stated Dr. Bane. Currently, students and faculty members are busy wrapping the bottom of the vessel, cleaning the engine and the pumps, and performing general maintenance on the "Lady Ellen." Dr. Bane states that, "on a long-term basis, the upkeep and maintenance will be very expensive. All related capital for the vessel must be acquired through outside support, a contingency that was stipulated by the State in its acceptance of the vessel. It is anticipated that the majority of funding will come through grants for research and education conducted by UNCW and other institutions."

Marine Science Department faculty members have already begun planning research projects that will utilize the vessel. Some proposed projects include:

1. A marine faunistic study of the southeast coast; (a study of the animals of that region.)
2. A deep water Continental Shelf study of the East coast;
3. A floating classroom program in the marine sciences;
4. A study of the disposition of river effluents into the oceanic current system;

5. Geo-ecological studies of temperate reefs off the Carolina and Georgia coasts.

The vessel was designed and built as an open ocean shrimp trawler with overnight accommodations for her crew and researchers. Its 73-foot length provides sufficient deck space to handle oceanographic instruments and equipment, as well as commercial fishing gear. The deep draft makes the trawler particularly stable in the rough seas off North Carolina during the fall and winter.

The National Science Foundation acquired the "Lady Ellen" after the vessel was seized off the New Bern, North Carolina coast by the U.S. Customs Service because it was carrying an estimated 25 million dollars worth of marijuana.

If you are willing to help secure projects relative to educational and research funding in support of the vessel, please contact Dr. Gilbert Bane at Extension 2489.

the obstruction of justice undertaken by Mr. DeLuca during the investigation of the case. When Pete tried to gain access to the files in the SGA office for material necessary to prosecute the case, permission was denied by Mr. DeLuca, although such files are open to any student. It is interesting that in my official capacity as Chairman of the Constitution Committee I was given access to these files, but when I wished material for the prosecution's case, permission to enter the files was flatly denied because I might "mess them up." This is doubly interesting since I was the one who went through the files, placed all the minutes in chronological order, made a notation on the file jacket of each one stating what dates were present in each folder, and copies of the minutes were all that I was after. Surely if I had wished to mess up the files I would not have gone to the trouble of straightening them out first. When permission to enter the files was denied by Mr. DeLuca, I asked him that if I called the secretary and Dr. Malloy and secured their joint permission to look in the files if I could then enter those files. His answer to me was, "You will still have to get my permission--and my answer is no." The very next day he told the Senate that he would allow anyone access to the files as long as the secretary was there. I guess perhaps he had forgotten our conversation.

As to Mr. DeLuca's manifest inefficiencies, you need only to ask Don Corry or Helen Hazelton, who tried on numerous occasions to get up with Mr. DeLuca over the summer, so that he could attend to something necessary to the functioning of their groups. Alas, the President was seldom to be found in his office. You might also want to talk to Jon Fail, whose scholarship (which has, traditionally, always belonged to the Vice President) was given away by Mr. DeLuca, although he knew that a Vice President was soon to be elected. (Incidentally, that scholarship went to the Chief Justice).

If I may, I would also like to address some of the statements made by Mr. DeLuca in the Seahawk last week. First, I should like to go on record as stating that the impeachment was conducted entirely by members of the Senate. No one who was not a senator contributed a word to either impeachment resolution. The same is true of the prosecution, save that the Attorney General, also a student, served as prosecutor. It is a pity that Mr. DeLuca cannot say the same for his defense.

Mr. Burton (and myself, I might add--and apologize for) both made heated statements to Mr. DeLuca during moments of emotion. But we use Mr. DeLuca's own defense to the senate of his statements to the Wilmington Star-News, i.e., "I was upset, I'm sure you'd do the same thing if you were in my shoes". We did, Francis, and we're sorry.

As to the atmosphere not being conducive to the proper functioning of the SGA, again Mr. DeLuca and I find ourselves in agreement--which is why the one month delay between the resignation and its effective date puzzles me. If the SGA is to be more effective, and if Mr. DeLuca feels that it is "Bullshit" obviously he is not willing to work very hard for effective government, so why drag it on any longer? Unless, of course, Mr. DeLuca wishes to make it to one more Board of Trustees meeting. I must say that I sympathize with Mr. DeLuca's feeling that he has left the SGA in the hands of students who are motivated more by politics than by what is right. This is the way the Senate felt when we heard what had transpired over the summer and what was still going on--and this is why we impeached him. Vengeance was not a factor, however, Justice was.

In conclusion, I would like to say that, as a student who not only voted for Mr. DeLuca, but as one who actively campaigned for him as well, Francis, I do feel that you have let me down: not because of your resignation, but because of the acts you committed which necessitated it.

I thank the Seahawk for the opportunity to air my views. I remain,

Sincerely yours,
JACK ALLEN
Senior Senator

Wilmington Makes Mike Cross Feel at Home

By Tricia Wallace

When Mike Cross stepped on stage—clad in blue jeans, red shirt, and suspenders, and picked up his fiddle you realized you weren't listening to a concert—Mike was creating music that wrapped itself around the audience and held them totally spellbound.

Those of you who were at Kenan Auditorium last Wednesday night and saw the line that stretched all the way across the parking lot already suspected that this was going to be no ordinary concert. Suspicions were confirmed when you were finally seated inside and everybody started clapping and yelling before Mike Cross even appeared on stage.

His first piece was a haunting Irish fiddle tune. Mike then followed with some outlandish tale accompanied on his six-string guitar. From there the pace never stopped as he took turns playing two fiddles, two 12-string guitars, and one 6-string. Mike's last encore number was "Sandy River" which he says he only wrote the night before.

Photography by Pushee/ Bryant

Mike Cross' music exceeds the bounds of entertainment and runs over into art. He has the amazing gift of keeping his audience guessing by skillfully sliding from risqué humor to songs of Kentucky bluegrass meadows with nary a blink of his eye. Mike also knows how to satisfy his audience and still keep them hungering for more.

Mike is famous for his story-tellin' inbetween times and these just aren't your run-of-the-mill stories. Most are meant for mature audiences and all of them are meant to get laughs which Mike Cross has no trouble getting.

Mike says he enjoyed doing this concert because his hands and voice felt better than they ever have before. His favorite song is the unreleased "Start Drawing the Lines" which he performed in his cocaine medley.

He knows he'll never get tired of playing and singing but Mike's not so sure about the traveling around part. "You get burned out physically and spiritually traveling all the time. I've only been traveling two and a half years really, but it feels like ten," he said. In the next couple of years Mike hopes to release a live album while traveling.

Wilmington is special to Mike because it was the first place he performed a concert with only his name on the bill.

Mike Cross plans to return sometime next year so if you were unfortunate enough to miss him this time; don't despair—just get your tickets early next time.

The Buddy Holly Story to be Shown Oct. 9 in Kenan

"The Buddy Holly Story" will be shown by the UNCW Fine Arts Committee at 8 p.m., Tuesday, October 9, in Kenan Auditorium. This movie "...gives a fine and altogether believable portrait of an extremely complex young man of zealous dedication." so said the Film and Broadcasting Review.

This film biography traces the roots of the late Buddy Holly's stardom from a small town in Texas to his international fame as he reached the top of the record charts. This Columbia Pictures film was directed by Steve Rash and stars Gary Busey, Don Stroud and Charlie Martin Smith.

The pioneer originators of what is known today as rock n' roll, make their controversial debut at a roller rink which results in a riot against their "jungle music." A local radio station sends a tape of this performance to a New York Recording Company executive, and it's off to the big time for Holly and his band.

Emphasis is strong on Holly's life character and the key that led to his music. Gary Busey's brilliant and sensitive portrayal of Holly is likely to skyrocket his career.

Hedy Kleyweg wrote in The Hollywood Reporter that "The Buddy Holly Story" is a rationally charged, well-rendered portrait." This motion picture is in color and rated PG.

This is the sixth film presented this semester. Admission for UNCW students with ID cards is 50 cents while non-students will only be charged $1.

SEAHAWK SPORTS

Soccer

WILMINGTON--The UNC Wilmington soccer team, after enduring what could best be described as a "September survival course," hosts the first Port City Classic here Friday and Saturday (Oct. 5-6).

The four-team tournament features Jacksonville University, UNC Charlotte, North Carolina Wesleyan and the home standing Seahawks.

Pairings for Friday's semi-finals have Jacksonville and UNCC meeting at 2 p.m., with UNCW and Wesleyan tangling at 4 p.m. Saturday's third-place contest begins at 2 p.m., with the championship game following.

Co-sponsoring the event, along with UNCW, is the East Wilmington Rotary Club. In addition to the championship team award, trophies will be presented to an all-tournament squad and the tourney most valuable player, as selected by the coaches.

"We're very excited about the opportunity to host the tournament," UNCW coach Calvin Lane says. "Events such as this are good for our players. It gives them something to shoot for—a championship to win and some individual recognition.

"Jacksonville would probably have to be the favorite at this time, but UNCC has won something like four in a row and also has a strong club. I don't know much about Wesleyan except for seeing some of their scores and they've been playing very well, too."

And how about the host Seahawks?

"As I said before, I believe that we will be ready to play well," Lane predicts. "The past few games have taken their toll physically, but I feel our kids are looking forward to playing at home and having a chance at winning the tourna-

Volleyball Team off to 'Better' Start

WILMINGTON--A three wins three losses record might not impress some people, but to UNCW volleyball coach Judy Peel, that breakeven mark is more than welcomed.

After struggling to a 3-16 record last year, the current edition of Lady Seahawk spikers has been rejuvenated with nine freshmen and some capable returnees, and has already equaled 1978's win total with victories last week over Greensboro College, St. Andrews and Elon.

"I'm more than pleased," second-year coach Peel says. "We've shown improvement every game and should continue to upgrade our play as we progress through the year."

Adding to that total could be tough this week, as UNCW travels to Guilford on Tuesday (Oct. 2) to face a strong Lady Quaker squad, not to mention the defending national Division II champions from High Point College.

Thursday (Oct. 4), The Lady

Hawks continue on the road, visiting St. Augustine, who has already downed UNCW earlier this year. The busy week concludes at home on Friday (Oct. 5) with a home match against Chowan.

Cross Country and Tennis Teams Return to Action

WILMINGTON--UNCW's cross country team and the women's tennis squad both return to action this week after a week-long layoff.

The Seahawk harriers, who dropped their opening dual meet to Francis Marion last Wednesday, visit Campbell on Saturday (Oct. 6), while the Lady Hawks netters journey to Sandhills on Friday before returning home to host Methodist this Saturday (Oct. 6).

Rain once again washed out part of the tennis schedule last that our first month would be rough," Lane says. "I'll take the three wins, of course, but we have really played much better than the record indicates."

"I'm proud of our overall effort, though. If we can sustain that and avoid further injuries, we should have a fine season."

week, forcing cancellation of the Eastern Collegiate Invitational in Fayetteville. In the only match that weather has allowed, UNCW came out on the wrong end of a 9-0 score with St. Mary's.

The women's golf team braved some inclement weather itself in Staunton, Va., last week, finishing third in the Mary Baldwin Invitational. Next action for the She-Hawks is Oct. 18-19 in the Duke Fall Invitational in Durham.

Here's the Answer: The Knack, Kiss, Dylan and Robin Williams

By BARBARA LEWIS
Pop Scene Answerperson

THE KNACK

Q: I seem to recall that there were several hits in the early or mid-'60s by a band called the Knack. Is this the same group that now has a hit with "My Sharona"? Where is the band from?—Theodore Sims, New Orleans, La.

A: It seems that Capitol Records has had two Knacks. The first one released a single in 1968 called "I'm Aware," and then promptly vanished from sight. The Knack that currently rides in the national top 10 with "My Sharona" is a completely different band, and "Get the Knack" is their first album.

The Knack is a Los Angeles band led by singer, guitarist and writer Doug Feiger. Their surprisingly rapid climb to the top of the charts has led other record companies to sign their own L.A. groups. Capitol signed the Motels soon after the Knack, and Arista will be releasing a first album by the Pop later this month.

People are slowly discovering that there is more to Southern California than Jackson Browne and the Eagles.

KISS

Q: Will Kiss' next album be "Kiss Alive III," a collection of older songs, or a new studio album? It must be hard to find time to get to the recording studio when you're busy touring the world.—Chuck Harris, Holland, Manitoba.

A: You're right, Chuck, it is hard to get to a studio when you're busy touring the world. Kiss is on the road through November, and they've got their hands full just keeping up the momentum. As a result, the band hasn't had time to give much thought to what they're going to do for their next album.

According to Casablanca Records, the group is at least six months away from getting down to work on an LP. Chances are, though, that it'll be another album of new studio material. After all, there's no real hurry. "Dynasty" is still doing well sales-wise.

Q: Is it true Bob Dylan has converted to Christianity? I've heard his new album is very religious, but find the whole thing a little hard to believe.—Lynda Rose, Mechanicville, New York.

A: Speculation was rife in the music industry that Dylan had become a convert to Christianity, and his new album, "Long Train Coming," confirms everybody's suspicion. From the cover art—which features a cross motif on both front and back—to songs like "You've Got To Serve Somebody," it's clear that Dylan is serious about his newly-adopted religion.

Critical reaction to the album has been sharply split. Many writers panned it, but Rolling Stone magazine publisher Jann Wenner was so taken with the album that he personally wrote a gushing, two-page essay in praise of "Slow Train," reportedly before Rolling Stone reviewers could get their hands on it.

ROBIN WILLIAMS

Q: I heard a rumor recently that Robin Williams is going to leave "Mork and Mindy" so he can become a movie star. True or false?—Maria R., Mobile, Ala.

A: Although Williams will be starring in the title role of the upcoming motion picture "Popeye," he has no intention of leaving "Mork and Mindy." The show, now into its second season, is stronger than ever, with an expanded cast.

Williams, by the way, has added another feather to his already-varied cap with his first comedy album, "Reality, What a Concept." The Casablanca LP has been climbing the album charts in recent weeks.

The Main ??? Event

By Paula Suttle

For those of you who fancied the pairing of Ryan O'Neal and Barbra Streisand in "What's Up Doc?," the opportunity to experience these two together again is presenting itself. (If you have missed this film the first time around, it was pure negligence, since Oleander Cinema held it over for almost the entire summer!) Barbra Streisand has long been my "heroine" not just for her ability to act, but for her expertise in vocalizing. Well, if you endorse these same opinions of her, prepare yourself for a disappointment in this particular movie. Don't misunderstand—she does her usual good job of portraying a dizzy female. This time she has dyed her hair an atrocious shade of red and becomes, of all things, a business executive, owning a defunct perfume manufacturing company. If your intentions are to experience some of the resonant sounds that can come forth from this multi-talented singer—forget it. If you stay until the end of the picture, you get to hear Barbra Streisand singing—what else but—Disco!

Okay girls—Ryan O'Neal lovers, brace yourselves! The body that everyone once dreamed of cuddling now has a hint of the proverbial "middle-age bulge"! His professing to be an ex-boxer is about as convincing as the dye job Barbra has done on her hair.

I don't want to disillusion anyone—for two hours, one can sit through this movie and possibly be entertained by the shenanigans of two of Hollywood's biggest "super-stars". The wardrobe is precise, the acting is creditable, and the scenery is quite picturesque. I just personally think it would be titillating to see Barbra Streisand in a movie with the quality of "Funny Girl" or "A Star is Born", instead of what seems to be a film produced basically for monetary purposes.

The movie is now playing at New Centre Cinema I.

Please Note

Hugh Hollman defines "criticism" in several ways. One of these ways being "to judge works by clearly defined standards of evaluation." In judging another's work, I have clearly defined my personal standards to give you an idea of the movie being considered. Evaluate your standards!

Black Musicians Not Making Their Share

By LEE MOORE

Pop Scene Columnist

Black music accounts for a large chunk of the $4-billion-a-year record industry, but according to Dick Griffey, black musicians and businessmen. They were used for their air share.

Griffey, a Los Angeles-based record executive and concert promoter, is the president of United Black Concert Promoters, a recently formed organization dedicated to insuring that the black community gets a larger share of concert dollars.

"You go to a Teddy Pendergrass concert at Madison Square Garden and it grosses $140,000," Griffey was quoted as saying in a New York daily newspaper recently. "Ninety percent of the audience is black, but a white promoter takes a 15 percent cut."

Griffey went on to explain that the problem is economic rather than racial. "The white promoters aren't concerned with our problems and I don't blame them. Everybody has to take care of his own."

The problem extends beyond concert promotion. Public relations agencies, record companies, booking agencies, concessionaires and stage hands are largely white, and Griffey hopes that his efforts will result in more involvement by blacks in all areas of the concert and recording business. Major black artists—Earth, Wind and Fire, the Commodores and Pendergrass, among others—are now being promoted by the United Black Concert Promoters.

PAUL SIMON

Paul Simon made a brief appearance in Woody Allen's "Annie Hall," as a slick music industry executive. Now he's about to take the leap into full involvement. Early next month, his new movie, titled "Moon Dog," begins filming in Cleveland and Manhattan.

Simon is both screenwriter and star of the film, which will be released by Warner Bros.

Earth, Wind, and Fire

And naturally, he's also throwing in 14 new tunes, with the inevitable soundtrack also going to Warner Bros. Recs., his new label.

The film is reportedly autobiographical in theme.

PETER CRISS

When you become a big star, your troubles increase proportionately, it seems. Peter Criss, drummer of Kiss, recently got his divorce situation with former wife, Lydia, straight. She'll get their lavish Connecticut mansion, and the settlement will reportedly make her a millionaire.

And Lydia Criss has been indulging in a new hobby of late—rock and roll photography. She even buzzed Kiss manager Bill Aucoin to get tickets for the band's Madison Square Garden concerts last month.

STEVE MARTIN

Look for comedian Steve Martin's "Comedy Is Not Pretty," his third album, any day now. It's another live disc and much of the material will sound familiar even to the most casual fan. Then again, Martin can still get laughs by walking onstage and saying, "Excuse me!" The lavish package includes a cover photo of Martin in drag.

LED ZEPPELIN

While Led Zeppelin's "In Through the Out Door," the band's first album since 1977, climbed to the No. 1 spot on the album charts and has been garnering good reviews in North America, all is not well with the band—critically speaking, that is.

The British music press panned the album unmercifully, and reporters on both sides of the Atlantic are in general agreement that Zeppelin's highly-touted return to the stage at Britain's Knebworth Festival in August was less than auspicious.

After checking out the show, which was attended by more than 120,000, Rolling Stone magazine reviewer Mick Brown found Zeppelin to be "perfunctory...the band played with such a lack of cohesion and empathy, that at times the bass and drums lumbered ponderously behind Jimmy Page's lead guitar..."

Top Ten Albums and Singles

Led Zeppelin's "In Through the Out Door" holds down the top LP spot for the second week, and the Knack's "My Sharona" is still the No. 1 single. This week's top 10, with last week's ratings in parentheses, are:

Mick Taylor, Unheralded but Good

In the record business, an artist can easily be overlooked if he doesn't have a hit single or superstar billing. Sometimes even superstar status isn't enough to make a fickle public remember, and this is the case with Mick Taylor. Mick Taylor joined John Mayall in early 1968 as a replacement for Peter Green, who had left to form Fleetwood Mac. Taylor played on four Mayall albums before leaving to become lead guitarist for "the greatest rock n' roll band in the world," the Rolling Stones in mid 1969 as a replacement for Brian Jones.

Taylor remained with the Stones from 1969 to late 1974, with several outstanding albums being recorded in the meantime. His departure from the Stones was not one of turbulence, but rather one of musical differences. The Stones were, and still are, a rock'n roll band, but Taylor wanted an opportunity to play more blues and jazz-oriented tunes. He also wanted a chance to play and sing his compositions. Immediately after leaving the Stones, Taylor joined forces with Jack Bruce (Cream, West, Bruce & Laing, Graham Bond) to do exactly that, but the press played it up as a new supergroup and the idea got shelved. The following years were filled with rumors of a solo album and those rumors finally materialized last month with his first solo attempt simply entitled Mick Taylor.

Side one begins with "Leather Jacket," a rock song that may have been written with Keith Richards in mind. It's a solid start followed by "Alabama." This song conjures up visions of Taylor sitting on someone's porch with only a guitar, singing the blues into the night, delta style. "Slow Blues" is exactly that: slow blues. This song clearly exemplifies why Taylor wanted a chance to play more blues. He lays down clean, precise licks as he does

Plant Parables: As the World Ferns

Like so many disasters, this one started out innocently enough.

First there was Fern.

Don't get me wrong; at first Fern was a true friend. I found her in a sleazy greenhouse, about to be attacked by a big, bullying philodendron. Before you could say "fertilizer" Fern was on her way to a better pot.

For a while it was a good life. I left for class every morning with Fern gently waving after me. When I talked, she grew, and this did wonders for my ego. Fern was also a big hit with my friends. She fanned them in summer and didn't hog the heat in winter. She was living proof that plants are people too. Yes, ours was a thriving relationship.

Then the blight came. In a weak moment, I gave shelter to a homeless Wandering Jew.

As far as plants go, he seemed pretty decent, with lots of leaves and excellent family roots. But he was a fast talker and he grew on little innocent Fern. Imagine my shock when I came home to find them both snuggled in Fern's flowerbed! I immediately banished that Wandering Jew to a prison planter, but the damage had been done. My dumb, innocent Fern had been pollinated out of wedlock.

At first, abortion seemed the answer. Fern, however, rejected the idea completely. She went into a deep depression, digging further and further into herself. When I shipped the Wandering Jew back to Jerusalem, Fern uprooted her past and tried to follow him. I found her sprawled across the front steps, exhausted but still gamely flopping along. In her condition, the outcome of such exertion was inevitable: Fern suffered a seedless pregnancy.

The whole experience changed my poor frilly friend. She became brown and wrinkled, pining for her potted paramour, sighing for the seedlings she could never have. She lost her zest for life and became just another drooping dirt-diver.

I tried everything for Fern. I gave her a handsome rubber plant for company; she made snide cracks about his occupation. I talked to her for hours; she bought earplugs. I knew the good days were gone when, as I was pruning her fronds, Fern bit the hand that clipped her. Her mind was gone and she wallowed in the soil of self-pity.

Late one night I awoke to hear strange gasping noises. Fern! I raced to save her, but it was too late—she had already OD'd on Green Gro, her favorite plant food. That's how it ended for poor Fern: Jilted and alone, she couldn't face a crisis when the clippings were down.

After Fern, I thought I'd never pot another pod. But recently, I've found a friend to help me forget Fern...an ivy plant named Irving!

Legal Way

By E.J. DEMSON, J.D.

Your young son has been living for the day he reaches legal age for a driver's license. You have been dreading the day. What are your legal responsibilities for his actions at the wheel?

Q. We live in Kentucky, and we have a son, under 18, who is applying for his first motor vehicle operator's permit. As his parents, we must sign his application. What legal responsibilities do we have for any damage he may cause as a driver?

A. Parents who sign such applications, according to Kentucky Statute (RS 186.590) are liable jointly and severally (apart from the child) with him for negligence if he is under 18, the age of majority in your state and most others.

Most states, as has Kentucky, now have abandoned parental immunity from claims against the child in cases of willful and negligent torts (wrongs) (KLY 4, 65 S.W. 921).

Q. Two days after our father died, we went to his bank with his safe deposit key to get his will from the box. The bank manager refused to let our mother open the box, saying that a representative of the State Tax Commission must first take an inventory of its contents.

Is this the law in Arizona, where we live? How can we settle his affairs if we can't get to his important papers?

A. Like virtually all other states, Arizona (ARS Sec. 42-1530) prohibits access to safe deposit boxes after death of any person having access to the box.

For such prior access, permission must be obtained from the Arizona Estate Tax Commission. Otherwise, heirs must wait for access until a Commission representative inventories the box.

Q. I paid a dealer a $200 deposit on an $11,000 truck, but the bank rejected my loan application. Now the dealer refuses to return my deposit until the truck is sold. Can he legally hold my deposit? I live in New Jersey.

A. The Uniform Commercial Cod, adopted by New Jersey and all other states (Sec. 2-705) says a seller may retain "a reasonable deposit" as damages when the buyer is unable to pay the purchase price.

The only question is whether $200 is a reasonable deposit. If you cannot compromise with the dealer, only a court may decide after reviewing evidence of how much the dealer lost in the transaction.

Horoscope

For the week of Sept. 30-Oct. 6

By GINA

ARIES (March 21 to April 19): Avoid impulse and give effort to those things that take time and patience. Pay attention to mate, partner, close friend — they are important to you now. Be discreet in romance — don't engage in "undercover" affairs.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): You can iron out difficulties at work by getting the cooperation of your boss or superior. Be tactful but firm with those under you. Small difficulties at home should be overlooked — don't lose your temper.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20): Check on your progress toward goals in the last nine months and make necessary adjustments. Be honest with yourself. In career matters you need to be more objective — see the other person's side of the question.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22): Energy may be low and you could be disgusted with other's performance. Keep your own work on a high level and take any opposition in stride. Mentally you are alert and can get to the heart of any situation.

LEO (July 23 to Aug. 22):

You may feel somewhat depressed and introspective now. The letdown will quickly pass, however. Get out with friends and take small timeouts from work, if possible. Finish each project before starting another or you'll have loose ends.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 to Sept. 22): The week is a kind of mixed bag with emotional ups and downs. When depressed, don't sit home and brood — get out with friends for amusement. Settle any legal matters that are hanging — call a conference of those concerned.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): You are really "high" and creativity is at a peak. Good time to start a new adventure. Show affection to those you love. Use your original, artistic talents to their fullest. Pay bills, balance the checkbook and meet financial obligations.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): You may have an opportunity for advancement on your job through meeting someone with influence and prestige. Look to other people's interest and don't act "big shot." Good time to go shopping to find just what you want.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21): Be relaxed and leisurely in what you do and you accomplish more than by driving yourself. Calmness on your part wins the confidence of others. Any inner unrest can be solved through inspired meditation.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 19): Watch what you say so that it can't be misinterpreted — gossip may be running rampant. Career and finances are favored now and progress can be made. A financial investment may be good, but get professional advice.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 to Feb. 18): Your life is changing and there are areas where you feel you have outgrown prior needs. With a positive attitude increase education and personal development. Make no verbal contracts — have them clearly spelled out on paper.

PISCES (Feb. 19 to March 20): A high-activity time with lots of communications, errands and taking care of the odds and ends of things. Have a meaningful talk with mate or partner to come to greater understanding. Work on perfecting a skill or a project.

throughout the album. "Baby I Want You" continues the side and is a love song highlighted by some lovely slide work as well as some Spanish style picking. The side closes with "Broken Hands," the closest thing to a Stones cut on the entire album. This would've fit well with the songs on "Exile on Main Street," as the guitar playing resembles that era as does the daggeresque phrasing.

The flip side kicks off with "Giddy-up," a song that fits the mold of Jeff Beck's "Blow by Blow" stage. In fact, Richard Bailey, who played drums on the Beck album, plays drums on this song. Other guests on this track are former Grease Band bass player, Alan Spenner and the recently departed, Lowell George of Little Feat fame, who played a tasty slide guitar. "S.W.S." is next and is the anemic song on the album, with Taylor delivering a weak vocal. Even though weak, "S.W.S." still has potent guitar work and even some string work on it. The last cut on side two is a medley. It begins with "Spanish" and closes with "A Minor." "Spanish" finds Taylor playing a smooth and flowing lead while the strings swirl around in the background. This song too fits the jazz mold and is the best song on the album. "A Minor" ends the side and Taylor's guitar simply soars along with a piano into a light jazz close.

Although Taylor is credited for guitar, piano, synthesizer, strings, bass and vocals, he did receive some assistance. Along with the aforementioned Lowell George, Alan Spenner and Richard Bailey, there were Mike Driscoll (drums) Jean Roussell (piano) and Kuma Harada (bass). Taylor also wrote all the songs, with exception of "Alabama," which was written with Colin Allen, and he produced the album as well, doing a very credible job in the process. What Taylor has done is produce a very good solo effort. He's not a hanger-on trying to skim by faded glories, but a definite talent that is, without question, one of the best guitarists in rock. Had Columbia given this album half the push that capitol gave The Knack, it may have easily been more of a commercial success than it has proven to be, but no matter. Careful inspection will yield one of the best, if unheralded, albums of the year.

UNCW Senior Featured in WHSL Radio Talk Show

Beginning Sunday October 7, UNCW will be featured in "Seahawk Talk," a news forum conducted by WHSL. The host of the show will be Tom Lamont, a senior communication major at UNCW.

"Seahawk Talk" is a fifteen minute, 28 segment talk show that "will cover a wide basis of topics. The show will not only deal with administration people, but also with student life. We plan to cover athletics, social events, etc.," says Lamont.

According to Lamont, the whole idea began last summer when he began his internship with WHSL. He brought up the subject to his advisor Ms. Betty Jo Welch and to WHSL station manager Rick Todd. The idea eventually became Lamont's Honors Project. He will be selecting the topics, editing, producing, directing, and writing the material featured in "Seahawk Talk."

under the guidance of WHSL news director Mary C. Morton. Lamont states that each show will be researched and maintained. Every tape will be evaluated by Ms. Betty Jo Welch, Rick Todd, and an additional member of the UNCW Communication department. Each tape will be permanently kept for the public in Randall Library.

Lamont is optimistic about WHSL retaining "Seahawk Talk" as a part of the station's regular format. Lamont stated that "WHSL is trying to keep the show an ongoing basis.

SGA President Jon Faill has Interesting Background

By Janet Hundley

After hitchhiking for two years in Europe Jon Faill came to America. His parents were living in Wilmington at the time and he dropped in on his way to California. After spending a little time here he decided to stay.

Both his parents are emigrants. His father was English and his mother was Japanese. They met in Tokyo while his father was in the service. Jon was born there and later when his father was transferred they moved to Germany. There Jon attended Mannheim High School which was on the base where he and his parents lived. Life there was somewhat different. With the exception of working as a bag boy there were very few jobs. Because of this, unlike UNC-W, the parking problem was minimum. Not only because of the lack of jobs but also because of high insurance rates few students could afford a car. During the time Jon attended Mannheim only one student owned a car. The senior class however did manage to acquire the funds for a senior trip to London. Jon graduated from high school in 1970 and then spent two years hitchhiking in Europe.

After reaching Wilmington Jon got a job in a grocery store and later became a grocery manager. He gave his job up to attend UNC-W. After a year of school Jon joined the army. However, before he left for Germany he married a Wilmington native. After he found an apartment in Germany his wife joined him.

Together, they spent two years there. Jon served as a legal clerk there and when he and his wife returned to Wilmington he decided to major in law.

In addition to working as a grocery manager he served as a Congressional Staff Intern last year. Also he has campaigned for several successful local and state officials.

At the present Jon is preparing to take the LSAT exam October 13. "I hope to go to law school, but if I don't make it I'll probably go into Business Administration." Jon also expressed his reasons for going into law. "While I was in the army I saw a lot of my friends burned for nothing and I wanted to help." Concerning his position as SGA President Jon concluded, "I hope that because I'm older and more settled that it will help me do a better and more successful job."

Senate Investigates Parking Situation and WLOZ Radio Station

By Helen Hazelton

The Student Legislature was called to order at 7 p.m. last Thursday night by Vice-president Jon Faill.

Senator Johnny Ward's investigation into the parking situation on campus sparked heated controversy among the senators. After conferring with Chief Long of the campus security office, Ward reported back to the legislature with facts and figures concerning monies collected from parking violations. Ward reported that Long did not know what the money was used for.

Senator Steve Smidt reported to the Senate concerning his investigation in the university radio station, WLOZ. Smidt urged the legislature to appropriate the money to "get WLOZ back on its feet." Senator Charles Parsons questioned Smidt and WLOZ manager John Evans concerning financial matters at WLOZ, and requested that Smidt continue his investigation. On January 19, 1980, WLOZ must make a decision to either remain at its present 10 watts or increase its facility to 100 or more watts.

In new business, the Program Board was appropriated $442 to cover several expenses, from last year. The Fishing Club was allotted $60. The Senate then voted not to appropriate $4000 to the Program Board for a Seaside Jam tentatively scheduled for spring.

Approximately $5000 was removed from the executive fund; this motion was made by Scott Bragg. Bragg reported that the money would be removed from the Executive Account and "placed back into general account for re-allocation purposes". This money was originally allocated to pay the salary of an administrative assistant. However, the position has been downgraded and placed under the jurisdiction of the Office of Student Affairs.

Todd Fennel reported that the SGA constitution will be rewritten; the constitution will be available for presentation to the Senate before Christmas and should be ready for approval in January.

Treasurer Sharon Starnes resigned as treasurer of the SGA effective October 15, citing reasons "beyond her control." Jessie Sanders will replace her as treasurer.

The Senate adjourned at 8:30 p.m. The next meeting is scheduled for Thursday, October 12 at 7 p.m. in C218. All interested students are urged to attend.

"I know that many of our players have been looking forward to this trip all season," UNCW's Lane says. "Since we do normally have quite a few people from Maryland on our team, we always try to play there every year or two.

Student Speaks Out Against Parking Situation

A problem which has been discussed many times but has never been solved is that of the parking situation on the UNCW campus. Scarcely a week passes by without at least one reference to the absurdity of the parking fee or the impossibility of finding a space in which to park your vehicle. The issues concerning parking are not quarantined to the UNCW as previous articles from the Seahawk newspaper should lead one to believe. These same issues plague most campuses across the United States. I would like to present suggestions which would greatly alleviate the grief experienced by the hundreds of students who purchase permits for their cars. The most significant of these proposals enlightens us to where the blame for these problems should be cast.

The most popular complaint voiced is the price of the parking fee. Reviewing the accusation on the steepness of the parking fee, one student, Robert Douglas, is quoted to have written, "For twenty-five dollars I'd expect to pull up to the front door and have someone park for me." Now may I ask, who does this person think he is? Douglas' type of attitude depicts a warped sense of perspective to the realistic value of not only twenty-five dollars but also his own individual worth. Twenty-five dollars, from a more informed point of view is a relatively cheap parking fee. If a student is to purchase a parking decal at other campuses such as UNC-Chapel Hill, NC State, Maryland State, Virginia State, UNC-Greensboro, UNC-Charlotte or Duke University, the student should expect to pay $65-$108 parking fee each semester! As for ECU or A&T, unique parking restrictions exist such as no parking for freshmen and isolated off-campus parking for everyone other than faculty and staff personnel. Please do not demean UNCW by saying that we can not be compared to larger universities. The most likely place to find a parking fee of twenty-five dollars or less is at a community college or a technical institute. Of the four-year colleges that I have researched, UNCW has by far the most conservative parking fee.

The conservative parking fee causes one to question how is it possible to police, maintain and construct parking lots on campus? The cost of administering and enforcing the policies of transportation on campus are greater than one might think. We are lucky to even have new parking lots under construction. Most of the other campuses, for real estate purposes, have halted production of new parking spaces. Unlike other state campuses, UNCW has not reached this peak. Dissatisfied students feel the University is moving too slowly and that expansion must be accelerated. One must remember that only two years ago the parking fee was twelve dollars.

That money previously collected has not been enough to compensate the loans acquired to fund the parking lots we have in use today. I believe in due course that UNCW will, as it has for the past years, continue to grow and expand at a rate proportional to student enrollment.

Another grievance heard frequently is that there are not enough parking spaces. Well, statistically the complaint is legitimate. There are 2,248 student parking spaces for the approximately 2,860 students that registered their vehicles. Good reasoning by Dr. Malloy states that "not every one of the students are driving at the same time." On my calculator this ratio works out to be 1.27 registered vehicles for each allotted student parking space. Another influential consideration is that 400 of these registered vehicles do not even attend day school. Also, at almost any given time, Campus Police Chief, Charles Long, claims he can confirm sixty percent of the parking spaces on campus not in use. Nevertheless, there is a solution to this unyielding complaint of insufficient spaces. Since we are a growing college able to compete with our larger sister campuses, why don't we start adopting some of their regulations. Freshmen could be denied on-campus driving privileges. As I hear a cry in the background, I might add that this is not an unethical suggestion. This restriction is a fact of life for the majority of freshmen entering four-year programs at any institution of higher learning. However, should restrictions on freshmen permits be unthinkable, I offer a more merciful solution. Dorm students could receive different-colored parking decals, thereby enabling them to park at the dorms, but not in the other campus parking lots. This plan would give valuable spaces to off-campus students.

As an ex-dorm student of UNCW, I existed without a car, walking the quarter of a mile to the classrooms, for a year with no noticeable health hazards or psychological effects. To help soothe the inconvenience of restricted parking, I believe that the dorm students should not have to pay the same amount that the off-campus students pay for their parking permits. Does this appear to be a reasonable solution? I carried this possibility to the traffic office only to find out that only a few years ago the dorm students were given this opportunity. These students were not only offered a half price decal but they also were to receive parking privileges in lot K next to the gym. The result was that none of the students cared to do what they could to help alleviate parking congestion. I suppose this reflects back on the amount of blame that should be cast for our present dilemma. Maybe the correct thing to do is not give the students the ability to choose.

As for faculty and staff parking, the observation that a few of these reserved spaces are unused is not a reason to think the spaces are unnecessary. There are 561 faculty and staff members, not including cafeteria personnel, and only 440 parking spaces have been reserved for them. Of the 561 employees of the University of North Carolina at Wilmington, only one, Mr. May, the dorm supervisor, has an on-campus residency. The rest of the employees must drive a car or ride a bike or a bus. The only real problem concerning faculty and staff parking is the total unjustness of requiring the employees to pay for the privilege of parking where they work. This is definitely a problem that must be corrected.

The final lament I wish to tackle is the misconception that our parking lots are inconvenient, unorganized and poorly planned. Conversely, I quite justly commend the engineer who designed our parking lots as they are. Each lot is built with easy access to more than one classroom building with the exception of lot K next to the gym. Even this lot offers access to more than one area. The tennis courts, athletic field and Trask Coliseum are all within easy reach.

The blueprint of the UNCW parking lots seem to arrange the buildings to the center of an imaginary circle, with the parking lots to the perimeter of this circle. In this way, not one of the buildings are much

Fail to Attend Board of Trustees Meeting, Students Offer Help

For the second week in a row, the student legislature was very productive. Lisa Cook, the Charter Committee Chairperson, has established new chartering regulations for clubs and organizations on campus. These regulations will be available in the SGA office and will be distributed to all clubs and organizations in the mailboxes in the pub. Several committees gave status reports on the work that they are doing. A lot of work is underway and the results look very promising. Earlier this week, work was started on the workshop that I had talked about last week.

I was invited by Vice-Chancellor Malloy to attend the Board of Trustees meeting held yesterday. I will make a full report of what happened in the next issue of the Seahawk. I was pleasantly surprised at something that happened at the last SGA meeting. Several students, not in student government, offered to help in some of the campus-wide projects we are working on. It is exactly this type of involve-

Shah's Son Enrolls in American College

WILLIAMSTOWN, MA (CPS)--One of the 450 freshman enrolling last week at Williams College, a small liberal arts school here, was someone who would have excited much protest just a year ago. He was Prince Reza Pahlavi, 18-year-old son of the exiled Shah of Iran. According to Ray Boyer, Williams' public information director, "The reception by the students has gone very smoothly."

Things haven't gone as smoothly for other Iranians who want to study in the United States this fall. In 1978-79, some 60,000 Iranians formed the largest single block of foreigners studying on American campuses. They were also the most visible segment of the foreign student community, frequently disrupting campus life with sometimes-violent protests against the shah's regime.

Though figures are still being gathered by the Institute for International Education, which takes an annual census of foreign students here, it appears there will be far fewer Iranian students here for the 79-80 academic year.

The decline in numbers appears to be due more to American policy than to any policy of the Ayatollah Khomeini, who helped overthrow the father of the Williams College freshman last March.

After a January 2nd riot at the Beverly Hills, Ca., home of the shah's sister, the U.S.

Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) began a crackdown on foreign students, with a special eye on Iranian students. At the request of then-Attorney General Griffin Bell, the INS threatened to deport any foreign students who broke U.S. laws, and began a check on the status of the students. According to some reports, nearly a third of the students were "out of status," and thus eligible to be deported.

In August, the INS extended the deportation deadline to June 1, 1980. At the State Department's request, though, some rules were relaxed. INS commissioner Leonel J. Castillo says the INS will not force Iranians to return to an "unfavorable political climate."

It is the American embassy in Teheran that is holding up most Iranians who want to enroll in the U.S. this fall. Javad Kakhbaz, a reporter for the Iran Times, told College Press Service that there are long lines of prospective students waiting for entry visas at the embassy.

Students who went home for summer break with still-valid visas may be luckier. They have only one wait: for a flight to the United States. Kakhbaz says such flights are scarce.

Khomeini's regime originally tried to discourage Iranians from re-enrolling at American colleges and universities, but has found that Iranian programs were not large or sophisticated enough to handle the new demand. The regime has since decided to allow some students to study in the U.S.

Even if the Iranians do return to the U.S. in force, their days as a militant force seem to be over. Many chapters--as well as the Washington, D.C. headquarters--of the Iranian Student Association, which directed much of last year's anti-shah activities, have closed.

Consequently campus security around the shah's son is relatively loose. Boyer said there were special security precautions to protect the prince, whose father is now wanted dead or alive in Iran, but he declined to discuss them for obvious reasons.

Williams is used to the children of famous figures. Former Vice President Spiro Agnew's daughter Kim was a Williams student. Boyer says the college is just as comfortable having the prince as a student.

Muppets Mopping Up Money

By Fuller Royal

If Walt Disney were still alive, he would undoubtedly have filmed "The Muppet Movie". But as it turns out, Jim Henson, the '70s Walt Disney did, and he has done a splendid job. "The Muppet Movie" is a great way to top off the decade in the field of "G" rated family films. Jim Henson and his furry foam and cloth creations have achieved the near impossible in film, believable fantasy. The audience actually finds itself believing that Kermit the Frog is carrying on an intelligent conversation with Bob Hope or Steve Martin. (Martin's role as a waiter is very similar to the Oscar-nominated short he wrote and starred in.)

The film opens with a spectacular shot of clouds, which open up to reveal a swamp-bayou type setting. The camera glides down and dissolves into a crane shot. At this point we hear Kermit singing. The camera moves in, revealing the green frog sitting on a log playing his banjo, surrounded by water.

It is here that a lost Hollywood scout, Dom Deluise meets Kermit and tells him of an audition for lead frog in a movie. Kermit decides to leave the swamp and journey to Hollywood.

On his way, Kermit meets up with Fozzie Bear, in a nightclub where the bear is performing badly. Kermit convinces Fozzie to make the trek with him to Hollywood. Aside from Fozzie, Kermit meets up with Miss Piggy (for the film's love interest), the Great Gonzo, and most of the others from "The Muppet Show."

Conflict is supplied by Charles Durning and Austin Pendleton who want Kermit to be their "spokesfrog" for Durning's chain of frog leg restaurants, (which have, by the way, large green frog legs out front of each store, similar to McDonald's Golden Arches).

During their 3000 mile journey west, there are several songs, which make the soundtrack well worth purchasing. Also, they encounter a dozen or more stars (not playing themselves, which adds even more to the believability of the story). Among the notables in "The Muppet Movie" are Milton Berle, Big Bird, Richard Pryor, Carol Kane, Orson Wells, Cloris Leachman, Telly Savalas, Elliott Gould, Madelyn Kahn and the farewell appearance of Edgar Bergen and Charlie McCarthy. Jim Henson fondly dedicated the movie to Edgar Bergen.

The climax of the film is a shootout in an old deserted western town. The scene is straight out of Gary Cooper's film, "High Noon," except it uses a frog, and a professional "hitman" for frogs, complete with an assortment of frog gigs.

All aspects of the film are way above average, especially in the special effects department. To watch Kermit riding a bicycle makes you just sit and wonder. Among other effects that stand out are Kermit swimming, Gonzo flying and Fozzie driving his Studebaker.

The film is not just for children. All ages will enjoy it. It's rated "G".

Burt Reynolds

Starts Over

By Paula Suttie

"Starting Over" has been acclaimed as being "loosely" based on Dan Wakefield's novel. Without being overly explicit—the story centers around a recently divorced man, played by Burt Reynolds, his wife, Candice Bergen, and his girlfriend Jill Clayburgh. We are shown through some very tender, honest displays of emotions what goes on when a couple breaks up, and each of them "starts over".

In all of the interviews I have seen and read on Burt Reynolds, he emphatically states that he wants to be taken seriously as an actor—instead he is associated with the slapstick (for lack of a better adjective!) humor he elicits in movies like "Smokey and the Bandit" and "The End". I don't intend to give you the impression that I didn't like these movies—on the contrary. Both were entertaining, but to me, quite moderate. They surely confirmed the impression people have of Burt Reynolds as being just another "hunk of man!", who basically depends on his looks to carry him through the characters he has portrayed in the past. Possibly his association with Sally Field has altered his image, but if "Starting Over" is an example of what we can expect from Reynolds in the future, I'm all for it. (The furrows on his forehead just add to his appeal!) I think men and women alike will empathize with "Phil Potter". Reynolds' portrayal of a distraught divorcee is honest, sensitive and quite non-egotistical.

Most everyone knows the name Candice Bergen. This beautiful (to say the least) woman portrays Reynolds' estranged wife who decides she wants him to leave so she can—what else?—"find herself" and "do her own thing!" To add to the dilemma gone to bed with Burt Reynolds' boss which causes him to lose his job. "Jessica" does a remarkable job of being gorgeously alluring, and an excellent job of singing like Carol Channing with laryngitis!

Jill Clayburgh is once again an "unmarried woman", but this time she handles the situation quite differently. As a nursery school teacher, "Marilyn" is basically a forthright individual, whose barriers are solid—until "Phil Potter" steps in!

Even if you've never experienced a divorce, I'm almost certain you've experienced the breakup of a relationship and what the feelings that accompany "starting over" are. I

Student Triumphs in Local Tournament

Backgammon, that popular board-and-dice game, can be both entertaining and profitable, according to UNCW senior Gary Beggs. Beggs combined "skill and luck" to snag the five hundred dollars first-prize money in the Riverfest Backgammon Tournament held October 6-7 at the Wilmington Hilton.

The competition, sponsored by the Basket Case, consisted of two divisions: Beginners and the Open. Beggs estimated that approximately "thirty or forty were entered . . . and I really didn't expect to win."

Beggs has been playing backgammon for 18 months. Explaining that the competition "was win-or-lose; you didn't get a second chance," Beggs expressed surprise at his victory. He defeated seven opponents to capture first place, two of whom were ranked in the top ten of backgammon players in the nation.

Josh and Marie Reynolds of Virginia were the projected winners of the Riverfest event. "They were making plans for a victory party after the game," remarked Beggs. "Nobody thought I was going to win." Beggs first defeated Mr. Reynolds in the semi-finals and then went on to triumph over Marie Reynolds in the finals. "I got an early lead in the finals and held onto it," Beggs recalled. "The game took about ninety minutes and even then it was pretty close--the final score was 15-13."

In addition to the prize money, Beggs is also the recipient of an original print by artist Ron Williams. What he did not receive is recognition from the local media, a fact which he shrugs off. "Like I said, it was an upset victory--nobody expected me to come out of nowhere and win like that."

Beggs has definite plans for his winnings. "I'm throwing a party, first of all," he commented. "And then I'll probably pay off a debt to my father . . ." When asked if he plans to enter other tournaments, Beggs replied, "Only if they're local events. I'm not going out of my way to find one."

Anthony Quinn: An Insightful Artist

By Samir Hachem, The Oracle University of Southern Florida
When Anthony Quinn enters a room a paradoxical mixture of animalistic magnetism and refined charm accompany him. Physically, he's a big man, a flawless example of a lively proletarian. He's also a very insightful artist, an actor whose primary method is apparently no method at all.

Quinn attended the Greater Miami International Film Festival to promote the premiere of his new film "Children of Sanchez." He spoke about his role as Sanchez, acting in general, and the political and sociological concerns in art.

The 61-year-old actor is both witty and energetic. Facial gestures instantly switch back and forth from a grin to a serious frown.

He said he met the man he plays in the movie four years ago. "He's 10 years older than me and five inches shorter," Quinn explained. "He didn't know me as an actor; he doesn't go to movies very much. He said to me, 'Do me a favor, dye your hair,'" the gray-haired actor added, laughing.

The dependency on the family unit and its deterioration have been recurring scenes in Quinn's recent pictures. In the Italian-made "The Inheritance," Quinn portrays the father of two disowned sons. The love-hate relationship that binds them is the exact one that joins Jesus Sanchez and his daughter, Consuelo, in the new film. A very similar one is developing between the millionaire Tomassini and his only son in "The Greek Tycoon."

After working for 38 years and making more than 170 films, Quinn is still active and ambitious. He has recently made films in Iran, Greece, Italy and Mexico.

"You try to do something you haven't done before--that's why I make pictures all over the world," Quinn said.

Does he have a method or a pattern? He smiles and quotes his friend Picasso, who once said, "The worst thing an artist can do is copy himself. He can copy others, but never himself."

Newcomer Lupita Ferre plays Quinn's daughter, Consuelo. "Working with him, I grew to admire him," the young actress said of Quinn. "He's so disciplined, always on time, a very emotional actor. I felt tremendous power (which) made it easier to react. Quinn explained that in order to ensure the continuous love-hate relationship between him as the father and Ferre as the daughter, he was "very mean to her during the 12 weeks of production. I made life miserable for her."

The Mexican-born actor said he "had a lot to do with turning around stereotyping into something else." He explained that he was the first Indian in a western who dared to talk back to the likes of John Wayne and Gary Cooper.

"The greatest sin we've made is intolerance on racial, political, and religious levels. This is my banner," Quinn stated.

Anthony Quinn: the perfect example of a perpetual case of inspired professionalism.

SEAHAWK SPORTS

Soccer Team Wins First Annual Port City Classic Powell Wins M.V.P.

WILMINGTON The championship trophy of the first UNC Wilmington Port City Classic remained in Wilmington, as Coach Calvin Lane and his Seahawk soccer team triumphed.

This weekend, however, Lane and his newly crowned Port City champs leave their tournament baggage behind as they travel to the Baltimore area for contests with two of the Mid Atlantic Region's most highly regarded clubs.

UNCW visits the University of Maryland Baltimore County on Saturday Oct. 13, then takes on Baltimore University on Sunday Oct. 14.

For many of the Seahawk players, the trip represents a homecoming, as not fewer than eight of the UNCW team members are originally from the Baltimore-Washington, D.C. area.

"I know that many of our players have been looking to this trip all season," UNCW's Lane says. "Since we do normally have quite a few people from Maryland on our team, we always try to play there every year or two."

"We certainly can't make this a fun visit only, though.

Both UMBC and Baltimore have fine teams and we want to keep the momentum that we gained by winning our tournament last week."

Three of Lane's "Maryland Mafia," as the coach fondly calls them, will be carrying Port City all-tournament honors back home with them. Forward Chi Chi Mercado, midfielder Matt Wight and sweeper John Miller all were selected to the first all-tourney squad, along with teammates Doug Powell and Ed Donahue.

Powell, a native of Wilmington, was chosen the Most Valuable Player by the participating coaches, while Donahue scored the winning goal in UNCW's exciting 1-0 overtime victory against UNC-Charlotte in the tournament finals.

Other Seahawks who will be playing before the home folks this weekend include senior Nick Stephanos, juniors Doug Allman and Mike Ruth, and freshmen Dave Karlson and Paul Felscher.

Following the Maryland trip, UNCW, now 5-3-1 on the year, and ranked 13th in last week's South Region poll, returns home to host The Citadel on October 17.

UNCW captured its fourth straight tournament crown in the past three years and second of the 1979 season by defeating N.C. Wesleyan, 6-0, and UNC-Charlotte, 1-0 in overtime. The Seahawks' win over the 49ers was the second of the year against UNCC in a tournament championship. UNCW had won the Charlotte Four Points Tournament over the host team, 2-1, in September.

Jacksonville University took third place in the tournament, defeating Wesleyan, 6-0, in the consolation game. The Dolphins, who had come within one goal of nationally top-ranked Alabama A&M earlier this season, were tied by UNCC in the semi-finals, then lost the shootout competition, two goals to one.

Leading scorers in the tournament were UNCW's Mercado, who collected three goals and one assist in the 6-0 win over Wesleyan, and Jacksonville's David Douglas, who also scored three times versus Wesleyan.

In addition to the five Seahawk players named above, the all-tournament team included Douglas and Rick Medlock of JU; Brian Pier, Todd Pickering and David Higgins of UNCC, and Ray Essa of Wesleyan.

Baldwin Gains 112 Yards as Seahawks Win

By Tom Corry

Using a strong running game that totaled 179 yards on the ground, the Seahawks defeated a weaker UNC-Greensboro team this week. The Hawks totaled 361 yards for the game. We still have too many penalties, moaned Coach Corry.

"We have got to cut down on our crying and moaning to the officials on the field. If the players would keep their mouths shut and play ball, we would be better off. The officials will not change the call. All we do is ask for and get more trouble when we complain to them. Maybe next week will be better. Through five games we are averaging about 155 yards in penalties."

Bubba Baldwin was having a poor year until on October 6, he came to play against a tough UNC-Greensboro team. The rangy, 190-pound fullback left no doubt he should be considered one of the top backs in the league.

The Seahawks' dismal start this year has included beatings by UNC-Chapel Hill, Gallaudet, and New River Marines, all of which they should have won. The much talked-about Baldwin had been held to little or nothing to brag about; what about this Baldwin, described by many as the bull of the Seahawk running game, was he not the one who was going to run and move with almost no effort, as a shoadow flits and drifts and darts. Could the Seahawks have anyone that good? UNC-Greensboro didn't think so, but as the fans and players found out during the game, Baldwin was there to prove something and prove it he did. It did not take him long to get going Saturday night. Before the game was over, he eased through the right side of the line, knifed through the middle, and bounced through the left side for more yardage than any back this year. In all Baldwin carried the ball 12 times for 112 yards.

Paul Wood was another Seahawk off to a poor start, but October 6 was the turning point of his season. His performance was so overwhelming that those present could not even believe it was happening. Wood was a composite moving picture of the great wide receivers you see in the NFL. This night was his night, he had that something that sets you in a class apart. . . . He showed the knack of shortening or lengthening his stride instantaneously; he showed speed to outprint the fastest defensive back, the guile to side-step the adroitest tackler,

Swim Team Opens Second Season November 18

The opening dual meet of the season is more than a month away, but the UNCW swim teams—men's and women's alike—are well into the preseason practice schedule.

The Seahawks are entering only their second season of intercollegiate competition after a very successful inaugural effort last year. Swimming coach Dave Allen feels, however, that the upcoming season could be even more productive, especially for the Seahawks men.

"We have a better, stronger team," Allen says, "and we are certainly capable of putting together a better record despite a tougher schedule."

"Of course, injuries and illness can creep up on you and quickly put a halt to your plans, but we're still very optimistic."

The UNCW men turned in a fine 9-2 dual meet mark in 1978-79 and took part in the prestigious Eastern Seaboard Championships at Harvard University. This year's schedule has the 'Hawks meeting East Carolina, Furman and Old Dominion in dual competition, in addition to visiting the Atlantic Coast Relays at N.C. State (season opener, Nov. 11) and the Eastern Intercollegiate ates at Morgantown, W. Va. The Lady Seahawks are once again troubled by a lack of numbers, with only nine women currently on the roster.

"We don't have many, but the people we have are fine swimmers," Allen says. "As was the case last year, we'll do very well in all the events we enter—we just don't have enough people to enter every event."

Five UNCW women qualified for the AIAW Division II national championships last year and four of them are back—Ellen Cushman, Denise Squires, Valerie Newlin and Karen Young. They will again comprise the nucleus of the 79-80 squad.

The Lady 'Hawks open on Nov. 18 at the College of Charleston.

Fishing Club to Participate in Tournament This Weekend

The UNCW Fishing Club, under the watchful guidance of Dr. John Scalf, will participate this weekend in the sixth annual Coastal Carolina Invitational Tournament at Myrtle Beach.

Representing the Seahawks, in addition to Dr. Scalf who will also take part as a team member, are Dennen Fox, Frank Gombatz, Gary Landen and Tony Snyder.

"Actually, the competition is going to be just between Coastal Carolina and us," Scalf explains. "We've won their tournament two straight years and I think they just want to get even."

"They weren't able to hold a regular tournament in the spring as they had for the past five years, so this will also keep the annual aspect of the invitational intact. I understand that they plan on having another tournament with more teams involved next spring."

UNCW has won the Coastal Carolina affair three of the four times it has entered, finishing second the other the ability to jump for and receive the ball even when it seemed impossible. Those who saw Wood on this night will remember and hope to see that kind of action again and again. On the night Wood had 5 receptions for 151 yards and a touchdown. Other stars for the Seahawks on this near-perfect night for football were Steve Underwood with 63 yards on 7 carries, Guy Stefanski who guided the Seahawk attack most of the night. Let us not forget the rugged offensive line, Pat Atkins-Dennis Ray-Jimmy Keefe-Jason Millhouse-Buzz Owens-David Hooks, for they are the ones who make the holes, hold the lines and whatever is asked of them to help provide victory for the Seahawks.

Ken Watson came to life Saturday and led a near-perfect defensive unit as the Seahawks posted their first shut-out of the year. Watson seemed to be all over the field—when the ball was in the air, he was there knocking it down; when a runner was trying to get yardage, Watson was in his way. Coach Corry said that if all the players would play as hard every game as Watson did Saturday, they would have no problem winning.

Past competing schools have included Yale University and others from as far away as Ontario.

The SGA is providing transportation expenses for the team and Coastal Beverage Company of Wilmington, distributors of Miller High Life, is outfitting the group in shirts and hats.

Tim Owens was another man responsible for the victory. Playing at linebacker, he is leading the team in tackles. The coaching staff is happy with his performance and hope others will take note and pick up some life. Owens seems to be a big key in the defense this year, and the Hawks would be in trouble if they lost him.

Jesse Hays, Donald Borden, and Bill Morris are also the mainstay of a strong defensive unit that has been hurt by injuries, and a lot of players having to play hurt. Another Seahawk starting to show a lot of promise is Don Carlton. Carlton, a third string quarterback, has moved to the defense and is doing an outstanding job.

Coach Corry said that if the Hawks can stay healthy for the rest of the year, they could still make the playoffs. "Our attitude has to change if we are going to make it, though," states Corry. "Too many players are still out there for what they can get out of it as an individual and don't care about a team. If we can overcome this problem, we will really be tough. All the coaches feel this is the most important thing left to work on."

outfitting the group in shirts and hats.

"The support of the SGA and Coastal Beverage is, of course, greatly appreciated," Scalf says. "I just hope we can represent UNCW well and win the competition again this time."

Here's the Answer: Buffett, Buzz-Cocks, Aykroyd and Belushi

By BARBARA LEWIS
Pop Scene Answerperson

JIMMY BUFFETT

Q: I'm a big fan of Jimmy Buffett, and would like to know something about his early work. Did he have an album out before "White Sport Coat and a Pink Crustacean"? Also, where is he from and where does he live? Samantha Brink, Milton, Fla.

A: Jimmy Buffett, whose latest MCA album is "Volcano," had two LPs out before "Sportcoat," his first for ABC. His first album, released on the Barnaby label in 1968, was "Down to Earth," and went absolutely nowhere. Neither did his second for the label. With subsequent hits like "Margaritaville" and "Come Monday," Buffett's fortunes have improved considerably.

A native of Mobile, Ala., Buffett now lives in the Caribbean, where he enjoys cruising on his private yacht.

BUZZCOCKS

Q: As a devotee of British new wave, I really like the Buzzcocks, one of the first "punk" bands. Will they ever get an American label? They're so popular in England that I find it hard to believe their records aren't released here. Also, have you any idea how I can get a copy of their rare first LP, "Spiral Scratch"?—

Theo Jordan, Los Angeles, Calif.

A: Through a special distribution deal, A&M Records will be releasing Buzzcock's records in North America very shortly. As for "Spiral Scratch," it was recently re-released in England, and is currently climbing the British charts. You should be able to find it in any well-stocked import record shop.

The Buzzcocks recently played their first American tour, and were especially well-received in New York City.

M

Q: I think "Pop Muzik" by M is a great tune. Who are the members of the band, and will they be coming out with an album soon?—Stevie Moore, Austin, Texas.

A: Actually, M consists of one person—a dapper Englishman named Robin Scott. An international hit, "Pop Muzik" is now in the American top-30, too. Expect an LP from M on the Sire label soon.

DAN AYKROYD AND JOHN BELUSHI

Q: I heard a rumor that Dan Aykroyd and John Belushi won't be rejoining the cast of NBC's "Saturday Night Live" this season. True or false?—Sibby Barnett, Axis, Ala.

A: True. The fifth season of "Saturday Night Live" will be sans Aykroyd and Belushi who want to concentrate on other projects. Both will appear in Stephen Spielberg's "1941," which will open during the Christmas season, and they are currently filming "The Blues Brothers Movie" in Chicago.

Jimmy Buffett

Their split from NBC was reportedly amicable. Although they have no current plans to do TV specials, there is a possibility they will be involved in TV in the future.

"THE MARTIAN CHRONICLES"

Q: When will the TV version of Ray Bradbury's "The Martian Chronicles" be aired? It was a great book, and I'm anxious to see how well it's been adapted to television. Who will be appearing in it?—R.T. Providence, R.I.

A: Rock Hudson and Roddy McDowell will star in the six-hour adaptation of Ray Bradbury's classic story of martian colonization. The TV adaptation was capably handled by science fiction writer Richard Matheson. No air date has yet been set by NBC. Watch your local listings this season.

'David Werner' Features Ian Hunter and Ronson

By Lee Moore
Pop Scene Columnist
DAVID WERNER

Have the times caught up with David Werner? It would seem so, although Werner says he chooses not to think of his career in those terms.

His current Epic album, "David Werner," features guest shots from Mick Ronson and Ian Hunter, and is chock-full of tight, shiny, well-crafted rock and roll that is, above all else, totally contemporary. The problem? Werner was playing the same sort of music five years ago, and had little success.

The Pittsburgh-born guitarist and songwriter was signed to RCA at the tender age of 19, and found himself recording his first LP, "Whiz Kid," at 20. That album, released in 1974, and "Imagination Quota," which came out the following year, fell, for the most part, on deaf ears. And, Werner dropped out of sight for nearly five years.

What did he do during that time?

"Nothing much," Werner says. "After those two albums for RCA, I just took time off and relaxed. I wasn't interested in drumming up another record deal right away. I traveled and hung out a lot. I felt great."

Living off the money he had received from the two LPs, and with a bit of help from his family, Werner had little thought of returning to the music business. A chance call from Mark Doyle, an early musical ally, got him thinking about a comeback.

Werner and Doyle recorded some demos on a four-track machine, and the one-time whiz kid found himself back in the studio for the first time in four years when Epic decided they liked the demos and gave him a new record deal.

He may be back in the business, but Werner remains a true iconoclast, maintaining that he's not interested in watching the record charts and hoping for commercial success.

"I never expect success," he says. "I'm either successful or not when I come out of the studio with an album. My measure of success is how well the artist fulfilled the goals he had when he went into the studio."

THE EAGLES

The first Eagles LP in nearly three years, "The Long Run," should be in your local record stores by now. The first single from the album, "Heartache Tonight," was shipped last week.

"Long Run" consists of 10 new songs penned by the band, including three collaborative efforts with J.D. Souther. "Heartache Tonight" was written by Eagles Don Henley and Glen Frey, with long-time Juddies Souther and Bob Se-ger. The Monstertones, featuring Jimmy Buffett, sing background vocals on another tune, "The Greeks Don't Want No Freaks."

On September 17, the Eagles launched a tour of Japan, beginning with four concerts at Tokyo's famed Budokan, the site of recent live albums by Bob Dylan and Cheap Trick. The U.S. portion of the tour begins in Providence.

The album was produced by Bill Szymczyk who has been associated with the group since their 1973 "On the Border" LP. Tim Schmidt, formerly of Poco, makes his debut on the new one.

On September 17, The Eagles launched a tour of Japan, beginning with four concerts at Tokyo's famed Budokan, the site of recent live albums by Bob Dylan and Cheap Trick. The U.S. portion of the tour begins in Providence, R.I., on October 8.

Their previous album, "Hotel California," sold over 12 million copies, world-wide. Will "The Long Run" be able to top-or equal-those figures? The record industry is looking to the new Eagles album, as well as new releases by Fleetwood Mac, Led Zeppelin and other super-groups, to turn the current slump to a gold and platinum surge. Record executives are going to be watching the charts and sales figures closely in the next months.

Records: "The Long Run" Lacks Quality

When the Eagles began their careers in 1972, they were labeled an "outlaw" band. Their debut album titled simply Eagles was primarily an acoustic album. The lineup consisted of Glenn Frey (guitar, vocals), Don Henley (drums, vocals), Bernie Le-don (guitar, banjo, vocals), and Randy Meisner (bass, vocals) and it remained that way until the third album On the Border, when guitarist Don Felder was added. With the addition of Felder, the band's sound began to slowly evolve from country-rock to straight rock 'n roll. Bernie Leadon's departure in early 1976 signaled a further retreat from a country sound, especially when rock guitarist Joe Walsh (James Gang) was tabbed as his replacement. December of 1976 saw the arrival of Hotel California, an album filled with lots of good guitar and familiar Eagle harmonies. Since then, bass player Randy Meisner left and was replaced by Timothy B. Schmit, formerly of Poco. This change gave the Eagles a solid songwriter and superior bass player more than before. With this brief recap, we can now tune in as our heroes release a new album.

The new endeavor is entitled The Long Run and it's the first new album they've released since December 1976 when Hotel California came out. The Eagles now consist of Frey, Henley, Felder, Walsh and Schmit who all write songs and contribute vocals. All of the ten songs were co-authored and some of those with non-members John David Souther, Bob Seger and Barry De Vorzon. Bill Szymczyk produced The Long Run, but he's done better work than this, as vocals are muddy and guitars are sometimes buried. However, better production isn't the only thing wrong with this album.

The first side commences with "The Long Run", a song whose first two lines state "I used to hurry a lot/I used to worry a lot." They obviously hurried through this song and didn't worry about it enough as the lyrics strain to rhyme and are awkward as a result. It has a catchy melody, but is far from outstanding. Tim Schmit sings the lead on "I Can't Tell You Why," a song he co-wrote with Henley and Frey that showcases a boring Glenn Frey solo. This tune is a slow, dull love song that may have been a good song until Henley and Frey tampered with it. At any rate, Schmit composed much better material during his tenure with Poco than he exhibits here. "In the City" is a good rock song with plenty of Joe Walsh's slide work and wails. It is also the best song on the album and the sole Walsh contribution. This song, which was in the movie "The Warriors", indicates that there needs to be more Walsh compositions on Eagle albums. His songs are as good, if not better, than anything else they're doing.

It's evident that he has the material. Otherwise, he probably wouldn't do the solo albums he does. "The Disco Strangler" is next and is a bad song complete with obnoxious guitar which may be the point, but why give something as loathsome as disco my attention? "King of Hollywood" rounds out the side and it contains a discoish beat. There are guitar solos by Frey, Felder and Walsh, in that order, that prove to be unimaginative. Again there is the problem with bad lyrics.

Side two opens with the single "Heartache Tonight", a song that begins like a forgotten Grand Funk number. Although Walsh plays some nice slide, this song should, like the

Hospitals Aren't Fun

According to Seahawk Writer

Campus Chuckles

by Julie Russ

Hospitals really aren't very funny, folks, no matter what Marcus Welby would have us believe. I mean, when was the last time you saw a giggling intern? And who among us snickers at the sight of a bedpan? (The makers of Ex-Lax, that's who!)

So when yours truly signed up for a stay in yon hallowed halls of healing, it was not exactly with Romper Room in mind. Me. I was prepared for the worst. And let me tell you (hold still, dammit, while I sob on your shoulder) I got it.

First, there was the food. My stomach took one look at stir-fried oatmeal and threw up the sponge. Not to worry, though, family and friends made life a deep-fried delight with offerings from Colonel Sanders and Co. I burped barbecued ribs for three weeks!

Then there were the shots. Craven coward that I am, I tried everything to avoid those nasty little needles (as it is, I'll never do needlepoint again). I had nightmares in which I was being chased by a giant nurse screaming, "What's a little agony now and then?" But why should I complain-for while I was charging visitors 25 cents apiece to look at the World's Only Living Pincushion.

And finally, after having a few of those doctor-to-victim chats and blindly signing everything they shoved in front of me... then came the fun part.

Surgery. Under the knife. Slice time. Scalpel city. Internal exploration. Now I lay me down to sleep... etc.

Oh, I was calm all right. I kept my chin up all the way into the operating room (my fists, too, but I was outnumbered). Once on the table, however, I showed my true colors. Right as they (a team of grinning ghouls-Jekyll and Hyde, I'm sure) were putting me under ("Six feet, maybe?" cracked Jekyll-or was it Hyde?) I made one last bid for freedom, almost breaking the surgeon's nose as I gracefully lunged off the table. The last thing I remember is his relieved voice saying, "Whew, she's gone."

But not for good! When I awoke I was bawling like a calf with colic, but alive and kicking just the same. My stitches itched and I wanted to go home (and on those grounds I sulked for three days. Oh, the staff adored me!)

And so it came to pass that on the fourth day my doctor let me leave (who am I kidding--he escorted me to the elevator and with tears in his eyes begged me to stay healthy and/or away from his hospital).

So there you have it: my tale of life in the sick lane. It's so good to be home again... now if you'll excuse me, I seem to have this twinge--well, more like a stabbing pain--in my head. I wonder if I need medical advice... are there any airhead specialists out there?

Grand Funk song, be forgotten. "Those Shoes" follows and is another bland, boring effort. Walsh and Felder employ the use of talk boxes that neither help nor hurt. They're just there. With "Teenage Jail", Frey demonstrates how to misuse a synthesizer and Don Felder delivers a less than clear solo. This one runs directly into "The Greeks Don't Want No Freaks," and Elvis Costello soundalike. "Greeks" features "God's own drunk" Jimmy Buffett on background vocals and it's a good, fun song in general. "The Sad Cafe" is the album's finale and not a moment too soon. Don Hendley sings like he just got up out of bed, although the harmonies are good, keeping with Eagle tradition. David Sanbourn delivers an uninspired sax solo to bring all this blandness to an end.

After a three year wait this album is a huge disappointment. The Eagles are an alleged supergroup. With that kind of billing, they are expected to produce good work as opposed to the lamentable mediocrity they've served up. This album is a dull, listless, lackluster affair that ought to be banned. From a band that has produced works like "Tequila Sunrise," "Best of My Love," "Witchy Woman," and the classic "Hotel California," this album serves as a slap in the face to a legion of fans. This is another prime example of talented individuals resting on their laurels when they should be trying to prove they're still a major force in the rock world following a three-year absence. The Eagles are a good band. It's a shame that The Long Run does nothing to illustrate it.

Help for Confused

Freshmen is Here

All students dread registration, freshmen most of all having no idea of what they want or what is best for them. Freshmen need not wander any longer in the academic confusion of UNCW. Help now exists to set them on a straight path towards their goals.

The General College Advising Center is in its first year of helping freshmen understand their career goals and assisting them in translating their selection of courses. The Advising Center helps make students more marketable in the job market by selecting not only proper courses but helpful electives. The Center also helps work out study problems, coping with courses and problems that relate to study/work schedules.

The program is not the usual cold-hearted advising arrangement where the adviser is a stranger. It consists of thirty-one trained faculty members working voluntarily with at least one advisor from every department. All are interested in helping students.

Dr. Margaret Parrish, one of the faculty advisors, commented that the center was to help students feel as though they are receiving attention not only as students but as people. She also stated that the time to get help for the next registration is now.

Dr. John Stokes, Office of Dean of Arts and Sciences, coordinated the program after attending a conference on academic advising and studying academic advising programs of other university campuses.

The General College Advising Center is located in the right rear portion of the library. It's open 8-5, Monday through Friday.

Don't be lost next time registration comes around. The Center is ready now.

farther than a ten-minute walk. If the students did not attempt to drive from lot to lot with the change of every class, an astronomical amount of the pre-class parking confusion would be diminished. Switching lots to save a few minutes walk causes congestion as well as dangerous hazards to the students who are riding bicycles or walking.

In conclusion, it is my opinion that the traffic administrators could help alleviate parking problems by initiating some type of on-campus vehicle reduction. Sooner or later this restriction will take effect. Students have the ability to stall this restriction by promoting some common sense habits and discontinuing the bad habits that cause increasingly serious traffic problems. I firmly believe that the same individuals heard wailing for "fairness" each week in the campus newspaper are the most probable cause for our dilemma. Only those causing the problem can cure the problem, and the administrators do not deserve the blame on this one.

In Memoriam

We the brothers of Sigma Alpha Epsilon [formerly DKT] would like to thank the administration, all the campus fraternities and clubs, and the student body as a whole for their kindness and concern for the loss of our brother and friend Chip Gunter.

Student Center to Include Food Facilities

Complying with Governor Hunt's request for belt-tightening measures to cut state expenditures, the UNCW Board of Trustee approved a request from Vice Chancellor for Business Affairs Dr. Jairy C. Hunter to petition the UNC General Administration to increase the scope of the proposed Student Center to allow for the inclusion of food service facilities instead of constructing a separate building to feed the 400 additional resident students expected in the fall of 1981.

Dr. Hunter said if approval is granted by General Administration and subsequently by the Advisory Budget Commission to increase the facility by from 6,000 to 12,000 square feet, the additional costs will be financed from a combination of existing food, housing and student center funds and food service revenue bonds with no increase in student union fees to be borne by the students.

In other action, the trustees approved a $266,900 capital improvements budget which includes $191,500 in general campus improvements, $56,400 for a sewage lift station, and $19,000 to implement certain OSHA requirements and to remove architectural barriers to the physically handicapped.

The Board also approved the recommendation of the Student Affairs Committee on the feasibility of establishing an intercollegiate football team at UNCW. Eugene Hardin, reporting for the committee, said, "After careful study and consideration of all facts presented, the committee unanimously recommends that intercollegiate football not become a part of the program of intercollegiate athletics at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington."

In making the recommendation, Hardin cited recent and potential HEW Title IX implications indicating a "dollar for dollar" funding for men's and women's athletics and immediate financial requirements totaling more than $638,316 for fielding a 50-man squad. Not included in that total is the cost of constructing a stadium facility, as the report indicated that Legion Stadium could be rented during the early years of a football program.

Two new board members, Dr. John Dees of Burgaw and Jon Faill, were introduced at the meeting. Dr. Dees was appointed by Governor James Hunt to a four-year term expiring June 30, 1983 and Faill will replace Francis X. DeLuca, ex officio member, who has resigned the Student Government Association presidency effective October 15.

Twenty-Six Who's Who Students Announced

Twenty-six students at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington have been selected for inclusion in the 1979-80 edition of WHO'S WHO AMONG STUDENTS IN AMERICAN UNIVERSITIES AND COLLEGES.

Selected on the basis of their academic achievement, service to the community, leadership in extracurricular activities and future potential, Wilmington residents chosen for the honor were Earl Sherman Braggs, Jonathan H. Faill, Jr., Diane Gilbert, Helen Hazelton, Nellie Grace Johnson, Jessie Sanders, Candice Ann Singleton, Stephen C. Wallace and Warren Wilson.

Other UNCW students selected for the publication were Franklin Edwards Colvin, Jr., of Castle Hayne, John Norman Allen of Centerville, Ohio; Doug Robert Browne and Glen Alan Downs of Greensboro; Connie Sue Butner of Kinston; Francis DeLuca, Linda Sue Gentry and Pat Monahan of Jacksonville; James C. Godwin of Matthews; Darrell L. Hope of Milton, Thomas Bedell Hunt of Salem, Virginia; Thomas G. Long of Julian, Marie S. Melvin of Elizabethtown, Mark Edward Sealf of Cary, Benjamin Garrett Thompson of Fayetteville, Donald Kenneth Watson, Jr., of Red Springs and Linda Blanche Williams of Beaufort.

President's Report

Since the last issue of the Seahawk, student government has been very busy facing many different problems. Foremost of these problems was the loss of our clerk-typist, Joyce Jackson, who moved to financial aid. We are currently in the process of hiring a replacement, but the state procedures are cumbersome and slow. Hopefully, we will have hired someone by the time you are reading this article. Another major problem was reported by the SGA treasurer, Jessie Sanders. Student government, because of an increase in levels of funding and plain old inflation, is almost broke. We have cracked down on financial abuses, which have caused some hard feelings; however, if student government is to remain solvent, this is necessary.

Student government is working on two major projects, both of which are near completion. The first project, being completed by the student senate, is the drafting of a new, more viable constitution. Senior senator Jack Allen is responsible for this effort, which should be done before final exams. The second project, being completed by the executive assistant, Melinda Clark, is a total inventory and cataloging of all SGA property and equipment. This has never been done before and is proving to be a very large task. Hopefully, this project will be finished either by the end of this semester or early in the spring.

So far, since my succession to the office of president on October 15, student government has been propelled through the efforts of students who are concerned and who want to help. All of us in student government not only need everyone's help, but also your comments and suggestions. Without this feedback, we cannot meet your needs. Please come out and take part in your student government. You can begin by coming by the SGA office, at the top of the stairs in the pub, or stop and talk to me on campus. Student government is for you, and without your help, it cannot work.

Black Life on Campus Has a Way to Go

By Derrick R. Anderson

The UNCW fall semester has now reached its halfway mark and thus far all is well if sometimes hectic. From the onset controversy found its way to the forefront via the student body president and the Student Government Association.

Still, it has been a most productive school year thus far. One of the reasons for the success of the school year has been the participation of the black students on campus in the school's government and social functions. Though the campus of UNCW had been integrated for quite some time, black students did not often partake in the extracurricular activities of the school. Blacks that did participate in activities other than those that were academic were few and far between, hence, insignificant. Blacks are now becoming an integral part of life at UNCW, thus atoning for the lack of participation in the past.

The reason for the increase in black activities can be attributed to many factors. First, more black students are enrolled at UNCW. This causes a greater demand for black programs. Second, the ever present HEW-UNC situation constitutes a change in the direction of minority students. Thirdly, and probably the more plausible reason, are the black organizations themselves.

First, there is the ever-present progressive Black Student Union (BSU). The BSU, still in its infancy, was founded in the fall of 1977. Its main objective was to be a viable outlet for the black populace on campus to express themselves. In its first two years the BSU seemed all but progressive. However, in the spring of 1979, the BSU held elections in which it replaced its president and other top officials. With reallocation of funds by the SGA, the BSU began a series of projects that went on until the end of last semester. Under newly elected officers, the BSU has continued its service projects as well as programming. Some of the projects of the BSU include a food drive which they are now in the midst of. Also the BSU is instrumental toward black social functions such as picnics, forums and dances on the campus. There is black participation on the various com-

Congratulations to Fishing Team

UNCW's Fishing Club captured the sixth annual Coastal Carolina Invitational held recently in Myrtle Beach and Murrell's Inlet, SC.

Led by Dr. John Scalf and captained by Dennen Fox, the Seahawk anglers defeated the host school for their third straight title in the annual event. Other team members included Gary Landen, Frank Gombatz, and Tony Snyder.

Chief sponsors of the UNCW team were the SGA, which provided transportation expenses and Coastal Beverage Company (distributors of Miller and Lite), which outfitted the squad in t-shirts and hats.

"We deeply appreciate the support of the SGA and Coastal Distributing," Dr. Scalf said. "It was another enjoyable tournament and I'm glad that we could keep our winning streak going."

In addition to the two days of competition, the club also took part in an evening seminar concerning fishes of the coastal region.

Joanne Gentry, a three-year member of the UNCW team, also served as one of the tournament judges.

"We would have still won without her," Dr. Scalf added with a chuckle.

Ex SGA President Speaks Out Against Senate

To The Editor:

As a concerned student would like to call everyone's attention to recent actions of the SGA. On Thursday, October 18, the legislature voted to allocate $1500 to send four representatives to a Student Legal Rights Conference in Orlando.

This in itself is not so terrible. But the important thing to realize is that in the preceeding two weeks, the legislature voted down money for an All Night Film Festival and a proposed "Seaside Jam" in the spring. The SGA is operating on a "tight" budget and these extras such as films and concerts aren't what the students want. What the students want are people attending conferences, or so it appears the SGA feels.

This allocation also includes money for food, something which no other organization is allowed to spend SGA money on, and something which while I was in office for six months and traveling managed never to spend any SGA money on.

The representatives to this conference will probably be the President and three SGA reps. I assume it is safe to say that no students at large is going to Florida on this SGA money. I hope anyone who cares will think about where money is being spent and by whom. Every dollar that goes off campus is a dollar that can't be spent on campus, and it is your money.

Thank you,
Francis DeLuca
Ex SGA President

Delta Zeta Installed as First Official Sorority at UNCW

"DZ everybody knows Golden lamp and Kilaney rose," were the words echoing around the room during Xi Theta's Installation Banquet on November 3, 1979.

This date was a landmark victory for Delta Zeta, as exactly one year ago National Consultant, Debbie Raziano, introduced Delta Zeta to three girls at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington. Debbie held a follow-up meeting with these three girls—Candy Singleton, Susan Klintworth, and Linda Gordon—the next day. A few weeks passed and during this time Debbie kept in touch with Linda Moore, Director of Student Activities by telephone. Mrs. Moore was the mainstream of encouragement and help for the girls.

Then in October, since the girls were still a little unsure, Debbie returned to UNCW with another presentation. This time the girls' unanimous choice was Delta Zeta and thirteen girls were pledged in that night! Election of officers was held in November and Delta Zeta was on its way. The officers elected were:

Candy Singleton - Pres.
Jan Johnson - V.P. of Membership
Janie Irving - V.P. of Pledge Training
Karen Benson - Recording

Secretary
Linda Gordon Jackson - Correspondence Sec.
Gay Singletary - Treasurer

Things moved quickly after this as the girls held cook-outs, oyster roasts, and other social events to stir up interest among the students at UNCW.

The girls in Xi Theta worked hard to establish themselves as a full-fledged sorority on campus and also as a respected name in the community.

After Christmas the girls' efforts paid off as they increased from thirteen to twenty-nine. During the spring, Xi Theta began to be called on by collegiate and civic organizations as well. They sponsored three Red Cross drives held at UNCW and sold doughnuts to the students to raise money.

Then in May, after exams, the girls were initiated in a beautiful ceremony by Kappa Phi chapter at the University of North Carolina-Charlotte.

The first initiates and charter members were: Christie Baldwin, Karen Benson, Teresa Benton, Debbie Berry, Amy Best, Angie Clark, Cindy Cole, Anna DeBlois, Julie Duclos, Donna Fisher, Martina Forbes, Joy Godley, Linda Gordon Jackson, Jan Hanes, Janie Irving, Jan Johnston, Jill Johnston, Susan Klintworth, Holly Ogle, Tammy Parker, Rebecca Perkins, Wendy Poole, Robbie Register, Julie Russ, Gay Singletary, Candy Singleton, Meg Squires, Becky Thompson, Beverly Todd, Tricia Wallace and Patty Waters.

Xi Theta returned in the fall, held their first official rush and pledged in 16 girls. The first pledge class included: Darlene Barker, Ann Carr, Lisa Casteen, Kim Church, Stephanie Holmes, Sally Johnson, Cindy Lockamy, Debbie Marina, Donna Moore, Carol Pittman, Amy Purser, Nancy Roberson, Rebecca Rumbough, Carla Scott, Connie Williams and Jackie Wilson.

After the rush the girls kept busy and were asked by the Wilmington Chamber of Commerce to entertain the British sailors in port from Her Majesty's Ship Bristol. Xi Theta also threw a post-performance party for "Her Majesty's most illustrious battalion", Scotland's famous Black Watch.

Of course the highlight of this autumn was the initiation of the new pledges on Friday, November 2, and the installation banquet the following evening.

The Installation Banquet Saturday evening was held in the ballroom of the Hilton in Wilmington. Xi Theta was honored to have Betty Heusch Agler as Toastmistress.

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, Dr. William M. Malloy, represented the University of North Carolina at Wilmington's administration as he addressed Delta Zetas, parents, and other guests.

Dr. Malloy congratulated Xi Theta on their success of being the first official sorority on campus. He also assured the girls of continued enthusiasm and support from both students and administration at UNCW.

Vice Chancellor of Academic Affairs, Dr. and Mrs. Charles L. Cahill, Dean of Students Mrs. Helena Cheek, Mr. Larry Cheek, Mr. and Mrs. James Moore from UNCW administration expressed their congratulations and warm wishes to Delta Zeta's newest chapter.

Other distinguished guests from National included National Vice President, Carolyn Barnes Gullatt; National Ritual Chairman, Linda Agler Hobbs; and State Reference Chairman, Ashley.

Delta Zeta sisters from around the state presented Xi Theta with lovely gifts of engraved silver to always remember that special day.

Norma Minch Andrisek officially installed the Xi Theta Chapter of Delta Zeta and Debbie Raziano followed with the beautiful tradition of the Rose Ceremony.

The memorable evening came to a close with everyone joining hands for sisterhood as the friendship circle was formed.

Over the past year, the word sister has taken on a deeper meaning as the girls in Xi Theta have learned to share, trust, and uphold deeply-rooted traditions that are the core of Delta Zeta.

The most important thing they have learned is that Delta Zeta is not just another club meeting to attend, but rather that Delta Zeta is a way of life.

RHA is Getting Involved

The UNCW Residence Hall Association's purpose is to provide an atmosphere where learning can take place socially as well as educationally. The RHA will represent the residence hall students by providing an open channel of communication between students and administration. The RHA will take ideas and suggestions of the residence hall students and creatively channel them into events and activities for all hall residents. All association members should plan to become actively involved in idea generating, construction and planning of programs for all hall residents.

Future Projections:

Programs—resident hall parties, movies, safety programs, theft prevention, athletic facility improvements.

Newsletter—inform students, activities, advertising, suggestions.

Student Travel Guide Food Committee

Anyone who resides in Belk, Galloway, New Dorm or Hewlett and who are interested in the RHA are welcome to attend the meeting every Sunday night at nine o'clock p.m. The meetings are about an hour long.

With cooperation we strive to settle the nights business and organize varied activities for the up-coming calendar. So come this Sunday night at around nine o'clock, stop by the Study Room first floor Galloway Hall, and get acquainted. Even join in the pioneer of the Residence Hall Association!

New History Course 'Sea in History' Taught this Spring

A new history course, The Sea in History (HST 303), will be offered this spring at UNCW.

The course, which was developed by Dr. Richard Cooper, revolves around men, ships, and the sea. It includes discussion of the sea in relation to trade, exploration, and as a part of our environment.

Dr. Cooper, who will teach the class, described it as a "discussion course, using a series of paperbacks supplemented by filmstrips."

Among the topics covered will be the history of the sailing ship, the life of Christopher Columbus, development of the whaling industry and its destruction of the world's whale population, as well as supertankers and the threat they pose to the marine environment.

Last fall, The Sea in History was taught experimentally with favorable results, and now is scheduled to be a part of the regular curriculum.

The course will be offered at 11:30 a.m. on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, and at 7 on Monday nights.

Freshmen Say College Isn't So Hard to Get Into After All

NEW ORLEANS, LA (CPS)—A huge majority of freshmen think that college wasn't as hard to get into as they'd imagined. A study released at the College Entrance Examination Board convention here last week also found that test scores are not the single most important factor in admissions.

The study, done by the College Board and the American Association of Collegiate Registrars and Admissions Officers, showed that most admissions officers consider overall high school performance as the most important factor in assessing an applicant, with test scores second in importance.

"A single performance on a test can't replace four years of performance in high school," summarized Stephen Ivens, College Board program research director.

Almost 80 percent of the freshmen questioned said getting into college is, in Ivens' words, "not as hard as is thought."

Admissions officers contributing to the research said their mean standard for the Scholastic Aptitude Test was a combined math and verbal score of 745. William Van Dusen of the College Board said more than three quarters of the people who took the SAT had scores over 750.

Students are Needed to Run Events

Help is needed to organize and chair the committees that run all student programmed events on this campus. MOVIES, LECTURES, COFFEEHOUSE, etc. Preferably freshmen and sophomores who are willing to be trained in the 1979-80 academic year for the 1980 year and years to come.

BENEFITS—Possible scholarship, very useful experience with contacts of other people around the country, chance to better campus life, looks good on a resume. We have a helluva lot of fun doing what we do best—programming—we're fun to work with.

REQUIREMENTS—No experience necessary, will train. Need lots of enthusiasm, must devote at least 4 hours/week of your time, have a good disposition (when possible), must be dependable and have a good imagination. Everyone is needed.

We meet every Monday at 3 p.m. in the pub. Look for Chip. If that time isn't feasible leave name and number at Student Activities Office, 791-4330 ex.2284. We will return your call ASAP.

There are easier ways to pay for college.

Conducting telethons, waiting tables or parking cars may not be the only ways to help you pay for college. There may be a scholarship or grant available that you've overlooked. Or it may be as simple as cutting back on expenses. Read the next issue of Insider and find out.

Ford hopes this next issue of Insider will give you a "better idea" for paying your way through college. And if you need a set of wheels to get you around campus, check out the sporty Fords for the 80's.

FORD DIVISION

Student Suing Professor for Flunking His Course

AUSTIN, TX (CPS)--Michael Gable thinks an academic record without an F is worth $450,000.

Gable, a former University of Texas business graduate student, says the F he got from one of his professors ruined his career. In the suit, filed October 10 in Austin, Gable asks the professor to pay him damages of $450,000.

Gable's suit may be the first grade litigation that asks for money. Other recent lawsuits over grades, however, have generally not given students any of the other remedies they asked for, from new grades to reinstatement into academic programs.

Most recently, Robert D. Miller sued the Hamlin University law school in St. Paul, MN., twice after being dismissed from the law program. He originally sued in 1978, claiming that "irregularities" in test grading and the unavailability of tutors amounted to a denial of his constitutional rights, and that he should therefore be allowed back into the law school. The court ruled against Miller, who had previously carried a C-average.

He sued again in federal court, claiming Hamline's refusal to allow him to reappear before the admissions committee was a denial of due process. On July 20, the U.S. Court of Appeals also ruled against him, citing as precedent a U.S. Supreme Court decision that students were not necessarily entitled to a formal hearing before being dismissed from school.

Last April, Harry Maue, a business grad student at Southern Illinois University at Edwardsville, also sued a professor over a grade. Maue asked to be awarded an MBA as his damages.

He claims that instructor John Phillips changed the course requirements at the last minute, and thus caused Maue to fail the one remaining class he needed to get his MBA. Maue understood he was to complete the course by writing four papers. Maue's suit claims that after the papers were submitted, Phillips asked Maue to take a final exam. Maue refused, was denied his MBA, and sued.

SIUE legal representative John Gilbert says he held a meeting with Maue and Maue's attorneys at the end of August in an attempt to reach a settlement, but that the meeting was "not fruitful." Gilbert has since filed a motion to dismiss the case, and expects the court to act on the motion "pretty soon".

Gilbert adds that students suing over bad grades have cases that are "hard to prove." The precedent in Illinois, called Tanner v. Board of Trustees, requires that students prove their professors acted "out of malice" or "arbitrarily and capriciously or in bad faith," according to Gilbert.

Former University of Colorado student Larry Goldberg tried to do just that in 1977, when he sued history professor Boyd Hill for failing him three times on an ancient history exam. The failures effectively ended Goldberg's chances to get his doctorate.

Goldberg alleged Hill wrote "comments on the face of the exam which were highly suspect and professionally prejudicial." A district judge dismissed the case in August, 1978.

Now in Texas, Gable is accusing former associate business professor David A. Wilson--now a certified public accountant in Houston--of ruining Gable's career with an F, and of libeling him when Wilson tried to appeal the grade. Gable says he had a B in the course before the final, and that the F Wilson gave him "killed his grade point average." The grade reportedly led to his dismissal from grad school.

Wilson's letter to the dean, written when Gable appealed the grade, states, "You may recall that (Gable) simply did not show up for the final exam last spring (1978) when I was teaching the course, and as a consequence I gave him an F."

"This is my whole career that has been ruined on account of those statements," Gable contends in his suit.

There has been no trial date set.

Faculty Influence in University Policy a Myth

(CPS)--A philosophy professor from Ohio University says that the central question in higher education in the coming decade is how to rid colleges of their new rules: "a new breed of administrator-managers."

In the most recent issue of Education magazine, professor David Stewart calls faculty influence in university policy a myth. He recounts how minor salary increases, a loss of voice in the selection of academic department chairpeople, and a growth in administrative bureaucracies have combined to diminish faculty member's power through the seventies.

"In times past," he wrote, "deans and academic administrators were faculty colleagues. But all this has changed."

Stewart contended that ultimate control of American colleges has passed to a class of managers who have little knowledge of teaching or intellectual curiosity. The "new breed" shares its powers only with the state legislators, who frequently determine college budgets.

Stewart wrote the only way to get the balance of college power to shift back toward faculty members is for teachers to indulge in more aggressive collective bargaining in the next decade.

Volunteers are needed. Apply in Student Activities Office.

Bored? Need a better resume? Want to have a meaningful experience? Well, what should you do? The answer is--volunteer!

A volunteer job is a good way students can become involved and learn more about themselves. And, according to Director of Student Activities, Linda Moore, students have more time to spend on volunteering than they are conscious of.

Moore is no stranger to volunteer programs. She has given her time to hospitals and to Crisis Line, and is currently on the board of the Lower Cape Fear Voluntary Action Center. It was through her efforts that a Student Volunteer Program was established at UNCW in 1973.

The Office of Student Activities serves as a liaison between the University and the VAC, which acts as an employment agency for people who want to do voluntary work. Interested students go to Moore, who helps them get in touch with specific agencies. After the student is accepted by an agency, a schedule is set up with the director. The rest is left up to the student.

Students generally select an agency that is compatible with their interests, Moore said. For example, an education major is likely to work with the school system, which gets most of the volunteers. There are many other programs to choose from, such as programs for the elderly and the visually handicapped.

Moore reported that she has been pleased--but not completely satisfied--with the response of UNCW students to volunteer programs. Students have been exceeding four thousand hours of donated time each year, in addition to the hours required by such courses as practicum. Most of the time, the feedback from the agencies and the students is good.

According to Moore, students usually volunteer out of boredom or as the result of a course. At first, some of them don't realize that they are helping themselves in addition to helping others. Moore believes that students who don't volunteer are missing much of their education.

"The more they know about the world and about other people, the more educated they are," she said.

Volunteer work has many personal rewards--and students would be surprised at how many people in the community need their help.

Swim Team Faces Wake Forest Friday

WILMINGTON--The UNCW men's swim team undertakes its first real test of the young season Friday when the Seahawks travel to Winston-Salem to face Wake Forest.

The dual meet is the first ever for UNCW against an Atlantic Coast Conference opponent as the Hawks enter just their second year of intercollegiate competition.

"This meet will tell us a lot," UNCW coach Dave Allen predicts. "It's a good challenge to have at this time of year, and of course the fact that it is an ACC opponent makes it that much more exciting to us.

"Wake had a very good recruiting year and will have one of its best teams ever, but we still hope to be competitive and give them all they want."

The Seahawks, who went 9-2 in dual competition last season, are 1-0 this year after an easy 92-26 victory over the College of Charleston two weeks ago. UNCW will host The Citadel on December 8 before breaking for the holidays and its annual post-Christmas training trip to Orlando, Fla., December 27 thru January 6.

Women's Basketball Faces Tough Schedule

WILMINGTON--After a season-opening win over Wingate prior to Thanksgiving, the UNCW women's basketball team faces a demanding schedule during the next two weeks with six games on tap.

The Lady Seahawks and first-year coach Marilyn Christoph host Shaw on Tuesday (Nov. 27), then face two of the toughest opponents on the 79-80 slate on Wednesday and Friday as they travel to East Carolina and UNC-Charlotte.

Next week's calendar has UNCW meeting Pfeiffer and Catawba in Trask Coliseum, with a visit to Pembroke State in between.

"It was good to get off to a winning start," Christoph says. "but we certainly have a rough road ahead of us in the next couple of weeks.

"We're still a very young and inexperienced team that is yet to really come together completely. I just hope that the girls continue to work hard and improve, and that we can come away with two or three more wins before the holidays."

Sophomore Vertha Dixon was the individual standout in UNCW's 67-56 win over Wingate with 17 points and 22 rebounds. Freshman Linda Plum (13 points, 11 rebounds) and junior Linda Stuart (13 points) also performed well in their initial appearances for the Lady 'Hawks.

The Fever is Here, 'Hawks Open Up Against Central Tomorrow

An optimistic UNC-Wilmington Seahawk basketball team opens its 1979-80 season here Friday evening, hosting the Eagles of North Carolina Central.

Tipoff time is 7:30 p.m. in UNCW's Trask Coliseum.

The Seahawks hope to take up where they left off a year ago when they captured 19 victories, including their last four in a row to close out the 78-79 schedule. And while a win over Central would be the first for the current UNCW team, it would also be the 100th victory for Coach Mel Gibson in his seven years at the Seahawk helm.

Gibson is eager to open the new year, but not because he is approaching that personal landmark.

"In my 13 years of coaching, I don't think I've ever been as excited about a team," the UNCW coach says. "This squad has a great deal of potential and a definite ability to explode at any time. There is a certain flare about it that I've never seen in a team before."

"The preseason has been a long one (seven weeks), and we're most anxious to get underway."

Gibson, who is 99-81 at UNCW (54-25 in the past three years as a Division One coach), welcomes three returning starters to his 79-80 lineup, led by three-year letterman Garry Cooper.

Cooper, a 6'6 senior, is the top Seahawk returnee in both scoring (13.8) and rebounding (7.1) and has already established a school career mark for blocked shots with 123.

Senior 6'2 point guard Barry Taylor (9.7 ppg) and 6'7 junior Danny Davis (8.1) are also back, as is last year's top reserve, 6'4 John Haskins (8.0), giving UNCW four of its top five scorers returning from last season's 19-8 club.

Other Seahawk veterans who will likely see a good deal of playing time include 6'3 sophomore Dennis Tobin and 6'0 soph John Calipari in the backcourt, and 6'6 junior Jimmy Denton up front.

Top newcomers are 6'4 Shawn Williams, 6'7 Scott Prudhoe and 6'5 Mike Prudhoe—all three freshmen and all with promising talent.

The visitors from N.C. Central, who are under the guidance of first-year coach Jesse Clements, are led by sophomore David Binion, a 6'6 forward and lone returning starter from last year's 5-21 team. Binion, who averaged 8.1 points per outing in 78-79, and the Eagles are competing in the CIAA this year with a number of new faces in the lineup.

The meeting is the first ever between UNCW and Central.

UNCW head coach Mel Gibson inherited a struggling program in 1972—one which had won only 38 games the five previous seasons. After a slow start, with one winning record the first four years, Gibson has now established the Seahawk basketball program as a successful one.

The past three seasons in Division One have seen the 'Hawks win 54 of 79 contests (68.4 percentage). In 12 years as a coach (five at Charleston Baptist; seven at UNCW), Gibson now holds a 156-119 overall mark.

Charleston Baptist's finest season (18-7 in 1969-70) and UNCW's best as a four-year school (19-7 in 1977-78) were both accomplished under Gibson's direction.

This Friday's game with N.C. Central is the third straight year that UNCW has opened its season at home in the new Trask Coliseum on campus.

Program Board Wants to Increase Student Participation

Although the Program Board began last semester, this is its first official year. Advisor, Steve Gnadt, defines the function of the Program Board as "providing a variety of programs and events for the entire student body. We try to go for a certain amount of diversity in the programs."

Chairperson, Steve "Chip" Chiappisi, was appointed to the Program Board by the SGA president who, at that time, was Francis DeLuca. Chip, in turn, appoints the chairpersons of the various committees. The chairpersons of the Concert Committee is David Carter, Coffeehouse Committee--Linda Gentry, Fine Arts Committee--Tommy Long, Lecture Committee--Scott Bragg, Special Events Committee--Bill Riggins, Dance and Outdoor Recreation Committee--Mark Davis, Publicity Committee--Pete Divoky, and Hospitality Committee--Linda Gentry. These chairpersons comprise the Program Board members.

Steve Gnadt is impressed with this year's Program Board and feels that "one of the greatest assets of having a formalized Program Board is the fact that the people who are involved, are involved because they have a lot of time to put into it. Chip spends at least four hours a day in here (the Pub). I don't think a lot of people really understand the amount of time that goes into putting on the events or even the costs involved."

The Program Board is allotted $37,000 by the SGA. Chip appropriates the money to the various committees by looking at expenses in past records. "People think $37,000, that's a lot of money," Gnadt said, "but we're working on homecoming already for February and we've set aside $2,500 for Special Events and to rent the Hilton it costs us $1,000 right there. And a band for homecoming, the band will cost us anywhere from $1,000 to $1,200 and that is not even getting into decorations or anything."

It seems the main problem the Program Board has right now is strained relations with the Senate. Program Board Chairperson Chiappisi said, "Ever since the Program Board was instated last year, the animosity between the two (Senate and Program Board) has been fairly well defined. We want to break it down. We want to get to know the SGA better and there shouldn't be any reason why we don't."

Both Steve and Chip feel that it would be of the best interest of the Program Board, Senate, and students alike for everyone to work together.

Chip said the main goals of the Program Board are to get more students participation in campus activities and to increase publicity. In order to gain more knowledge in these areas, Steve Gnadt said, "Most people on the Program Board just recently went to Atlanta to a regional convention and they spent four days attending workshops that dealt strictly with programming on campus, lectures, films, effective publicity, and leadership."

"Anyone who is interested is encouraged to come to the Program Board meetings on Monday at three in the Pub or get in touch with Chip. Also new suggestions and ideas are welcome. The Program Board office is located in room 102 of the Pub."

The Who's 'Quadrophenia' to Make American Debut This Week

By LEE MOORE
Pop Scene Columnist

"QUADROPHENIA"

The Who's second movie in less than a year, "Quadrophenia," makes its American debut this week. Unlike the documentary, "The Kids are Alright," though, "Quadrophenia" doesn't feature the Who on screen. It's a straight, dramatic film based on the band's 1973 LP of the same name, chronicling the growing disillusionment of a young man named Jimmy with the Mod lifestyle of the early 1960's.

As one critic pointed out recently, "Quadrophenia" is the first "British" British film since the days of "Georgy Girl." The Mod vs. the Rocker phenomenon that swept England during the 1960's was unique to Britain.

The Mods dressed to kill, in Ivy League suits with narrow lapels and straight-legged trousers. Clothes and pills were, in addition to music, the Mods' main interests; they rode Vespa scooters.

The sworn enemies of the Mods were the Rockers, scruffy bikers resplendent in leathers and more leathers. Their clash in style, perhaps more than anything else, resulted in the Mods and Rockers mixing it up regularly on bank holidays, at seaside resorts, in the streets.

The Who, with their interest in pop-art clothes and style, were among the leaders of the Mod cult. Ultimately, Who leader Pete Townshend conceived of "Quadrophenia" as a bitter study of Moddom and its essentially empty lifestyle.

To many British teenagers of the '60s, the Mod life offered acceptance and an identity.

But what happened when a Mod began to take a long, searching look at who he really was, and had to decide what he was going to do with his life? As Jimmy, the central character says of his identity crisis in the film, "Schizophrenic? I'm bleedin' Quadrophenic."

In the album, the four sides of Jimmy's personality were represented by the four members of the Who. In the film, the Who remain in the background, serving only as executive producers and advisors. Naturally, their music is a crucial element of the action, along with selected oldies from James Brown, the Kingsmen, the Crystals, the Ronettes, Booker T and the MGs and other '60s acts. Direction, by Franc Roddam, is crisp, yet moody. The performances are low-keyed, but excellent. Phil Daniels as Jimmy and Sting (of the Police) as the ACE are especially good.

"Quadrophenia" is a must-see for rock fans. It is an impressive portrait of an obscure, fascinating period in rock history.

ROCK MEETS DISCO

As rock and roll sales grow--and disco sales slip--some strange hybrid forms are raising their heads in recording studios around the world.

Blondie's Euro-disco hit "Heart of Glass" gave the nod to popular acceptance of rock-disco fusion. It looks like soul, disco and new wave aren't so dissimilar after all.

At New York's rock disco, Hurah, the jocks regularly segue from the Clash and Lene Lovitch, to James Brown's "Hot Pants" without missing a beat. A revitalized Sam and Dave Opened for the Clash at New York's Palladium recently, and expertly whipped the new wave crowd into a frenzy.

Meanwhile, James Chance and the Contortions had their rock-disco "Get Contorted" single remixed by disco producer August Darnell. And in England, the new wave-oriented Ian Dury has become a national idol through such frankly dance-tinged tunes as "Hit Me With Your Rhythm Stick" and "Reasons to Be Cheerful."

It is a logical progression, if a little surprising on the surface. After all, rock and roll was originally dance music. The

"be cool" school of sitting and nodding to rock bands didn't develop until the late '60s. And, thanks to disco, rock audiences are dancing again, even if, as one wag pointed out recently, many rock fans began dancing in retaliation, to prove that disco wasn't really necessary.

Kansas Moves into Heights of Superstardom

By LEE MOORE

Over the course of seven albums--their latest is "Monolith"--Epic artists Kansas have moved into the rarefied heights of superstardom. Hits such as "Carry On Wayward Son" and "Dust in the Wind" have made the band at home on both AM and FM play lists, and the group packs arenas around the world.

So why are the critics after Kansas?

"I have no idea what it is that we've done to deserve all those bad reviews," says Robbie Steinhardt, Kansas' Shaggy-haired violinist. "God knows we've tried really hard to do things the best we could, to conduct ourselves in a mature manner. Critics keep calling us pretentious when we're really all just doing something that turns us on."

"I read the Rolling Stone magazine review of 'Monolith' the other day," Steinhardt says. "The reviewer absolutely hated it. I get the feeling that they must call a freelance writer and say, 'Listen, we need a real bad review of the Kansas album. Can you get it to us by tomorrow?'"

Even sympathetic reporters wind up getting their facts wrong, Steinhardt maintains, pointing to a recent magazine profile of him. "The writer said one of my favorite violinists was Mik Kaminski of ELO. Until I read that article, I had never heard of Mik Kaminski."

Regardless of what the critics say, the fans seem to be happy. Kansas' powerful, elaborately arranged, neo-classical music is an enormous concert draw. Their complex mixture of classical music and rock is especially impressive given the fact that of the six Kansas members, only Steinhardt had formal classical training--"10 years of lessons."

Although originally from Kansas, logically enough, five of the band members now live in Atlanta. "Two members of the group met their wives in Atlanta and moved there, and the rest of the band followed--except for me. I moved to Tampa, Fla., instead," Steinhardt explains.

Despite his Florida residence, Steinhardt says he spends most of his time in Atlanta, rehearsing and recording with Kansas; the band recorded "Monolith" at two Atlanta studios.

Steinhardt says that of the seven Kansas LPs, "Monolith" is the first one the group is totally pleased with, in sound and production. That's because, for the first time, Kansas produced their own LP. In their usual, meticulous fashion, they collaborated on all the album's creations, and fans seem pleased with the result. "Monolith" has been a strong seller, and the first single from the LP, "People of the South Wind," moved into the national top-10 several weeks ago.

Where does Kansas go from here? "There's no place for us to go but further up," says Steinhardt with a grin. The band is currently in the midst of a U.S. tour, and they'll leave for their debut tour of the Far East in January.

Two members of the band are planning solo albums. Vocalist and keyboard player Steve Walsh has completed his LP which will be released after the first of the year and guitarist Kerry Livgren hopes to begin work on one soon. As for a Steinhardt solo album, he says, "When I Manage to get time off, all I can do is relax. When I feel like I've had enough time off, then I think I'll be a little more motivated to perhaps write some music and do my own album. But I'm in no hurry."

A project that Kansas is especially enthusiastic about is a proposed collaboration with the Atlanta Symphony. "The Atlanta Symphony is one of the few full-time orchestras in the country. They're top-notch people," says Steinhardt. "We'd probably just try to cover costs for the concert, and hold it outdoors in Atlanta in a park."

Whatever form the project takes, the final determinations will be made by all six members of Kansas. "Everybody's involved in all the decisions," says drummer Phil Ehart.

"Everybody has a role, and everybody cares. There are really no flaming egos in this band."

Says he: "We're pretty much a bunch of bar musicians that have picked a different style of music to play."

Marathon, Santana's Latest, is Solid Effort

By David Carter

When Santana burst upon the scene in 1969, latin flavored rock became more than a Stephen Stills hobby. Over the years, these second generation San Franciscans have given us memorable songs such as "Evil Ways," "Black Magic Woman," and "Oye Como Ua." Their trademark became lots of latin percussion in the form of timbales and congos, along with extended Carlos Santana guitar solos. But with the advent of the years, different events tempered the overall sound of the band. Numerous personnel changes guaranteed a potpourri of ideas and Santana's own involvement with religious figure Sri Chinmoy promised a new sound. Also, last year's Inner Secrets album saw Santana add guitarist Chris Solberg to the lineup, marking the first time that Santana shared the spotlight with another guitarist.

Against this backdrop of changes, Santana has released their new offering entitled Marathon. This effort, much like Inner Secrets, finds Santana departing more and more from their latin base and turning more to a straight rock approach. The band consists of veterans Devadip Carlos Santana (guitar), Chris Solberg (guitar), David Morgen (bass), Graham Lear (guitar), Raul Rekow (congos, percussion), Armando Peraza (timbales, percussion) and newcomers Alan Pasqua (keyboards) and Alexander J. Ligertwood (vocals, rhythm guitar), who replaces departed lead singer Greg Walker. Keith Olsen produced Marathon and the end result of his labor is a clean and clear recording, but it also proves to be a shade too lavish for a band that is known for its rough edges and raw power.

The title track opens side one and is a short instrumental full of Santana trademarks. It has that latin-influence, complete with congos and timbales. It serves as a perfect lead into "Lighting in the Sky," a rocker complete with ARP string ensemble and strong vocals by Ligertwood. Another instrumental follows and is called "Aquamarine." This sounds as though it might have been more at home on David Gilmour's solo album, but is a welcome inclusion.

"You Know That I Love You" is another rocker that finds Ligertwood sounding like Stevie Winwood and is reminiscent of Spiral Staircase's "more Today than Yesterday." Santana and Solberg compliment each other and this is one of the two probable singles on the album. "All I Ever Wanted" completes the first side and begins with congos and timbales only to switch to power chords by the song's end.

Side two begins with a medley "Stand Up/Runnin'." "Stand Up" has the classic Santana organ whirling away full force while the guitarists taste fully employ the use of talk boxes. This rocker runs directly into "Runnin'," a David Morgen composition that showcases a David Morgen bass solo and more

Do You Have a Real Friend?

Campus Chuckles

by Julie Russ

3 a.m. The phone rings. I fall out of bed, crawl over two dogs and one prowler (he was leaving anyway) and croak into the phone: "Uurghh?" It's my best friend, Twitchey. Twitchey can't sleep but she has some great dirty jokes to tell me, ha ha. Because we are friends, I snicker/snore while Twitchey fights off insomnia. At 4 a.m., she is sleepy, I am wide awake, and my father is banging on my bedroom door ("What the hell are you laughing at? Is that boy in there again?")

The point is, what are friends for? Remember when a pal was someone who cared enough to tell you your breath could wilt a redwood? Now a friend refers you to her analyst "because, honey, you need someone." Criticism is cool but I'd rather hear it from someone I hate--that way I can ignore it! How can you ignore it when your best buddy says, "Look, I'm telling you this because I love you: your personality stinks." Thank God, for a minute there I thought it was my mouthwash. A true friend is often blinder than Dracula at daybreak. He or she will not point out that zit on your nose (or if he does, will at least offer a dab of Clearasil). A fair-weather friend (you know, the kind that fades out during a thunderstorm) not only points it out, but describes it as well ("Yuck! Man, have you considered a paper bag?" etc...)

Another thing I've noticed, real friends do not blab. No matter if you have a sixth toe or illegitimate twins in Utah, a bosom pal will never divulge. This can prove invaluable if you have Mafia connections.

A friend is someone you can always count on--you bet. If you run out of rolling papers, who comes to the rescue with E-Z Wides? Faithful Fred, yes indeedly. And when you forget to take your little pill, who lends you a sterilized coat-hanger? You got it, good old Helpful Hanah.

If you are lucky enough to have your own faithful Tonfo, count your blessings. If, however, you're still searching for that perfect pal, well, maybe we can work something out with Twitchey...

strings. "Summer Lady" follows and this one allows Carlos to exhibit his distinctive and unmistakable howling guitar. Not to be outdone, Chris Solbert gets a solo in the next cut, "Love." He's not exactly Santana, but the ever-present strings, power chords and organ pick up the slack. "Stay (Beside Me)," was written solely by Devadip Carlos Santana and is strangely discoish. For that reason it may be the other forty-five release, but it's easily the worse song on the album. The last song is "Hard Times" and opens much like "Blinded by the Light" by Manfred Mann. It's a heavy rocker highlighted by a Santana guitar solo, latin percussion and strings.

Marathon is a solid effort and a good album although not as good as last year's Inner Secrets. That may be because the band members wrote all the songs instead of doing cover versions of rock chestnuts such as "She's Not There" and "Dealer". The latin side of Santana seems to fade away a little more with each new album, but as long as Devadip Carlos is at the helm, it will never be completely abandoned. This album should have enough guitar for everyone and old fans should be pleased with Santana's consistency, as that is something they've never really had. The people who never cared for the latin seasonings of Santana will probably be satisfied with the rock approach now in effect. Marathon is one size that should fit all.

mittees of the program board.

Another organization that shares in the upgrading of black student life on campus has been the Omega Psi Phi Fraternity. The first black fraternity on the campus of UNCW, Omega Psi Phi brings aggressiveness to black life on campus.

The charismatic fraternity has the backing of the administration in its endeavors as well as the backing of the students both black and white. Omega Psi Phi's influence was evidenced in the sponsorship of the first black promoted concert early in September. The fraternity has demonstrated positive principles in behavior as well as student activities.

Black programs on campus are not done without the employment of the administration, the student activities office and the Seahawk press on campus. Despite the progress and apparent upward mobility of black life on campus, all parties will admit there is still a ways to go.

UNCW Chosen to Integrate Women's History

UNCW is one of only twenty colleges nationwide to be chosen to participate in a program designed to integrate more women's history into the basic American and European history courses.

The project, sponsored by the Organization of American Historians and co-directed by Elizabeth Fox-Genovese of the University of Rochester, and D'Ann Campbell of Indiana University, is aimed at broadening students' and eventually society's, understanding of the role women play in history.

The courses that will be affected are the basic history foundation courses (survey courses) that are required as prerequisites to further history study. These courses were chosen basically because they would reach the maximum number of students.

In a summary of the program, director Elizabeth Fox-Genovese said that only in developing women's history for the teaching of survey courses "can we hope to achieve its rootedness in the experience of our teachers of history, and, hence, its long-range influence in our culture."

"As a rule," she said, "the history of women has moved into the historical curriculum in the form of discrete courses on women, which, whatever their intrinsic merits, join the

Jon Fail to Give 'State of the University' Address

Congratulations.

A review of the past semester reveals many things. Out of the conflict of impeachment came cooperation. The anti-Iran rally, the first rally in eleven years at UNCW, produced 10 per cent of the student body (a higher percentage than any other UNC school), which demonstrates that UNCW is not suffering from an apathy problem. Students here are concerned. And not only concerned with matters that we can't influence directly. This year, for the first time ever, UNCW has a student representative on the Wilmington Chamber of Commerce.

Next semester should be one of the most rewarding in recent years. A lot of students have worked hard on many different projects which should bear fruit this spring. At the first senate meeting in the spring, I will give a "State of

Final exams and the Christmas Break are almost upon us. This past semester has been one of extremes, from instability and conflict to hard work and cooperation. The reason why things are moving smoothly is the willingness of everyone on campus to "get to the work at hand." All the accomplishments are a credit to all students at UNCW.

The Plagiarized Term Paper Business Grows Larger, Sophisticated

SEATTLE, WA (CPS)—Like many students, Rainy Mendoza had honorable intentions. She'd worked long and hard for her doctorate, and labored many months to develop statistics for her dissertation with a reluctant Bureau of Indian Affairs. Once all that was done, she got cold feet.

Although I had a lot of English training in college, Mendoza, now a guidance counselor in Tulsa, Oklahoma, recalls, "I felt that I was not adept enough with the lingo" to actually write the dissertation herself.

When she asked her advisor about commissioning someone else to do the writing, she says her advisor didn't forbid her. So, in April 17, 1978, she sent a $4000 check and a letter to Pacific Research of Seattle, a firm which sells "research" papers to anyone with the requisite cash. True to its word, Pacific Research soon delivered a dissertation with the impressive title of "The Weschler Intelligence Scales for Children and the Wide Range Achievement Test: Their Use on Native American Indian Children."

Does she have any post-graduate ethical doubts about her purchased dissertation? Not really. She says her purchase, which one Pacific Research insider estimated probably cost $1000 to complete, "goes on everywhere."

She's right. Though there are no available sales estimates in this closed-mouth industry, term-paper selling is enjoying a boom. If Pacific Research accurately reflects what is going on,

Gil Sher and Michael Gross, so far heads of Washington insiders, parlayed a copying business in Seattle's University District into a mail-order catalogue full of term papers for sale in 1974. Since then the business has spilled over from one- to four converted houses full of three dozen employees on Queen Anne Hill, and includes a graphics arts department, four divisions, and even computer time bought from a local bank. The number of computer terminals in the office, according to a Pacific Research employee, has doubled in just the last year.

In the process, Sher and Gross, who refused to comment, have cranked up an impressive sales machine that includes widespread advertising in college newspapers and magazines, bulletin-board columns, and, of course, the literature with some 7500 pre-written papers on subjects ranging from "America: Contemporary Social Life" to zoology.

The firm, like other research services, also offers "custom research", which currently goes for $7.50 per page of undergraduate work, and $9 per page for graduate, scientific, or technical work.

Their rates are competitive with the other major research companies. The most Los Angeles' Research Assistance will charge you for one of the 10,000 titles it claims to have on file is $89.50, 50 cents less than Pacific's maximum.

Some of the other major and minor research firms around are Collegiate Research, International Termpapers, and such colorfully-named groups as Planned Paperhood, Quality Bullshit, and Write-On, Inc.

The quality of their work inevitably varies. Mendoza found her dissertation was "inconclusive." A student reporter at Youngstown State University bought a paper last year from Research Assistance as part of a story on buying papers, and found that the research she'd bought was still plagiarized from a 1966 Saturday Review article.

Frank Johnson of Research Assistance told College Press Service that the custom plagiarism laws "have never happened" but that while the firm had no editorial review board for checking, it had a "very shabby staff."

For the work is good enough often enough to bring some student passing grades, and others like Mendoza, full graduate degrees. College Press Service, for example, has found that the University of Nebraska unwittingly granted a masters in education this summer to a high school principal who had submitted a thesis on which Pacific Research did at least some of the work.

And it happens often enough to generate a lot of concern among educators. Plagiarized papers represent nothing less than a breakdown of trust in the academic community," according to Arthur Olson of the National Student Educational Honor Society. "When a student who is so young is not moving a grade forward in April,

"there is a breakdown in the rules of the game for which the consumer has contracted."

Olson states (California, New York, North Carolina, Illinois, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Washington, and New Jersey) he is at the forefront against companies selling term papers. Yet the state laws to enforce them are flimsy. There are legitimate research sources, and the good business of protecting legitimate research sources, and controlling real plagiarism is a mine field. "If you're not careful, notes

Olson, "you're going to get Don Chaffin, who says that the best way to get out of a bad situation is to go to the next level."

Olson says the best way to get out of a bad situation is to go to the next level.

Student Speaks Out Against Senate, 'Faill Will Need Our Prayers'

By Dennis R. Anderson

It seems as if the Student Government has finally laid to rest the case of Francis DeLuca. It should be noted, however, that the case was laid to rest in the wake of DeLuca's resignation. In retrospect I was very ignorant of the charges that impelled the senate to impeach Mr. DeLuca. In point of fact, no one really knew what the senate allegations were concerning the DeLuca case. There were charges that Mr. DeLuca overstepped his boundaries by changing the position of then administrative assistant Nikki Bane to clerk typist. Dr. Malloy, Vice President of Student Affairs, intelligently explained this charge away, stating the authority to change the administrative assistant position came from Raleigh and not from DeLuca. Still the stone-brained leaders of the senate continued their witch hunt until they were finally embarrassed in front of the student court by the DeLuca camp. This, however, did nothing to dissuade those few crabbies in the senate. The very next night following the court's decision, there was another motion by the senate to again impeach DeLuca. This, however, was voted down by the more responsible members of the senate.

The truth of the matter is that DeLuca did nothing out of the ordinary. The pieback leaders of the SGA saw an opportunity to exploit an uncanny situation and did so.

On the whole, the DeLuca case was nothing personal. Its only purpose was to serve as a smoke screen for a do-nothing senate. More than that, it served as a diversion to enhance the senate in its dodging of the real issues of student government. As a former member of the senate, I can attest to their capabilities and ineptabilities. The latter prevail. Though the leadership of the senate is sad, it is not without its bright spots. The sophomore and freshmen senators seem to be more responsible to the students, thus avoiding the pattern of the upperclassmen. Also, unlike the seniors, are their willingness to listen and not go off half-cocked. New SGA president Jon Faill is a very capable leader and adheres to the rules of protocol. One can only pray for our new president in dealing with the leadership of the SGA. He will most certainly need our prayers.

COMING FOR CHRISTMAS

Tryouts Held for SRO Theatre

The University Theatre of UNCW will hold tryouts on January 8-9 at 7:30 p.m. in the SRO Theatre for William Saroyan's "The Beautiful People". There are excellent roles for seven men and two women of various ages.

A little after midnight December 31, 1940 William Saroyan began to write a play entitled "A Cup of Kindness." It was a play that turned its back on the typical formula plays of the 1930's and 1940's and according to Saroyan, neglected to put sadness in it. But he did put a lot of other things in it and despite Saroyan's statement about the lack of sadness perhaps it does contain it.

"The Beautiful People" like Saroyan's "The Human Comedy" captures the grandeur of life which means our day by day moment by moment existence holding the potential of all emotions, desires, and harsh realities of our human condition.

The play opened in New York in 1941 under the direction of William Saroyan but it was not called "A Cup of Kindness". It was called "The Beautiful People" and it definitely contained sadness but a sadness that reaffirms our celebration of life in the face of man's difficulties in inhabiting this world. A sadness that touches the heart of dignity and not the heart of man's darkness.

The production will be presented in the SRO Theatre on Feb. 22-25 and anyone wishing to be a part of this experience in any capacity is welcome at the tryout period.

Album Prices

Skyrocketing

The record industry has been plagued by lack of star products, the energy crisis and slumping sales in recent months. But now that they have that star product in the form of albums by Fleetwood Mac, the Eagles, Led Zeppelin and Supertramp, a new problem has arisen.

For years, FM rock stations have been in the habit of airing new albums in their entirety, without commercial interruption. Due to escalating album prices and the proliferation of cassette recorders many consumers have begun recording those albums off the air. There has been such an increase in off-the-air taping, that record executives and store owners claim the practice is cutting into their album sales. Why pay a record-high $15.98 list price for Fleetwood Mac's "Tusk", when you can record it off the radio for the cost of a single blank tape?

Nothing has been done to combat the practice yet, but industry chiefs are pondering a number of solutions. One possibility is a tax on blank tape allocated for record companies and artists. Another is a scrambler or tone that would make it impossible for consumers to tape albums off the air. Joe Smith of Elektra-Asylum went so far as to suggest, jokingly, one can only assume, a signal that will "blow up your house if you tape off the air."

It's a difficult situation to be sure. Record prices have skyrocketed in recent years, and consumers can hardly be blamed for wanting to save money. Even so, record company profits make it possible for the listening audience to have good new music in the first place. A drop in album sales will only force album prices to new highs, and make it even tougher for talented newcomers to get their music out on the marketplace.

SEAHAWK SPORTS

Cooper, Williams Lead Seahawks Over Bees

BALTIMORE — Shoulder pads and helmets might have been more appropriate attire here Tuesday night as UNC-Wilmington's Seahawks battled to a 66-55 victory over Baltimore University in the Baltimore Civic Center.

The win gave the Seahawks, now 2-1, a split of their two-game set in Maryland following Monday night's 64-62 loss to Towson State.

The home-standing Super Bees stung the Seahawks with 28 personal fouls in the very physical contest, sending coach Mel Gibson's club to the free throw line 40 times during the evening.

Fortunately, UNCW made 32 of the attempts. Freshman Shawn Williams was perfect in eight tries and Barry Taylor hit 11 of 13.

"It was a different and difficult kind of game," said Gibson. "We showed good poise under their kamikaze tactics and did well at the foul line. Once again our bench was productive and I'd like to think we are making progress as a team."

Williams matched senior Garry Cooper with 14 points to lead a balanced UNCW attack. Taylor added 13 and Dennis Tobin, again playing well off the bench, chipped in nine. Danny Davis, although played with fouls (the 6-foot-7 junior departed with 5:01 left to play) led both teams with 10 rebounds in only 24 minutes of playing time.

The Seahawks extended a 29-20 halftime lead to as much as 18 points in the second half. That bulge came at 46-28 with 12:28 left. Then came a cold spell while Baltimore heated up to narrow the gap to 48-38 with 7:05 remaining. A Davis free throw and five straight points from the reliable Tobin rebuilt the Seahawk lead to 16 at 54-38 with 4:18 to go. The winners waltzed to the foul line and victory from there.

In all, UNCW made only eight field goals after the break while converting 21 of 28 free throws. The Seahawks had only 17 field goals all night.

"Everyone felt very badly about Monday night," said Gibson, "but they did well tonight under some adverse circumstances. This win should help us mentally as we go into the Old Dominion game Saturday."

UNCW takes on the highly-regarded Monarchs in Norfolk at 7:30 Saturday evening before returning to Trask Coliseum on Dec. 16 to host James Madison.

Seahawks Set Out -- Again -- To Reach 20-Win Mark

With suitcases packed, the UNC-Wilmington Seahawks embark on the 1979-80 season seeking to reach the 20-win mark that has eluded them by the thinnest of margins the past two years.

Three starters return from last year's 19-8 club--the school's second straight 19-victory season. Four of 78-79's top five scorers and four last season's top six rebounders are also back. Facing the Seahawks, however, is a 29-game schedule that lists 17 games on the road with trips to 10 different states, including Alaska and Maine. Only a dozen contests will be played at home and half of those are in February.

Leading the returnees is 6'6 senior Garry Cooper (13.8 ppg, 7.1 reb.). Cooper, who has blocked more than 100 shots in his three previous years, missed much of last season's stretch drive with a broken foot, but should be back in full stride. The man who replaced Cooper last year, 6'7 junior Danny Davis, appears primed to make a name for himself this season. Davis' 8.1 scoring and 5.7 rebounding averages are deceiving; he totaled better than 12 points and nine boards per outing in last year's final 12 contests.

UNCW's third returning starter is 6'2 point guard Barry Taylor (9.7 ppg, 101 assists), who will need to take on more of the scoring load this season. Joining him in the backcourt will likely be either 6'4 senior John Haskins (8.0 ppg) or 6'3 soph Dennis Tobin (3.6 ppg). Haskins can also play the small forward slot.

UNCW's recruiting efforts produced a pair of talented twins from East Peoria, Ill., Scott (6'7) and Mike (6'5) Prudhoe, who will give the team a great deal of versatility. Another outstanding prospect is 6'4 Shawn Williams from Washington, N.C., who will have a good shot at the small forward spot. He and the Prudhoes will battle returning reserves 6'6 Jimmy Denton and 6'0 John Calipari for playing time.

"We won't scare anybody with our size," Coach Mel Gibson says, "but unless we have another serious injury to one of our frontline people, we will be all right."

"I look for outstanding years from our three seniors (Cooper, Taylor, Haskins), and I believe Danny Davis is really going to impress some people. We brought in three freshmen and it will take time for them to adjust, but all played in winning high school programs and should contribute before the year is too far along.

"Not being in a conference hurts us in our scheduling and we're doing a lot of traveling to play the type of competition we want. If we can play with pose on the road, though, we can have another very fine season."

ASSISTANT RICK HOLDT. As Mel Gibson's number one assistant, Coach Rick Holdt fills many roles in the UNCW basketball program. His responsibilities include scouting Seahawk opponents, heading up the year-round recruiting campaign, and, of course, assisting Gibson in practice instruction as well as actual game strategy. A native of Paramus, N.J., Holdt played collegiately at North Carolina State and captained the 27-0 Wolfpack squad which finished second in the nation in 1973. He is entering his third year at UNCW.

HEAD COACH MEL GIBSON

Now entering his eighth season at UNCW, Coach Mel Gibson has been the motivating force behind the Seahawks' rapid ascension into NCAA Division One success the past three years. His squad's 19-8 mark a year ago is exceeded by only the previous season's 19-7 record in UNCW history. Before coming to Wilmington in 1971, Gibson also led Baptist College in Charleston, S.C., to its all-time best record, 18-7, in 1969-70.

Foremost among Gibson's accomplishments are the UNCW stack offense, which helped the Seahawks to national rankings in field goal percentage in two of the past three seasons, and also his "tease-delay" offense, a strategy which is now being emulated by numerous coaches throughout the South.

A native of Rockingham, N.C., Gibson earned NAIA All-America honors at Western Carolina in 1963 and was a second-round draft pick of the Los Angeles Lakers that same year.

FREEDOM AT POINT ZERO Has Jefferson Starship 'Rockin' 'n' Rollin' Again'

Paul Kantner has been through a lot of changes since 1965 when he and Marty Balin got the original Jefferson Airplane off the ground. The following year saw Grace Slick replace a pregnant Signe Toby Anderson, and Spencer Dryden replace a Moby Grape-bound Skip Spence at drums. This remained, along with Kantner, Balin, Jorma Kaukonen, and duck "Eyebrows" Casady, the heart of San Francisco's finest band. By 1970-1971 Balin and Dryden were gone, with the latter being replaced by Jory Covington, who was in turn replaced by former Turtle, Johnny Barbata. Fiddler Papa John Creech came aboard in 1971 and former quicksilver Messenger Service bassist, David Freiberg, latched on in 1973 as Marty's belated replacement. But by then the fire had left the Airplane as Jack and Jorma made their pet passion, Hot Tuna, a full-time gig.

From the ashes rose a new band, christened Jefferson Starship by old-timers Kantner and Slick, who still had the services of Barbata, Papa John and Freiberg, along with new blood Craig Chaquito and Pete Sears. Their 1974 debut LP, Dragon Fly, featured a guest vocal by Marty Balin, and by the next LP, Red Octopus, he had once again been incorporated as a permanent member. This lineup lasted until mid-1978 suffering only the loss of Papa John, when the Starship's future seemed in certain jeopardy as first Grace Slick, then Marty Balin, departed. This coupled with Barbata's disabling auto accident and 1977's dismal Earth album, appeared to make Kantner and Co. candidates for the Airplane/Starship bone yard.

The voices of doom have now been silenced as this year's LP Freedom at Point Zero is the best album the Starship has ever released. Paul Kantner is still around contributing rhythm guitar and vocals. He's flanked by Craig Chaquito (Lead guitar), Pete Sears (bass and keyboards/vocals), David Freiberg (Bass/keyboards/vocals), and new faces Ansley Danbar (drums) and former Elvin Bishop lead vocalist Mickey (Fooled Around and Fell in Love) Thomas. Contrary to speculation, the Starship will miss neither Balin nor Slick, as Thomas is proving more than adequate. His vocals are stronger and fuller than Balin's and he can hit the highs that Slick hasn't hit in years.

The single release "Jane" opens side one and rocks as Chaquito and Thomas set the pace following a patented Kantner intro. The rock continues on "Lightning Rose," a Kantner composed song, highlighted by a smooth Chaquito solo. Next is "Things to Come," a straight rock tune, complete with power chords and tight harmonies. It also serves as a showcase for Thomas, who demonstrates why Slick won't be missed. The final track on the side is "Awakening" and guarantees to do exactly that as Chaquito illustrates that he's easily one of the most underrated guitarists in the rock field.

"Girl with The Hungry Eyes" introduces side two and is the album's best song. It's unmistakably vintage Kantner, proof that he can write about more than revolutions. "Just the Same," ensues with a brief Tubular Bell type intro. It's a powerful, swaying song cut in the mold of "Hyperdrive" from Dragon Fly. Songs that expound on the virtues of rock 'n' roll are usually good for little except the circular file, but "Rock Music" as scant few others (most notably Zep's "Rock 'n' Roll") should be remembered as a definite exception because it is good rock 'n' roll. "Fading Lady Light" follows and is almost a ballad reminiscent of something that may have been at home on Crown of Creation. Its the weak link in an otherwise strong chain. The title track "Freedom at Point Zero" closes the album and title alone should be a tip-off that it's a Kantner song. It's simply a rock 'n' roll song that recalls past glories like "Volunteers."

With so many acts releasing half-baked ideas, it's a joy to hear good rock 'n' roll, especially from old favorites who know how to do it. The difference between Freedom at Point Zero and their last studio effort Earth is that Paul Kantner is once again running the show. Marty Balin seemed intent to transform the Starship into a Bay area Stax act and Earth was a clear case of that. Kantner wrote or co-wrote five of the nine new songs, with the remainder being composed primarily of

Talking Too Much, Could Lead To Trouble

I was staggering down the sidewalk, fresh from a session with my friendly dentist. Trailing bloody gauze (root canals are such fun) and moaning softly, I passed a person I know slightly (very slightly, as it turned out). "Hi!" he grinned, slicker than my front tire. "Howzit going?"

Deciding maybe he had a vision problem I was unaware of, I smile bloodily and said, "Swell, thanks."

He nodded happily. "We'll have to get together some time, you take care now." I didn't bother telling him I was already too busy just taking care of my three remaining molars. Some people just don't want to know your problems.

Get the picture? Listening seems to be a lost art, right up there with juggling and corn-shucking. If you think I'm kidding, try it yourself. Next time someone yaps, "How are you?" snap back. "Terminal, but do you care?" (Do not try this in a cancer ward). Chances are you'll get a cheery grin along with "have a nice day!" Just once I wish somebody would wish me a nice lifetime—why be stingy?

Okay, since we aren't listening to each other anymore, what had hold of America's eardrums? I found out when a middle-aged taxi-driver zoomed by singing "... take the long way home, take the long way home!" Then I saw a girl clutching a transistor radio to her ear, humming along with the commercials. Later that afternoon my mailman handed me two packages, crooning, "I'll never be your beast of burden."

Me. I could do without a radio. I was strong ... I was invincible. I was a real sucker. Suddenly my car's so-called stereo system quietly short-circuited itself and died somewhere on South 17th Street. I broke out in giant hives and my ears rang constantly. My throat was raw from humming and I would have sold my sister for a portable cassette deck. At traffic lights I leaned out the window and begged other drivers to turn up their radios. At one point I went so far as to sing and immediately caused a three-car collision.

I was on the verge of a nervous breakdown when a wild man cleverly twisted the "volume" knob upwards. Lo and behold, instant funk. What relief! Once again I could tap my brakes to the beat of "Lay Down Sally". Life was good.

By now, I'm convinced. Why bother with conversation when you can hum along with Herb Alpert and his magic trumpet? What's the use in making small talk when Stevie Nicks is purring in your ear?

At least now it's clear (isn't it?) why idle chit-chat is deadlier than the jumpsuit. Everyone is busily marching to a different drum! (With apologies to Linda Ronstadt. . .)

firms became evident when the Illinois attorney general's office investigated Pacific Research for four months in 1978. Selling term papers in Illinois is illegal, so the attorney general's office, according to staffer Mary McCullagh, bought and received two papers from the firm in order to prove the firm was breaking the law.

Once the papers arrived, it became a mail fraud case. Yet, there was enough of a question about Pacific Research's action that the attorney general's office simply dropped the investigation.

According to a 1973 Appeals Court decision in U.S. v. International Term Papers, the firm doesn't defraud anyone unless it "contemplates a 'scheme' which involves misrepresentation based on the materials (the firm) sends."

That's why the firms insist of publicly calling their wares "research", rather than term papers. By doing so, they evade responsibility for how the material is ultimately used. Buyers of Pacific Research materials, for one, get a contract which swears the giver is getting data "intended to be used solely for research and reference purposes."

It is apparently a little harder to maintain the distinction within the organization, though. According to a Pacific Research staffer, fewer than a fifth of the contracts are ever signed by the buyers. Two of the form letters sent over the signature of Shirley Jay, director of custom research for the company, refer to delivering a "paper", not research.

Nevertheless, prosecutors still haven't found a way to halt the firms. The demand for the firms' services, meanwhile, seems to be strong, and the entrepreneurs maintain the demand sanctions their continued operations.

Students are entitled to buy research from John Hopkins of Cambridge, Mass.

Give a Special Gift This Season--

The holidays are a time when many people volunteer time and resources to help the less fortunate members of our community. The Student Activities Office (room 105 in the Pub) can assist any group or individual seeking ways to help others have a merrier Christmas and a happier New Year. Group projects, individual visitation, or providing gifts are examples of needed services, all of which can be tailored to the amount of time you or your group have available. It's not too late to give a special gift this season!

Student Union Hours Extended

The recent addition of comfortable lounge furniture to the Student Union's main area downstairs has attracted a number of students who find the location a convenient place to study. With this in mind, Linda Moore, Director of Student Activities, had decided to extend the Union's operating hours during the first part of exam week. The building will remain open until 2 AM Sunday, the 10th, through Wednesday, the 12th.

Along with a quiet, comfortable lounge, the Union will also provide a place to eat and/or play a game of pool, backgammon, chess, foosball, or ping pong. However, the snack bar in the Good Wood Tavern will only be open from 10 AM to midnight, beginning Sunday the 10th on a trial basis. It is hoped that student support of the food operation will allow it to open late during the other three days as well. Drinks, hot and cold sandwiches, and snack items will be served.

Keep the Student Union in mind as you begin studying for exams. It should provide a good alternative to the "same old four walls"!

smorgasbord of courses from love to basket-weaving that students can select according to their fancy. They do not normally fall within any general structure of expected historical understanding, and their very existence is taken to free more traditional courses from any responsibility to deal with female experience."

"A review of all 27 college texts in American History on the market in 1970 showed an average of 5 pages per thousand were devoted to women, and the treatment was usually superficial or insulting," she said.

Since 1970, interest in women's history has caused publishers to respond by "splicing in short pieces on notable women, adding a lot of photographs, and mentioning the upheavals of the 1970's," said Fox-Genovese. But of the college survey teachers, "most confessed to an uneasy awareness that an occasional anecdote about Betsy Ross in the lecture on George Washington did not suffice."

"One reason for the difficulty in adjusting is that the best-selling texts are revisions of books written years ago," and "subsequent revisions of these texts could only make superficial changes," she said. Also, "as a general rule, the teachers of college surveys at various institutions received their doctoral training before women's history had become established as a field."

"It is no longer possible to justify the exclusion of women from the basic surveys on the grounds that we do not have enough material . . . The problem is one of selection, emphasis, interpretation, and presentation," said Fox-Genovese.

It is these drawbacks that the planners of the "Integration of Women Project" are trying to overcome. Since they have not "found a textbook that begins to do justice to the problem," they are gathering information to be incorporated into curriculum packets for each semester unit of the American and European survey courses.

Then a conference will be held, probably in March, 1980, at either the University of Rochester or Indiana University, which two representatives of each participating college will attend. The purpose of the conference is to review the curriculum packets and make any necessary changes before final distribution, which should be achieved by May, 1980.

The packets, which will be used with the current texts, will show "how the grand themes can be approached from a female perspective. Lecture outlines will show how material on women can be included. The teacher will receive suggested student paper themes, annotated lists of supplementary readings for both teacher and students, and interpretive material that can be incorporated into standard lectures. As a result, the teacher will not have to scrap texts and lecture notes that have proven effective in the past," said Fox-Genovese.

The participating institutions were selected from five categories intended to represent a broad cross-section of different regions and student groups. The categories are Public Ph.D. Granting Institutions, Private Ph.D. Granting Institutions, Public Non-Ph.D. Granting Institutions, Private Non-Ph.D. Granting Institutions, and Two Year Institutions.

The four professors at UNCW, a Public Non-Ph.D. Granting Institution, who will be using the program in their survey courses are Dr. Richard Cooper, Dr. Carol Fink, Dr. Phillip McGuire, and Dr. Robert Toplin. Two of them will go to the conference in March, but so far, which two has not yet been decided.

After applying the curriculum packets to their survey courses for one year, each institution will send two representatives to a follow-up conference to evaluate the program's success. If the results are favorable, the program planners hope to be able to stage further conferences in which the original twenty institutions would share their experiences with others.

Elizabeth Fox-Genovese said that if the program is successful, it "should have a significant impact on the integration of women into the curriculum as well as on the teaching of the basic surveys. It should lead to the writing of next textbooks, the development of new secondary and primary sources for teaching, and the development of new audio-visual aids . . . And if the project does succeed in revitalizing the surveys by making them more attune to the contemporary culture, it will help to renew interest in history in the culture at large."

STUDENTS BRAVING

Back on the Track with WLOZ

by Susan Hardison

For a short time, the furor of WLOZ was uncertain, but a few changes have given WLOZ a face lift. Between remodeling the control and production rooms, and the hard work and dedication of a competent managerial staff and personnel, WLOZ has gained a new lease on a productive life.

If you feel that you are in the dark about how a radio station "operated," you are not alone. According to John Kramer, WLOZ's General Manager, the biggest migraine is to "persuade the Student Gover-ment to pass legislation to make WLOZ a SGA business, not a club. We are funded in the name of the administration, not the SGA." Kramer reiterates that "WLOZ is not a club, it is a business."

WLOZ is a professional, non-commercial radio station operated by students for students and the public.

John Kramer has an extensive background in radio broadcasting. He is responsible for managing WLOZ and the overall direction of the station and its staff. Paul Jackson, the program director, oversees the overall program direction. This includes making use of all available air time, and that program schedules are run properly. Operations manager Martin Brown, makes sure the station operates smoothly and consistently. News Director Jeff Haas' task is to gather, edit, and present news items for the news slots during the day, and supervise his news staff. Ray Kriegbaum is WLOZ's promotions manager. His main concern is the station's publicity and public relations. Business Manager Mark Meekins is responsible for all of the station's financial business.

WLOZ offers a variety of musical programs in order to appease the many appetites of the station's audience. "With WLOZ's variety of musical programs," states Program Director Paul Jackson, "We will attempt to keep our audience well informed." WLOZ recently filed for a license to increase power to 150 watts effective January 1, 1980, to

Is there life after registration?

By Julie Russ

Lines are as much a part of student life as cafeteria-induced heartburn. Virtually every student at UNCW has been forced to spend excruciating hours in a line that moves with all the speed of an arthritic snail. The type of queue most familiar to all is that slow-motion marathon called registration.

According to Director of Admissions and Records Dorothy Marshall, approximately 650 students registered for classes January 7. This number includes 50 graduate students.

Students can continue to register through January 16 "but of course the class selection is more limited", cautioned Marshall.

"About 3200 students pre-registered and paid their fees," she continued. "Those students who were unable to pay their fees on time, or are enrolling at UNCW for the first time have to stand in line in order to register." She commented that although registration was "wearying" it ran "rather smoothly this time. There were no problems, or any cases of frostbite"--referring to those determined few who camped out overnight in hopes of being first in line the next morning.

Commented Dean of Students Ralph Parker, "The whole thing went well, there were no problems as far as I could detect. Morning registration, from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m., was held in Hanover Hall, and then registration for undergraduates was held in the Registrar's office until late afternoon."

There seems to be a difference of opinion between students and faculty as to what constitutes a smoothly-run operation. Cam Johnson, a freshman, complained, "One friend of mine camped out overnight and yet when he finally got inside the crowd was so dense he could barely reach his wallet to pull out his ID." Johnson remarked, "I think the whole system is too unorganized. Master cards should be sent to students in the mail."

Waylon to Visit Trask Jan. 25

Waylon was four when Japan bombed Pearl Harbor. The Jennings family picked some cotton and guitar and made it through. One of four sons, Waylon picked more guitar than cotton.

"Good Time Ladies Man" was fourteen year-old Waylon's first tune. It was composed just months before he hit the airwaves as a teen disc jockey on KNOW in Littlefield, Texas.

Near the end of '58, with Holly producing and King Curtis blowing sax, Waylon recorded "Joel Blon" B/W "When Sin Stops," his first and last solo on the Brunswick label. "My first record, and my first bomb. I hope they don't find it and release it again."

WKLL in Lubbock was the retreat Waylon chose while he and millions of music fans let time heal the wounds from that air castastrophe involving Buddy Holly. With comedian jock, Don Bowman, Waylon amused his audience by testing the limits of the FCC Code. Management posted notice: "Waylon and Don are not allowed in the Control Room at the same time while on the air!"

When Trend Records of Lubbock offered to record him in Phoenix, Waylon left Texas, and hasn't lived there since. As an employee of Radio KHAT, and other less-established concerns, he sweated his way into the far-left corner of Country Music and regional fame which Phoenix regards as part of its heritage.

Phoenix bore The Waylors, a group which has changed members, with one significant exception: Richie Albright's drums, which have been the foundation of Waylon's music since '64. The two men have the rare ability to share music and business inside a well-worn friendship. "He's been through the same years and paid the same dues as I have. He was always there; without him, I couldn't have made it." Their music crossed the desert to Hollywood. A&M was label

AN EDITORIAL

ANOTHER SLAP IN THE FACE

In the continuing mainstream of political far-American attention is once again taken, quite reluctantly, to the annoying events in the Middle East. Just like sands slipping through the hour glass, so fall the American people's tolerance to the Iranian behavior in the Third World.

The Iranian revolution in the Middle East, described as the "Iranian Crisis," has become a major issue for many, and its impact on the world is being felt.

The Iranian revolution in the United States has caused the American people to question
the actions of the Iranian government.
The Iranian government, under the leadership of Ayatollah Khomeini, has been accused of human rights violations, including the execution of political prisoners and the seizure of property.

The Iranian revolution in the United States
has caused the American people to question
the actions of the Iranian government.
The Iranian government, under the leadership of Ayatollah Khomeini, has been accused of human rights violations, including the execution of political prisoners and the seizure of property.

Evidently, while wallowing in an atmosphere of new-found "crude" wealth, this postage stamp nation of demented people, led by equally demented and always fanatical, pseudo-religious "Kohementi," decided to challenge a nation that held no ill will for the Iranian people, and had in fact sought to bring that backward nation into the 20th century. This "cultural spasm" in Iran threatens to irreparably damage a needed relationship with the rest of the civilized World. Already the world community has, for the most part, denounced Iran, and international business is tightening their credit.

Adding "fuel" to the "spy" issue, the Iranians decided to charge that the great ogre America was offering their previous leader, the Shah, political asylum. Contrary to Iranian belief, well publicized reality shows that the shah needed to visit America to obtain badly needed medical care. The shah had been a strong ally of the United States for many years, and medical treatment of this sort is properly in accordance with internationally accepted laws and ethical standards of humanitarian treatment. Even then, the Shah was admitted for short-term (medical) treatment.

Now that the shah is in Panama, one would think that the "students" would have no reason for holding Americans hostage.
But no such luck. It seems that these fanatical people want to squeeze the world's attention for their endlessly, conflicting tirades of confused, misinformed values.

Meanwhile, in another arid country across the border, an additional problem faces the Carter administration. This situation is surfacing as the "pink stain" crawls over Afghanistan. The Russians have an imposing force of over 100,000 battle-hardened troops, and have complete control over all principle roads and towns in that country. This is another cold, fierce wind from the Soviet climes across the jagged land of Afghanistan, and vaguely reminiscent of the infamous occupation of Poland.

The Iranian crisis, along with this new Russian aggression in Afghanistan will no doubt be the supreme test of the Carter administration and will obviously effect the outcome of the November elections. Should the Peanut man crack under the pressure, he will be on the first Amtrak back to the Peach State, and Rosalyn will get to put family pants on, once again.

TO THE EDITOR:

I would like to welcome both the returning students and the new students back to the University of North Carolina at Wilmington for this the spring semester.

As we move into this new decade, I feel it is appropriate to reflect on one of the most rare of semesters which was last fall semester.

Like a reflection of political troubles in the early 1970's UNCW also experienced its first bout with charges of impeachment against SGA President Francis DeLuca.
This was the first trial for charges of impeachment brought against an SGA President ever in the sixteen campus UNC system. DeLuca was found innocent, but elected to resign later. Even with bad experiences I feel that lessons can be learned.
With all the problems that arose from the senate fight with DeLuca many glaring loop holes were discovered that are now being corrected.

This has made the SGA more efficient and correct in its endeavors. One such example was the outdated and unapproved SGA Constitution. A new streamlined and updated constitution has been prepared for student body and administration approval. This tedious and time consuming effort was completed by the constitution committee consisting of chairman Jack Allen, President Jon Faill, Pete Johnson, and Mike Stroud.

This past trouble, I hope, has caused us all to reexamine ourselves and our purpose. To never do anything that we would despise or think meanly of in another, but to always try to be self-respecting and conscience free.

Unfortunately half way through the semester UNCW experienced its first student tragedy in which our friend and fellow student Chip Gunter was fatally wounded
November 4, 1979. Chip's parents wanted me to tell you how much they thank you too as Chip was one of my best friends.

Many students have requested that the new dorm be named in honor of Chip, and I feel it should be. Vic-Chancellor Malloy and I will bring this worthy matter before the UNCW Board of Trustees meeting later this month.

With all this please don't forget another of my very best friends Jeff Nelligan who was seriously wounded on November 4. Jeff will be trying to return to school this semester after a long stay in the hospital. Jeff, we wish you luck, and we thank you for showing us what toughness and will power means.

I was very pleased this past semester by all of the freshmen and transfer students that wanted to take part in activities going on at UNCW. I have always been concerned with how to cure apathy, but last semester really turned apathy around. It is not hard to see how well activities went this semester, and the underlying cause is the added enthusiasm and unselfishness of students wanting to be part of their university.

A great step forward for the seniors this past semester was the way they stood up for what they wanted. I was proud to organize this bunch.

The Senior Class of 1980 can be proud to say that they had the first class meeting ever held in our eleven years as a university. For the first time all seniors were able to participate in a graduation survey in which they could express their feeling. The Graduation Convocation Advisory Committee made the motion to have all graduates names called this year. In following with the will-of-the-seniors (according to the survey) the committee also recommended by motion to have a guest speaker-of-note, and to have the commencement exercise inside Trask Coliseum where adequate seating would be provided for all guests. This could only come about by action and the seniors went after what they wanted and proved that strength is in numbers, and numbers only come by being involved.

The Seahawk is again under a new editor this semester. I supported Tricia Wallace in the editor selection because even though she is limited in experience she more than makes up for that with long hours and the desire to produce an informative weekly paper for us the student body. This is her first paper, so if you find fault I'm sure Tricia will be willing to make changes if warranted. Editorship is a tough assignment, but I'm sure Tricia will do an excellent job. We can all look forward to the very interesting and humorous stories by my favorite writer Julie Russ each week in the Seahawk.

The Fledgling (the campus yearbook) is making internal changes after Stacy Rogers resigned as editor. The Fledgling leadership has been assigned to two worthy veterans of the yearbook; Connie Butler and Dave Kermin. Connie and Dave will be co-editors and I think that you will be pleasantly surprised with the upcoming yearbook. Staff members are needed by the new editors so if you would like to give it a try stop by the Fledgling office. Seniors, this is really your yearbook so try to lend a helping hand to the Fledgling.

As a closing note remember that spring fever is coming (and everyone wants to hit the beach), so try to get your grades up while it's cold so if you slack up in April as most of us do) you won't be in such trouble when finals come in May. If you have problems with school or as a resident here, please don't hesitate to contact me at the SGA office upstairs in the Pub (a note will do if I'm not around). I hope that all of you will have a good semester.

New Fraternity

The Omega Psi Phi Fraternity on the campus of UNCW has been granted an undergraduate charter by National organization of Omega Psi Phi. The charter was founded on the campus as of Dec. 31, 1979.

The prestigious fraternity had its first charter line back in December of 1977 with seven inductees. Since that time the goals of the fraternity have been to establish chapter status at the university. Omega Psi Phi is the first black fraternity on the campus of UNCW. The chapter name of the fraternity charter is the Iota Lambda chapter of Omega Psi Phi.

In other news related to the Omega Psi Phi fraternity, Lloyd Bell was inducted into the fraternity on Dec. 31, 1979. Bell is a junior from Clinton majoring in chemistry.

Go One Better-Go Greek!

There are over 4,000 students here and whether you are a freshman, a transfer student, or even have been on campus for a couple of years, you may find that being just one in a school of several thousand can get a little lonely. Going Greek may be for you.

Greek life can offer you a chance to meet people and build friendships through working and sharing good times together with close groups of men and women just like you. Not only will you meet many people, but you will have a chance to know UNCW a little better by becoming involved in its activities.

UNCW's Greek System is made up of six fraternities and two sororities. Each one has a "personality" all its own. By getting to know us through rush parties and events, you will be able to choose the right one for you.

Your first priority is getting a solid education. Let's face it--that's why we're here. Then we have parties, formals, Greek Games, and Greek Week. On top of all that, we provide philanthropic services for many needy organizations in the community. Being Greek helps you develop as a leader and, we believe, as a

Think about it. We invite you to come out and see just what we can offer. You may be surprised. We don't claim that going Greek is for everyone, but it may be for you. If you have any questions, feel free to stop by Room 101 in the Pub or call ext. 2284 and someone will be happy to help you.

Running and writing

Many people say that running helps them psychologically, but for Mr. Bill Atwill it also does something else—it gives him inspirations for writing stories.

Mr. Atwill, a professor in UNCW's Department of English, says that he runs for the psychological benefits rather than physiological reasons. "It's therapy for me," he states.

But while he's running he also gets ideas for writing stories and poems.

Writing became interesting to him when he was a child in elementary school. "I've been interested in it from grade school. I came from a family of journalists," he explains.

Mr. Atwill, who came to UNCW in the fall of 1979, teaches mostly freshman composition courses. He is originally from Florida, where he completed his undergraduate studies in English at the University of South Florida. He received his masters degree from Florida Atlantic University.

This is the third teaching job he has had, the first being at the Florida Institute of Technology and the second at Mars Hill College.

Mr. Atwill likes to write and run, so it seems logical that he should teach composition and be the coach of UNCW's cross country team.

Teaching composition courses is exciting to him because "Writing is a means of self-discovery and self-expression."

Fiction is the type of writing he says he enjoys the most, although he writes poetry. A few years ago, he won an honorable mention in a national poetry contest.

Recently, two of his poems and one of his short stories were published.

Novels also appeal to him. He lists some of his favorite authors as John Gardner, Leo Tolstoy, John Fowles, and Eudora Welty.

Mr. Atwill's main goal as far as writing is concerned is "To write one novel for practice to get some of the bad habits out of my system and write something that is a good affirmative piece of fiction."

Like writing, his interest in running goes back quite a few years. He has been running "off and on" for 15 years. The primary reason he chose running over other athletic activities was because of his size. "I was fairly fast but not very big. Most sports that required size left me out. I was a sprinter in college and then took up running distances."

MR. ATWILL

Mr. Atwill says he has run everything from the 100 yard dash to marathons. Usually, he finishes in the top ten to fifteen percent. He averages about forty miles a week, which he figures is half of what he should be doing.

Coaching the cross country team is "rewarding" to Mr. Atwill.

"You see people with much more talent than you," he states.

Mr. Atwill feels that this year was very "formative" for UNCW's team, which was made up mostly of freshmen and sophomores that have "excellent potential." "By the end of the season," he remarks, "we were beating other schools."

Mr. Atwill's philosophy of coaching is not to "Rant and rave" like some football coaches. "I'm low key. The will be the best that you can have got to be within the runner."

Being an active writer and runner is time consuming. Mr. Atwill finds time for both, although he admits that his writing has suffered. "I have to write weekends and holidays. Running doesn't take that much of a day. You're talking about two hours a day at maximum. Writing is much more involved. You have to approach it like a job."

Mr. Atwill is really satisfied with UNCW, partly because it is located in a region similar to that of his home state. "I love UNCW. I love coastal environments. It's a stimulating place for me. There are a lot of good people in this English department and they've kind of spurred me on."

Although Mr. Atwill likes the Wilmington area, his chances for staying a long time are remote. He is aware that very shortly he will have to leave to get a doctorate.

He says his dream is to write and publish as much as he can.

And someday, he would like to "stay healthy enough and have enough money to enter the Honolulu Marathon."

Iranian threats in Texas

KINGSVILLE, TX (CPS)--Anti-Iranian sentiment on campus has boiled over into numerous demonstrations since the Americans were taken hostage in Teheran Nov. 4, but nowhere has violence been threatened more than at Texas A&M, a campus of 68400 students.

Simon Garza notes that "Things are very, very hot here."

Garza knows because his life was threatened after he told a campus radio station audience that "The American people have finally come to the conclusion that we are not going to be pushed around. This time we are going to push back."

While Garza, who is production manager at the station, KTAL, cedes the remark was not altogether appropriate for a news reporter, he defends it as "an accurate commentary on student sentiment on the campus."

Later that night, Garza got a call at his dorm room. "You are a Mexican puppet of the Shah," a voice told him in broken English. "We are going to kill you, and we are going to kill the Shah."

Two subsequent calls that night contained threats against Garza and the radio station, which the voice promised to bomb. Garza was then escorted off campus, and temporarily housed at a faculty member's residence.

Since then, an Anti-Iranian Student Association has grown to about 300 members, according to Garza. He adds that classes are being disturbed by anti-Iranian sentiment. There are some 200 Iranians registered here.

The tension, Garza reports, is "so thick you could cut it."

"The situation has been really overblown," observes Assistant Foreign Student Counselor Nathan Pierce. Pierce, who wasn't aware of the threats against Garza and the radio station, is more concerned about Iranian reaction to the Immigration and Naturalization Service agents who arrived on campus last week to check for out-of-status students.

Thus far, "it's going as well as can be expected. The Iranians have acted in a tremendously mature fashion."

Garza agrees to a certain extent. "These are people I play soccer with. Some of them say that the people making trouble are 'Sons of S.A.V.A.K.' (the Shah's secret police), and they're just trying to stir things up."

Garza, in the meantime, cautiously moved back into his dorm room last week.

Video Network

There is a familiar, but new, organization on campus this semester. It is called Instant Replay: The UNCW Video Network.

There have been many comments from students concerning the many video cameras that have appeared apparently over night.

The UNCW Video Network has many goals this year. The network wishes to provide a new mode of communication on our campus.

The cameras will be out filming various student activities, and other forms of entertainment that happen to take place at UNCW. There will be television monitors set up in the cafeteria, snack bar, and in the Pub to show all the video broadcasts on a regular basis.

We invite all interested students to join the UNCW Video Network.

We also invite clubs and organizations to drop by our studio in K-109 and sign up for activities that they feel are of interest to students.

Rules you should know

The University's Safety Office joins with the rest of the campus in welcoming the 1980 class. We feel that observation of the following basic safety and health regulations will enhance everyone's enjoyment of campus facilities:

BICYCLES: Students are encouraged to use bicycles on campus, but should acquaint themselves with bike safety regulations and parking rules. These are posted on campus bulletin boards.

PETS: While the university sympathizes with the desire of many students to have their pets on campus, the safety and welfare of the UNCW community has made it necessary to insist that pets such as cats and dogs are not to be housed in the dorms. This ruling comes from the Wilmington Health Department, with which we must comply. The general rule is that no dogs shall be brought on campus except seeing-eye dogs in the performance of their duty and dogs who accompany their masters en route to another destination and remain in a car or on a leash. Under no circumstances is a dog permitted to run loose or be brought into a building.

SMOKING: Smoking in classrooms is discouraged and should be confined to the hallways, where receptacles are provided, or outside the buildings.

FOOD AND DRINK: Food and drink should not be brought into classrooms in order to avoid accidents that may occur where beverages have spilled and health problems resulting from insects and vermin attracted to food crumbs or wrappers.

FIRE DOORS: Fire doors, usually located just inside the main doors leading to the outside of a building, must be kept closed at all times in compliance with a city ordinance.

OFF-LIMITS PROPERTY: The eastern sector of the university's property, which is undeveloped, should not be used for any purpose by students. Comprising approximately 60 percent of the total campus, the area is posted with "No Trespassing" signs, which should be observed. Students are, however, encouraged to visit the Blue-thorned Wildflower Preserve adjacent to the campus bookstore.

PRESIDENT'S REPORT

By Jen Falli

Welcome back to another semester of fun and studies. I hope everyone's vacation was as enjoyable as mine. This spring semester promises to be one of the most challenging one in many years. Several projects have been completed and several more begun.

The most important completed project is the proposed constitution. Copies are available in the SGA office. The constitution does have some problems and is not perfect, so everyone is encouraged to look it over and comment on it.

Another important project is the completion of the inventory of SGA property. We are in the process of cataloging the property cards which will enable the SGA to keep better track of our equipment.

The good intentions of all of us in student government will be forgotten without your help. Student government is for students and by students. Without your support and active participation, we will not succeed. Take a part in what goes on around you and find out what college is really about.

Several projects are planned for the spring that need your help. First is cataloging all the operating procedures of the SGA. This is an enormous undertaking that will require the help of several students. Second is the completion of a property control system. Now that we know what we have, we need to set up a system to maintain and control our equipment. There are also several smaller projects that are equally important, such as dorm parking, teacher/course evaluations, by-laws for the constitution, a student consumer action team, the UNCW polling agency, and the list could go on.

Just before the fall final exams, student government hired a new clerk/typist to replace Joyce Jackson. Her name is Susan Goodrum and comes to us from W. R. Grace. Please feel free to come up to the SGA office and introduce yourself.

Iranians pay the price

(CPS)-- "The bill is our way of venting our feelings about the way they're treating our people over there."

The bill, introduced in the Arizona State House of Representatives, would do nothing less than raise tuition for Iranian students at state schools to about $10,000 per semester. Bill sponsor Jim Cooper declared, "We're just letting people know."

It's just one way higher education administrators and legislators are sending Iranians a message. Two colleges even attempted to bar Iranians from their campuses. "I think the student body is close to 100 percent against the Iranians being here," Ralph Savage, president of the Chattahoochee Valley Community College in Phenix City, Alabama, told College Press Service.

Savage had moved to ban all Iranian students from enrolling for winter quarter at the 2500-student campus. There were 12 Iranians enrolled for fall quarter.

Savage rescinded his order after talks with U.S. State Department officials.

Similarly, the board of Greenville Technical College in Greenville, S.C., passed and then rescinded an order banning Iranians from winter registration.

"The board took the action because of their sentiments about the hostages," explains Dr. Thomas Barton, president of the college, which currently has 104 Iranians on campus. The ban was to last until the hostages were released from the American embassy in Tehran.

Soon after the resolution passed, however, the South Carolina attorney general's office told Barton that Greenville stood to lose all its federal funding if it discriminated against Iranians. The board consequently rescinded the resolution a week after passing it.

The resolution had little to do with the conduct of Iranians on the Greenville campus. "They have been very well behaved," Barton observes. "We haven't had any problems. But if there were, we'd get rid of them very quickly."

Voiding the ban on Iranians hasn't softened Chattahoochee's resolve to avoid trouble, either. "They put on a demonstration here," he asserts, "and I'll stick them off campus. That goes for Americans or Iranians."

Savage says the only reason he rescinded the ban was because the State Dept. warned him it could be "an impetus to other colleges in the United States to follow suit, and thereby affect more than 50,000 Iranian students." If that happened, negotiations with Iran could be inhibited.

The Arizona effort to harass Iranian students isn't expected to be any longer-lasting than the bannings at Chattahoochee and Greenville.

Rep. Cooper, who chairs the House Education Committee, doesn't expect the full legislature to approve the higher tuition bill, though he claims the sentiment behind the bill has a lot of support. "I've had a lot of good comments. It's all because of the frustration people feel right now."

The bill would charge Iranians in Arizona state schools $1000 per credit hour per semester. Those Iranians carrying the standard load of 12 credits could face tuition charges of more than $20,000 per year.

Opportunities

The Office of Continuing Education will sponsor several courses in gymnastics this semester, all taught by Mr. Attila B. Horvath and taking place in Hanover Hall. Ability levels range from pre-gymnastics (emphasizing the development of primary motor skills) through advanced, including two teams for competition. Fees vary.

For more information on dates, times, and skill evaluations, call the Office of Continuing Education at 791-4330, ext. 2195.

SGA REPORT

The first regular meeting of the UNCW Student Legislature was held on Thursday, Jan. 10 at 7 p.m. in C218.

Vice-president Glen Downs opened the meeting with the Standing Committee reports, the first of which was from Pete Divoky, who, speaking for the program board, announced that there will be a special New Year's party to celebrate New Year's for those of us who weren't here. He also mentioned some upcoming films and the Waylon Jennings concert next week. The next report came from Jessie Sanders, chair of the Finance Committee and treasurer of the SGA. Jessie explained that the SGA and all other fund seeking groups must practice frugality this semester. The VP's report included a reminder that there are two senator-at large, and one senior senator seats open.

Chief Justice Browne welcomed all students back to school on behalf of the judicial branch of the SGA.

The high point of the meeting came when President Falli gave his "State of The University Address". The Address included a retrospect of last years events, from the turnover in the SGA to the news of a transmitter blow-up at the end of the year at WLOZ. There was no outstanding old business, so the VP moved directly into "new business", where Senator Jack Allen announced that the new SGA constitutions are available and will be debated on the next meeting, which will be at 6 p.m. because of the basketball game. All students are encouraged to attend and be part of this historic event.

No dogs on campus

In the interests and welfare of the majority of people who are associated with and who work for the University it has become necessary to establish the following rules concerning the presence of dogs on our campus.

The General Basic Ruling is: NO DOGS SHALL BE BROUGHT ON CAMPUS. The exceptions to this ruling are cited below:

1. "Seeing Eye" dogs in the performance of their duty.
2. Dogs who accompany their masters enroute to another destination and remain in a car. Under NO circumstances shall a dog run loose or be brought into any dormitory, library or any other type of building on campus.

(Although dogs are referred to specifically, this policy applies to all "pets" in the broad context of the term.)

SEAHAWK MEN CAPTURE SIENA

For the first time in their three-plus seasons as a Division One member, the UNCW Seahawks were participants in a midseason tournament this past weekend in Albany, NY.

The affair was the Siena College Invitational, and the Hawks weren't about to let the opportunity slip away to win an honest-to-goodness championship.

Behind the uncanny outside shooting of tourney Most Valuable Player Barry Taylor and key contributions from a number of other players, UNCW prevailed in a 77-73 overtime win over Howard University, then downed the host Siena Indians, 66-62, for the title.

"We made it exciting both nights," Seahawk coach Mel Gibson said. "It took two fine efforts to win and a lot of big plays in critical situations."

Barry deservedly was selected the MVP but everyone had in a hand in the two wins. Even our people on the bench who did not get into the games were fired up and really gave us great support.

"I'm very happy for our players, and I feel that the power and confidence we developed last week will help us the rest of the season."

The two victories raised the Seahawk record to 7-3 for the year. Prior to Christmas, UNCW traveled to Alaska and defeated the University of Alaska twice, 67-64 and 66-63 in double overtime. A 70-60 defeat at Eastern Kentucky preceded the successful trip to New York.

In Friday's semi-final win over Howard (which visits Trask on Feb. 9), UNCW burst out to an 11-point lead in the first half behind the strong play of junior Danny Davis, who finished with a career-high 24 points and 11 rebounds.

Howard came back to cut the lead to three, 37-34, at the half, setting the stage for an incredibly close contest throughout the second half.

The largest point difference for the final 19 minutes of regulation play was just four points. UNCW lead by that margin, 61-57, with 7:18 to go, but four straight free throws by Howard tied the score.

The game was tied twice more at 63-63 and 65-65, before the Hawks held for the last shot. Taylor missed a turnaround and Davis' tip fell off at the buzzer, sending the contest into overtime.

Davis and Taylor had scored a bucket quickly, however, and UNCW never trailed in the extra period.

Taylor followed Davis in scoring with 16 points, while Shawn Williams added 13. Garry Cooper collected 10 rebounds.

Taylor followed Davis in scoring with 16 points, while Shawn Williams added 13. Garry Cooper collected 10 rebounds.

Siena easily defeated Delaware, 89-66, in the other first-round game, but the Indians wound up second in their own tournament for the third straight year, despite leading almost the entire second half.

For UNCW, though, it was a dramatic comeback win. The Seahawks trailed by 10 points, 56-46, with just over eight minutes to go, and by seven, 60-53, with 3:37 left.

"We really lost control of the game in the second half," Gibson admitted. "Dennis Tobin gave us a lift coming off the bench to keep it close, and we came up with the crucial plays at the end."

Siena, normally an aggressive run-and-shoot style club, chose to play a slower type of game against the Hawks, sagging back in a tight zone defense the entire contest, surrounding Davis and Cooper inside.

That left guards Taylor and Tobin with the shots, however, and the UNCW twosome responded with an amazing 16-for-25 shooting performance. From that 60-53 deficit, Taylor hit two long jumpers and Davis dunked one on the break to pull UNCW within one, 60-59, with 2:06 left.

Cooper had already fouled out and Davis had four, but the 6'7" junior rose to the occasion with a blocked shot which gave the Hawks possession again. Following a timeout, Taylor hit from the foul line to give UNCW the lead.

A Williams steal and free throw, then two pressure-packed foul shots by John Haskins with 17 seconds to go, sealed the comeback win.

UNCW was shut out of any selections to the all-tournament team except for Taylor's MVP award, while Siena and Howard both placed two players on the squad.

But as Danny Davis said following the trophy presentations, "We go the big one and that's the most important trophy of all—the one that says Championship Team."

The next UNCWhome game is tonight (Thursday, Jan. 17th), when North Carolina A&T comes to Trask Coliseum at 7:30 p.m.

BARRY TAYLOR DISPLAYS TROPHY

CHRISTOPH REBUILDS LADY HAWKS

In hopes of turning the women's basketball program around and re-establishing a winning tradition at UNCW, Marilyn Christoph has been hired to bolster a sagging record. Christoph is at the helm in first season here, but brings with her sixteen years of previous coaching experience.

Christoph left a very successful team from Pembroke University to take on the challenge of molding the Lady Hawks into a winner. With determined leadership behind them, the eighties should be a decade of continuous growth for the program. A winning season should not be too far off.

Christoph hopes that by rebuilding this season, she and cagers can "get the program on solid footing" while, "returning back to basics." The primary goal of the Lady Hawks this season is to regain respectability in the competitive Division II

With a 3-6 record thus far, things are looking better. An optimistic atmosphere permeates the team despite the record, the obvious influence of Christoph.

Hard play, hustle and teamwork are qualities that one should expect to see during any visit to watch the Lady Hawks.

Nine new players including freshman Linda Plum, who leads the team in both scoring and rebounding, brings talent and depth to the basketball program. Vertha Dixon, the number two scorer and rebounder lead the three returning last season.

Others noted for their fine play this season are Beth Pruitt, Linda Stuart, Darci Wilson, and Kathi Shands. With Kathy Smith and return of last year starter Janet Grady, the women's team has good depth and scoring power from the bench. Sarah Quick and Chris Haywood round out this year's roster and are developing well in the Christoph method discipline and teamwork.

All students are encouraged to come out and support the Lady Hawks as they bring exciting basketball back to UNCW. The thirty-second shot clock should assure non-stop action.

The Lady Hawks face North Carolina A&T in a double-header with the men tonight in Trask at 5:30p.m.

LADY SEAHAWKS PRACTICE OFFENSE

SWIMMERS UNITE TO GIVE VICTORY CHEER

SWIMMERS TURN ASU AWAY- AGAIN!

For the second straight year UNCW's swim team has defeated Appalachian State University. Both ASU and the Seahawks were returning to action after the Christmas break and UNCW came away with 67-44 win over their men and 86-49 win over their women.

This victory over rival ASU was the result of a new training technique employed by coach Allen last winter. Allen budgeted enough funds last year to include what may be a winter tradition for the team, a ten-day training session in Florida.

To avoid the cold weather and combine work with pleasure the 79-80 Seahawk Swimming team traveled to Orlando on December 27, to concentrate on training for their spring semester schedule. Teams such as Virginia Commonwealth, William & Mary, and tough Old Dominion necessitates training during the Christmas break.

The team returned home on January 6th to finish preparing for their traditional grudge meet with the Mountaineers. This was the team's first double, dual meet featuring both men and women in action following the break.

Coach Allen was optimistic before the meet and state, "...We worked hard (in Florida), the price has been paid, now we want to reap the benefits." Allen continues, "Last year the (ASU) took us for granted and were caught with their pants down."

Well, it happened again and the Seahawks now have a 3-1 record for the year. Their next swim meet is this Friday against Virginia Commonwealth at Richmond, Va. Their next home meet is on Saturday, January 26 against East Carolina. Everyone is invited to help the swimming Seahawks have their best year yet.

COOPER JAMS ASU

The trophies from the Siena Invitational Tournament were presented on Wednesday night January 9th and the Seahawks momentarily reflected back to the sweet victory of capturing the title in NEW York.

After the presentation, Appalachian State University and the 'Hawks took to the court. Ninety minutes later, ASU left losers and UNCW registered 61-44 win. This raised UNCW's record to 8-3 with three straight victories.

The first bucket was scored by John Fitch of ASU and then Senior Garry Cooper began the magic that led to a 17 point win over a baffled ASU team. Cooper slammed home UNCW's first points and both teams battled to a 12-12 tie with ten minutes left in the first half. Dennis Tobin then hit two straight jumpers and the 'Hawks did not trail again during the remainder of the contest.

Every 'Hawk on the floor contributed to the 26-21 half-time lead with John Haskins, Danny Davis, and Garry Cooper denying ASU many first-half buckets as they repeatedly blocked shots and out-hustled their opponents.

Danny Davis won the second-half tip-off and Shawn Williams fed "Coop" the ball for the first score. Walter Anderson brought ASU back to life as they pulled within two points at 30-28.

Following a timeout at 14:07 to go, the settled 'Hawks worked the ball inside to Cooper and the game would not be in question again.

The strong student support sparked a number of outstanding plays during the second-half. At one point, Trask Coliseum shook as Cooper slammed a massive two hand dunk with 12 minutes to go. Several steals by the 'Hawks sealed the win.

In the final minutes ASU turned the ball over many times and their hopes for victory slipped away.

Garry Cooper led the 'Hawks with 18 points and Shawn Williams and Barry Taylor followed with 10 apiece. Charles Payton led ASU with 14 points and Walter Anderson was contained below his 19.4 average with only 11 points.

LADY HAWKS NIP CENTRAL

The Lady Eagles of North Carolina Central came into Trask Coliseum last Monday night with a 4-5 record hoping to break even with a victory over the struggling 'Hawks. Sometimes things just don't turn out the way you plan them. Such was the case as the fired up Lady Hawks turned in a 59-point second half and cruised on to a 77-73 overtime win.

This was the first overtime win for the women this season and a number of outstanding defensive plays decided the contest.

The first half was all Central, as they repeatedly outtraced the Lady 'Hawks for a number of easy baskets. The result was a 33-18 half-time score in favor of Central.

With the Lady Eagles controlling the boards and hitting the outlets on the fast break, the 'Hawks were a team caught up in the confusion of transition basketball.

During the half-time break the Lady 'Hawks turned things around and at the beginning of the second half the women dominated the boards and began erasing the 15-point deficit.

Using the inside-outside play of guard Beth Pruitt and center Linda Plum, the 'Hawks battled the depth and quickness of the Lady Eagles to 56-56 all with 4:21 to play. The two teams then traded baskets for the remainder of regulation time.

Tied at 65-65 the Seahawks took control of the overtime period and played outstanding teamwork to defeat Central.

Linda Plum and Beth Pruitt led the Seahawk scoring with 22 points each. Plum also grabbed 12 rebounds.

Metrial Floyd led N.C. Central with a game high 24 points.

It's Just Another Day...

Ever have one of those days when you wake up bored? There you are in the same room, same bed, maybe even the same person in bed beside you. Same shredded sprouts for breakfast, same M&M's after breakfast (cafeteria crumbs don't reach their peak until early August). You're not even thirsty yet and already life is one big rut!

What can be done to liven up your days? Lots, actually. Skip the cafeteria suicide and have deviled ants for breakfast. Fire ants, for those of you with Mexican tastes. Wash them down with a glass of Wild Irish Rose and you're off to a roaring start.

Don't shower and don't bathe. Everyone has their own personal stench and why should you disguise your with Lifebuoy? Also skip the deodorant you want people to love you, not your Ban And forego the toothbrush; this should make things very interesting when you argue with your hygiene professor (get as close as possible for maximum results).

If you're normally shy, pinch a member of the opposite sex on the rear. And don't run. Stand, smile, and admit your guilt. You might get slapped but you also might get a date for Saturday night. Girls, if you usually wear a bra, go without. You'll never waste another weekend in front of the tv. If you don't wear a bra, do. Everyone will think you've had a few tucks taken and your mother will claim you as her daughter again.

Cross your eyes during a lecture. Tell the teacher you're having a cosmic convulsion and see how fast he excuses the class. Tell the guy next to you he's got a hickey (those cheap thrills are such fun!). Take up nail-biting (not yours, dummy, how about hers?). Draw dirty cartoons in the margin of your notes and offer them for public inspection. Ask your biology professor how babies are made. Ask your art teacher if anyone has ever sketched him in the nude. Offer to be the first.

Take a faculty member to lunch and maybe even pay. Tell the janitor he makes your knees wobble. Corner one of the maids and make lewd proposals. Go into the wrong locker room and act normal. This is always good for producing instant hysteria. Wrestle a vending machine... (use a can opener, if you have to, but win).

Go home in the middle of the day. Threaten to blackmail anybody you catch doing anything. Feed the guppies Spanish Fly, then call the vet and ask about group abortion rates. Unplug the stereo. Draw a moustache on Linda Ronstadt. Don't jog. Instead, challenge your roomie to a marathon crawl. Dismantle the tv set. Meditate in front of a poster of Richard Pryor.

Suddenly it's midnight and you've spent a whole day not being bored! But don't look back, keep a-trudgin' on. Now it's time for bed. Put your feet where you usually put your head. Crawl inside the pillowcase and pretend you're returning to the womb. Make nasty little chuckling noises so everyone will think you're doing kinky stuff. If you want to, do kinky stuff. Practice snoring, for when you get married. Then sleep with your eyelids propped open. And dream about lots of un-boring tomorrows!

The Fledgling needs your help. All students who have any desire at all to see a 1980 yearbook should come by our office in room 107 Student Services Building, and leave their names and phone numbers.

We need people who are willing to work, get tired, and do layout work, copy writing and photography. If you have never done any of the above work but are still willing to learn and work, we welcome you.

The staff and advisors need your help to make this yearbook than before. But most importantly, we need help making the book happen! Without your help, there may not be a 1979-80 Fledgling.

There will be a general meeting on January 23 at 5:00 p.m. at the Fledgling office.

HELP!

All persons interested should be here then. If you only have half an hour a week or can only come once in a while, but are still willing to work, we can use you.

Due to a shortage of packaging material seniors who wanted 1978-79 yearbooks mailed to them will be receiving their books late. We are sorry for the inconvenience but are trying to rectify it as soon as possible.

People who either forgot to get pictures made or who didn't like the last ones will be interested in knowing that during the week of February 4-8 pictures will be taken again. This is your last chance so get on out here in your duds and get it done.

Yearbook subscriptions will be on sale until March 28, 1980. The price will be $5.00 per book. This will be the last time you can get one as we are ordering the exact number of books we want.

HORSLIPS: THE MAN WHO BUILT AMERICA

Sometimes we move so quickly that we invariably miss something that we shouldn't. It can prove to be worthwhile to take a moment to stop and analyze our omissions, because we must know where we've been to know where we're going. Horslips is a case in point.

Formed in the late sixties in Dublin, Ireland, the group was originally a traditional Irish folk act that acquired electric instruments almost as an afterthought in order to garner television exposure. Since then they have released albums that have been generally exceptional in quality, although not totally unique as they have tendencies to sound like Jethro Tull, and to a lesser degree, the Moody Blues. The comparison to Tull exists only due to their use of the flute which is so closely identified with Ian Anderson, but Horslips is no Jethro Tull clone and is very much able to stand on their own merits.

The Man Who Built America is the culmination of their efforts, proving to be the perfect marriage of Irish folk music with the driving force of rock 'n' roll without sacrifice or compromise of either. Horslips consists of John Fean (guitar, vocals), Barry Devlin (bass, vocals), Jim Lockhart (keyboards, flute, vocals), Charles O'Connor (mandolin, fiddle, concertina, vocals), and Eamon Carr (drum). Together they've produced one of the most overlooked albums of the year as well as one of the best.

The LP opens with a cathedral organ intro that is quickly joined by John Fean power chords that would make Pete Townshend proud. "Loneliness" rocks constantly as the organ and guitar soar joined by O'Connor's fiddle providing a glimpse of what is might sound like if Papa John Creach joined. Horslips. "Tonight" begins with acappella harmony and is a good example of how the band blends the best of both worlds. The song features guitar and synthesizer solos that are nothing more than electric Irish jigs. Combining their music with traditional Irish lyrical themes like

"Wherever dreams are sold You'll find me spending all my money and time
On a pot of gold

but like the rainbow it's never ending".

They have an unbeatable combination. The third cut "I'll Be Waiting" lingers long after the song is over as it's the best one of the album. Fean clearly shows that it's not how fast or how many notes one plays, but rather which notes one plays, as his tasteful licks are reminiscent of Andy Powell's flowing leads on "Everybody Needs a Friend" from Wishbone Ash IV. "If it Takes All Night" is next and employs heavy use of the flute. Even though they're not a Tull copy, this song does sound as though it might have fit nicely in the Benefit era. The side closes with "Green Star Liner," and features a duel between Lockhart's harpsicord and O'Connor's fiddle, an unlikely pair in the genre or rock.

The title track starts off the second side, highlighted by the organ, tight harmonies, and power chords. It leads into "Homesick", a rock number that deals with the problems that every band faces when they hit the road. "Long Weekend" follows and is the only weak song on the entire effort. It's simply slow and out of place on a rock 'n' roll album. "Letter From Home" quickly picks the tempo up as it showcases more good guitar and incredibly tight harmonies. It serves as a good lead into the album's finale, "Long Time Ago," which is highlighted by fine synthesizer and piano work by Lockhart.

This is an exceptionally good rock album that sadly never entered Billboard's top 100, largely due to the fact that they've yet to receive the amount of hype and/or publicity that has been allocated to Concluded Dorothy Marshall, "It is to the students' advantage to pre-register. By paying the fees on time one can usually get the schedule of one's choice. Failing to pre-register means that classes are often unavailable. But that, too, can often be remedied during drop-add, when a student can pick up classes that may have one or two openings. And also, registration is usually more hectic in the fall, so it is wise to pre-register in the spring."

then, looking for talent. Herb Alpert & Jerry Moss signed Waylon to the album "Don't Think Twice".

Whatever Waylon was playing was Good Music and Chet Atkins and RCA Records found that out. His first album on RCA was released in '65. Thirty-Five have followed. In a Phoenix motel room "01" Waylon met "Willie What's 'is name." "We were instant friends," Willie recollects. "He asked me for some friendly advice on moving to Nashville... giving up a good job (JD's) with a higher than average income, to dig for some gold in Nashville's 16th Avenue concrete. Naturally, I told him to stay where he was. Fortunately, he did not listen."

1977 was the year of the Un-Picnic. Eighty thousand Okies and assorted tourists from parts unknown, joined 'Waylon and Willie and The Boys' under that notorious Tulsa sun, on July Third. Although most of his vistas are seen from hotel suites, Waylon is actively concerned by the need for all Americans to aid in environmental protection. He has teamed with Robert Redford to plan benefit concerts for the cause of the Citizen Action Fund. Motion pictures and television appeal mostly to his musical interests, but he maintains contact with a theatrical agent who is determined to get Waylon into a screen character. When the right script and "good ol' boy" director come along, flicks are in for some new action. In addition of "Nashville Rebel", Waylon provided some scoring for "Ned Kelly", "The Moonrunners", and "Mackintosh & T.J".

Only one song has entered the trade charts higher than "Luckenbach". Only Waylon has followed that confirmed standard, with his lovesick No. 1, "The Wurlitzer Prize". Most of the next Waylon album is on tape. The Cowboys can't lose for winning. "Ever since I can remember, all I wanted to do was play and sing, y' know?"

TWELVE PAGES

A letter of apology from the Silent Iranians to the American People

To The People Of The United States Of America; To The Hostages And Their Families;
To The President Of The United States Of America And His Administration;
To All Members Of The United States Congress; To The American Academic Community;
To All American Institutions Of Labor, Industry, And Commerce;

We humbly apologize to you all

The intimidated silent majority of Iranians, both in this country and in Iran, are sickened and outraged by the turn of events taking place at the American Embassy in Teheran. We abhor the inhuman behavior of our misled countrymen.

We are silent because we are in danger. Our opinions are crushed by a fear for our families still in Iran who would be punished for views opposing those who now hold the hands of power in that country.

We are Moslems, but we do not believe in this misconstrued idea of Islam now being practiced in Iran. The stated purpose of the "ISLAMIC REVOLUTION" was to abolish the political imprisonment, torture, coercion, corruption and dictatorship that were so prevalent in the Pahlavi regime. Unfortunately, this so-called "ISLAMIC REVOLUTION" has not accomplished this aim. It has betrayed the Iranian people and has been replaced by a new dictatorship, a new fanaticism, a new despotism, and a new corruption which sadly hides itself behind religion.

Mohammad Reza Pahlavi was a tyrant. A tyrant who was, first, an Iranian and a product of Iranian society. As Iranians, we must blame ourselves for allowing his tyranny and for failing to bring the world to an awareness of his and his family's diabolical doings. The American government's support of Pahlavi in the past does not justify the lunatic actions of the reactionaries in Iran in jeopardizing the lives of innocent Americans. This obsession for Pahlavi's punishment and confiscation of his wealth has gone too far. He must be brought to justice in a proper and law-abiding manner. Pahlavi is not worth the horror which presides over the American Embassy in Teheran today.

We humbly apologize for the lunatic behavior of religious fanatics and communist inspired students who claim themselves to be the voice of all Iranians. The truth of the matter is illustrated by the utter chaos and anarchy that has manifested itself throughout Iran today.

There is no government in Iran; nor any rational organization. What is happening there is not the will of Iranians. What you see is a gathering of uninformed mobs who have been threatened, bribed, seduced, and duped into demonstration.

Most of these people are illiterate and must depend upon what they are told. Even those who are educated are subject to the propaganda which surrounds them daily. Most communications are cut between Iran and the United States, however, those Iranians who have been able to contact their relatives in America are hysterical with fear—they are being told that the Americans are slaughtering the Iranian students in great numbers. This is only one example of the propaganda which induces the masses to riot.

The people you see are bussed and marched to the American Embassy to be paraded before the cameras. They have been carefully taught slogans and chants. Some are there just for the carnival; the circus. Most are unaware of even the reasons for it all. But this "use" of the masses is not new to Iranians—Pahlavi was known for his clever display of power by the "rounding up," "paying off," and "threatening" of huge numbers of people to shout their love and respect for their wonderful "king." It is quite ironic to know that the despotic religious clergy and reactionary students are employing the same techniques as their hated Pahlavi in order that they may exercise their vendettas and vengeance in such an inhuman, uneducated, and undiplomatic manner.

We are afraid. Afraid for our families; afraid for our people; afraid for our country. We cannot predict the outcome of this horrifying crisis. We are not blind, however, to the communist propaganda which is being pumped into Iran; nor are we blind to the communist infiltration amongst our masses, some of whom are ensconced in government.

The intimidated silent majority of Iran salutes you America! We admire your sense of justice and fair play, decency and individual respect and freedom. We implore you to help us fight our common foes: anarchy, communism and fanaticism. In your moment of anger, please do not abandon us! Understand that there is a majority who condemns this horror just as you do. Help us to achieve our democratic goal and rid ourselves of idealistic fanatics.

We regret that we are unable to offer a solution to the horrifying, insane, unholy, and utterly shameful crisis which has befallen our two nations. Again, we can only apologize; how we pray that we could do more. It is difficult to be unable to stand up and be counted and freely express our sincere grief at this horror. America will always be America—land of the free—God only knows what will happen to Iran and her people.

We hope that no matter what happens in Teheran, somehow the present dark days will come to pass and that the genuine Iranian people will not lose the friendship and mutual respect of the American people.

Sincerely Signed,
Silent Iranians

Parking rules enforced

On January 9, 1980, The BOARD OF Trustees approved the following amendments to the University of North Carolina at Wilmington Traffic and Parking Regulations:

Article 111: Parking Areas And Parking Regulations

Section 4: Parking Hours - Amend this Section to Read:

"VEHICLES WILL BE PARKED IN ASSIGNED AND DESIGNATED PARKING SPACES DURING THE HOURS FROM 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. daily, Monday through Friday." At other times and on official holidays, unrestricted parking of registered vehicles is permitted in all designated parking areas except in the following spaces:

a. Spaces designated for handicapped.

b. Spaces designated for Staff and Faculty in Parking Lots "J", "L", and "O"

Parking $35.00 Next Year

SGA president Jon Faill announced, at the second regular meeting of UNCW student legislature, that parking stickers which will cost 35 dollars per student in the fall of 1980. There was no explanation given for the increase. If this disturbs you, as it does some people, you now have the opportunity to fight back. Available now, in the SGA office, are official forms concerning the Cushman vehicles on campus. When these vehicles are being randomly driven around on the sidewalks, it is a violation of state law, and can result in a fine being imposed on the University.

The remainder of the president's report included mention that 250 dollars have been donated to WLOZ for the purpose of upgrading their equipment, and the fact that President Faill and Vice President Downs will be attending the National Student Conference in Washington, on Jan. 31.

Vice-president Downs reported that the following offices have been filled: Representatives at large: Francis Bessellieu and Mark Poindexter, Freshman Senators: Windy Fairman and Robert Williams, Senior Senator: Todd Fennell.

New business included Senator Jack Allen's plea that all senators read over the new constitution and make corrections before it is adopted.

Michelle Bond moved that the senate meetings be held at 6:00 instead of 7:00. This was seconded but not voted on for lack of a quorum. The meeting adjourned at 6:30.

EDITORIAL

At the start of this semester The Seahawk underwent a staff change and during this transition a number of key positions were filled. Editor, Assoc. editor, sports editor, features editor, managing editor, ad manager, head photographer, and typists positions were filled by new people. Also, a number of staff writers are new. In short, The Seahawk has been over-hauled.

I feel all of the positions have been filled adequately and what the staff lacks in experience or knowledge, they more than make up for in desire and enthusiasm. Our new staff has brought with them a number of new and creative ideas which should take The Seahawk one step further towards the goal of producing an excellent collegiate publication.

When reading the paper this semester you will notice that several sections have been changed or expanded. As a staff we are trying to broaden the scope of news covered and bring more attention to the news generated on our campus. Of course, you'll still read some national collegiate news and thought provoking editorials; but now you can read indepth features on UNCW staff and students. Also, the sports section has been expanded to include campus recreation. The synopsis of this expansion is to better serve you, the students of UNCW.

In any change, there is a period of trial and error. The Seahawk will try to minimize this period. In changing the scope and production of the paper, our staff hopes to inform and entertain the students. We hope that our influence will help the campus to grow.

The Seahawk is your paper and your voice is welcome. Whatever the contribution, whether writing articles or just adding your opinion, it is encouraged.

The paper now has all major positions filled and we receive a number of contributions from all over the campus, but if you are interested in submitting an article or an announcement, please do so. Also, we can always use extra help on our production staff.

It must be stated that UNCW is a rapidly growing campus and with this growth comes a new wave of ideas. If you feel that your ideas could help The Seahawk we welcome it. If you find you can't contribute in this area please become involved in one of our quality campus organizations. The students make the difference and if UNCW is to continue to thrive, we need you.

LETTERS

To The Editor :

Recently, while reading an article in a recreational magazine, I came across this possible addition to federal law. It read something like this:

As of December 1, 1979, women will be required by federal law to make a full disclosure of their sexual preferences and the extent to which they are willing to engage in sexual activity at the outset of any encounter with a male that could result in sexual relations. As of that date, women who do not intend to perform sexual acts and not display themselves in a manner in which any implication of interest in sexual activity could be perceived by a male, i.e., women may not "tease" males or use language or body movements or motions that could be construed as erotic. Women will also be forbidden to use the promise of sex in order to solicit visits to restaurants, nightclubs, or movie theaters.

Failure to comply with the Federal Sexual Disclosure Act will result in fine and/or imprisonment.

Amen.

Doug Browne

To The Editor :

Many of the ideas expressed in last week's editorial on the Iranian crisis are shared by the majority of the American people. However, one concept in the editorial deserves closer scrutiny. Many people believe, because of what Doug Browne refers to as "well publicized reality", that the Shah needed to visit America for vital medical care. A writer for Medical World News believes that the information conveyed to the public was inaccurate and biased. The publicity was far from reality.

Permission for doctors to comment on the Shah's disorders was granted and withdrawn selectively. Many misconceptions about what was really going on with the Shah originated because of this selective reporting. For instance, how many Americans knew that the doctor sent to the Shah by David Rockefeller was the Chief of Tropical Medicine at New York Hospital? Since the primary diagnosis for the Shah was malaria, why couldn't a Mexican doctor have sufficed? The Shah then began to experience severe abdominal pain which the American doctor (Kean) diagnosed as a tumor.

After 'cancer' was whispered in the President's ear, the Shah was admitted to New York Hospital.

After 24 hours in New York, the diagnosis of a tumor was found incorrect. The abdominal pain was caused by gallstones.

The good doctor brought the Shah to America for gallstones? I would interject a comment on the capacity of Mexican doctors to remove gallstones, but I hardly think it necessary. Undoubtedly, the Shah was, and judging by his appearance on television, still is a very sick man. However, it is also without a doubt that both the exact illness and the need to transport the Shah to America was grossly misconstrued.

The State Department not only publicized the wrong diagnosis, but they also did not verify the illness with a second opinion before the Shah was brought to the U.S. for treatment. Considering the consequences for overlooking these few minor details, it would seem that caution was indeed thrown to the wind. The admission of the Shah would be justified if the U.S. WERE IN POSSESSION OF A SECRET ELIXIR TO CURE A RARE DISEASE THAT ONLY American doctors were skilled in treating.

school spirit ??

Since coming to this university in 1977, I have often wondered why there hasn't been the feverish school spirit that is found at the majority of other campuses around the state. It has been demonstrated that you don't have to belong to the ACC (Atlantic Coast Conference) to enjoy good basketball, or to have a good time at an athletic event. ASU, FCU, UNCC, and a number of other Division II schools enjoy tremendous student body and community support.

Winning is nice and it helps the university in a number of ways, but the students of UNCW cannot lay back and hope our university becomes a dominate force in North Carolina. They must get off their posteriors and participate. The students here will determine the amount of success we create in the state, and nation.

For the last three plus years, UNCW basketball teams have proven that they can play with any team. Their winning record establishes that point. Those who say that we don't play quality teams have just not checked the schedule. Our basketball team plays exciting and intelligent ball. Coach Gibson doesn't use flashy one-on-one basketball because you don't win games that way.

Instead he uses a team oriented style of play that has proven it can produce consistent winners. Of course, you'll see exciting slam dunks and fast-breaks, but you will also see five individuals working as one to produce a basket or a defensive play. That is UNCW basketball.

To date we have only sold-out Trask Coliseum once; back in 1977 when we played Rod Griffith and Wake Forest. That's sad because a lot of excellent ball has been played in that building and it's only three years old! When our team plays away, they play against another team, and a noisy gym full of fans.

Fan support is crucial. Our support reflects upon our university directly; can be conveyed when an opponent comes into Trask and finds half the seats empty. Our basketball program is not the only sport to suffer because of our lack of support. The soccer and baseball teams are known throughout the South as traditional powerhouses and it is our responsibility as students to come out and support their efforts.

The swimming and women's basketball teams are like all the other sports here suffering from lack of spirit. The swimming team is probably competing against the strongest teams and is doing quite well with a 4-1 mark. The women's basketball team is re-building this year and in a couple of years should be one of the stronger teams in Division II. The remaining varsity teams need your cheers too.

When you add it all up, UNCW is growing, and fielding a number of quality teams which would be delighted if you could come out and support them. We have the talent and we have the coaching staff, the only thing missing is you.

Make it a point to come out and show the athletes and the school how much we appreciate their fine efforts. We the students, have the option of supporting our school and teams or continuing with the apathy that can undermine the best of programs.

A special thanks is given to "Dancing Dave" and his supporters who have livened up our home games tremendously. Continue to fire 'em up!

This seems to be the rationale used by those advocates seeking to have the Shah whisked in before any real consideration of the matter were to take place. It appears that the Shah snapped his fingers and Rockefeller came running. In response to this move, Rockefeller snapped his fingers and the State Department came running. All of this running around causes me to wonder, who is running this country?

Carter's decision to admit a dethroned ally for urgent medical attention is outwardly admirable. The State Department just has me confused as to the actual circumstances under which the Shah was admitted. A lot of inaccurate information as well as timely hushing up of doctors has led me to the conclusion that we have been used. The commotion caused by the Shah's admission to an American hospital was certainly not to the benefit of the national interest. Maybe the Shah did not need to come when he did. Maybe measures should have been taken as precaution to the consequences of harboring a man whose nation was suffering such hostility. Unless some insider decides to profit from the knowledge he has obtained as a fellow conspirator, the confidentiality between Rockefeller and the State Department will never be released to the public, the public whose members are friends and relatives of the abused hostages. How much of a sacrifice must Americans make to insure freedom and justice for one man. I do not suggest we throw the Shah to the wolves, I merely question to what extent do we let ourselves be mauled. The right to know truth was not written into the constitution. Maybe a revision is in order.

TEACHING FIRST

Many honors have been bestowed upon Dr. Sherrill Martin, an instructor in UNCW's Department of Music. Her impressive record includes serving on the Executive Board of Directors at the Alabama School of Fine Arts, the Music Teachers National Association, the Virginia Music Teachers Association, the American Musicological Society, the American Music Scholarship Association, and Pi Kappa Lambda (the National Music Honor Society).

She is also listed in the 1979-1980 edition of Personalities of the South, and is one of seven people from the United States to be honored for their Contributions to American music by the National Federation of Music Clubs. The list of credentials seems infinite.

And on February 13, her hometown of Enterprise, Alabama, will hold a Sherrill Martin Appreciation Day.

But, unlike so many other successful people, the buoyant Dr. Martin doesn't allow her achievements to conceit her personality. In fact, she believes that the "honors have been secondary and very nice rewards for a lot of things I've done."

More important than receiving honors, she says, are her research and lectures in music and her teaching.

Dr. Martin's education proves she is qualified in her field. She received her bachelor's degree from Samford University in Birmingham, and her master's degree from the University of Alabama at Tuscaloosa, where her area of concentration was the piano. The requirements of her Doctor of Philosophy Degree in musicology were fulfilled at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

Before coming to UNCW, she had been a member of the faculty at UNC-Chapel Hill and at Mary Washington College in Fredericksburg, Virginia. For two years she was the head of the music department at the University of Alabama at Birmingham. Then in the fall of 1979, she came to UNCW.

Dr. Martin's busy schedule includes teaching such courses as music history, the fundamentals of music, piano, class piano, harpsichord and organ. She also coaches the chamber ensemble.

Dr. Martin says she developed an interest in music when she was very young. She performed in her first concert at 9 and was a church organist at 14. Her family, including her grandparents, was very musical. Today they still get together and sing and play.

"I had a tremendous amount of encouragement from family and teachers along the way," she states.

"Family support is important. Not only do they have to listen to those horrible sounds every day, they also have to pay for them."

Because of her demanding schedule, Dr. Martin doesn't get in as much practice as she used to. When she was growing up she practiced four to six hours a day. She explains that now she just doesn't have that much time, because teaching is more important. She gives from six to eight lectures a year, which also takes up much of her time.

Dr. Martin believes that one quality of a good musician is dedication.

"You have to go into it knowing you won't get a lot of monetary reward," she emphasizes.

They also have to be very sensitive—if they can't make music from the written notes they end up with an "empty" product, she feels.

Before a recital, Dr. Martin usually does some warm-up exercises. This mostly consists of muscle building exercises such as scales. She says that a musician has to be a superb athlete, although he only uses a certain set of muscles.

Music should be shared, but a person has to be able to share his music before he can perform for an audience, Dr. Martin contends.

Many artists suffer from stage fright, but nervousness doesn't keep Dr. Martin from frequently participating in recitals. "I almost always get nervous," she says. "Sometimes really nervous. But it (performing) is something I want to do."

Bach and Beethoven are Dr. Martin's favorite composers, but she has no preference in musical periods, she explains. "I like different things about different periods. Every period was perfect music for that time. The music we have nowadays is perfect for this time."

In her spare time, Dr. Martin says she likes to read and do hand work such as needlepoint and knitting. She is also fond of cooking and having guests over. Basketball, football, and tennis are the sports activities that she loves.

Dr. Martin is pleased with UNCW, saying that she "prefers a school that is growing than one that has already peaked."

She really enjoys the students and the faculty. "The students are very bright, very polite individuals," she says. "They are a joy to work with. I enjoy the music program and the faculty is extremely well qualified."

It doesn't take long to discern that Dr. Martin is a talented artist, one that deserves to be praised for her abilities. But amidst all the honors and achievements, her goals remain simple—"to continue to do more research, more practicing, and to be a better teacher."

KINLAW TO ATTEND SNEA CONVENTION

UNCW has a student organization that isn't just a local club—it also has statewide and national representation. This association is comprised of education majors and, according to Cathy Kinlaw, it is the "largest student organization in the United States."

Cathy is the president of the local chapter of the Student

North Carolina Association of Educators, which is an affiliate of the Student National Education Association. The SNEA is a preprofessional organization geared toward future teachers. She is one of six students from this state who was selected to attend SNEA's annual convention on January 23-27 in Albuquerque, New Mexico.

Student delegates from 45 states will participate in the convention. They will be voting on such issues as changes in the constitution and a student teachers' bill of rights. A new national president will also be elected. Workshop topics to be discussed include "The Critical Issues of Testing," "Multi-

SEAHAWK MEN STRUGGLE

Going into last Saturday's game with Campbell University, UNCW had dropped two straight. The most recent loss was at home last Thursday night. Against North Carolina A&T the Seahawks were never in control of the game even though they threatened several times to rally. Coach Gibson's high passing offense didn't dictate the tempo of the game the way the 'Hawks would liked. Behind most of the game, the 'seahawks were, nonetheless, within striking range at the end of the game. The contest was decided on a desperation shot by Barry Taylor with two seconds remaining. The shot was wide and the Seahawks lost 57-56 to the Aggies.

Joe Brawner the high scoring guard for the Aggies did most of the damage as he hit 28 points, ranging from long outside bombs to flashy driving lay-ups. The 'Hawks were not prepared for his individual display. They did, however, limit the other four scorers below their averages.

The UNCW men's team was paced by Garry Cooper's 18 points as he again displayed his inside strength under the boards.

UNCW travels to Greensboro next week to face A&T again and should be untracked.

In last Saturday's game with Campbell, UNCW found the range and handed the Camels a loss, at 76-70. The difference was the shooting of Dennis Tobin. Against A&T he went 1-for-9 from the floor but in Raleigh he turned things around and shot 8-for-12, mostly 15 to 18 footers. He ended the game with 18 points and sparked the 'Hawks to a win snapping a two game losing streak.

The 'Hawks needed this win after a disappointing home court loss against A&T. The team played well in all phases of the game. With Barry Taylor running the offense the 'Hawks opened up the game. This allowed Tobin to have the outside jumpers and Garry Cooper and Danny Davis to control the inside game over Campbell's 7'0" center Tony Britt. UNCW led at half-time 42-35.

During the second-half the Seahawks again displayed good form as they continued to lead, despite the Camel's attempts to mount rallies during the final half.

John Haskin's was particularly happy with the win because he played before his family and friends. Hitting on 6-of-8 from the floor Haskin's played his usual all around game.

Late in the final period UNCW went to its slow down game and cruised on to the six point win.

The Seahawks had balanced scoring from the team as they placed five players in double 8 figures. Tobin led with 18 points followed by Cooper and Taylor, with 16 and 14 points respectively. Danny Davis and John Haskins each tallied 13 each.

Davis led the team with nine rebounds and Barry Taylor dishd out nine assists.

The Camels of Campbell were paced by game high scorer Darrell Mauldin who had 21 points. Tony Britt followed with 18 points. He also grabbed a game high 13 rebounds.

LADY HAWKS FALTER

VS. A & T

In the first game of last Thursday's night double-header with North Carolina A & T the Lady Hawks turned in their poorest performance of the season and were taken out of the game in the first ten minutes. The women's team found themselves down by twenty points with a little less than ten minutes to play in the first-half. The game was never in jeopardy after that point.

A 23-3 in favor of the Lady Aggies, the Lady 'Hawks were uninspired. The 'Hawks had just come off a dramatic "come-from-behind" win over North Carolina Central in overtime. They were obviously (flat) as they took to the court against a very strong team from A & T.

UNCW tried several times to mount a come back but the Aggies's lead was too much. The half-time score was 42-21 with the Aggies under control of the game.

During the second-half the Lady Seahawks tried to change the tempo and take charge of the game, but to no avail. The Aggies proved too much for the depth depleted 'Hawks. The final score was 47-77 and the Lady Aggies improved their record to 8-8 while the Seahawk's record dropped to 4-6.

Beth Pruitt led the Seahawks in scoring: the nine points. A & T was paced by a balanced scoring attack with Lillie Pratt scoring 11 points. Every Lady Aggie scored.

VS. WINGATE

Mid-way through their busy January schedule, the Lady Seahawks were faced with a key injury to their starting guard Linda Stuart. This severely hurt their changes of turning things around and finishing up the month in a strong fashion.

In last week's games against Wingate and Pfeiffer Colleges, the Lady 'Hawks were once again faced with a depleted bench, and foul trouble early in the game left the ladies on the short end of 57-53 score against Wingate, and a 81-63 loss at Pfeiffer.

Coach Christoph stated, "It was a very disappointing loss," (against Wingate). "We beat

POPS COMES TO UNCW

Between the second summer session and "fall semester a new class will be offered that should bring a new dimension to the Recreation Department of UNCW. The class is the Program of Outdoor Pursuits or "POPs". The official description of this class is as follows: "It is the study of and participation in the skills and knowledge of various outdoor recreational activities in a natural setting."

This is the brain-child of Dr. Robert Wolff who is the professor of Outdoor Recreation here at UNCW. The activities offered by this class range from skiing in the mountains, sailing the Bahamas, canoeing in the Everglades, to bicycling the Blue Ridge Parkway. Each excursion is planned and taken during a different break in the school year. For example, Dr. Wolff took a group of students to the Bahamas last summer to sail for 10 days and last Christmas break another group of students to Boone, NC to go skiing.

The next major excursion will be held on the 9-24 of August, between the last summer session and the beginning of the 1980 fall semester. It will be a 469 mile bicycle trip along the

Blue Ridge Parkway

The trip will be worth three hours credit and will cost approximately $130. It will start in Waynesboro, Virginia and the class will pedal 469 miles to the other side of Asheville, NC. This amount to about 50 miles a day.

During the trip the students will participate in nature walks, historical tours, cooking, camping, maintaining equipment, and enjoying plenty of fresh air and beautiful scenery. The class is designed to help the students attain a seemingly impossible goal and to build character, physical

Seahawk Swimmers Wins

(Will Allen shave his head?)

A week ago the Seahawk swimmers traveled to Richmond Virginia to face a tough Virginia Common Wealth team. The 'Hawks dominated against their men's team but weren't as lucky against their women's squad. In the men's meet Rusty Lambe and Sam O'Leary both won two events and sparked the swimming 'Hawks to a 74-38 win.

The Lady 'Hawks weren't as fortunate as their lack of depth caught up with them. Ellen Cushman won three events and Janet Johnson and Betn Kalenborn won two apiece. Despite seven individual victories the ladies could not place enough swimmers in each event and were out-distanced by 12 points at 73-61.

The VCU Meet placed both men's and women's squads at 4-1 for the year. Their next meet is at home this Saturday against rival East Carolina University. It promises to be a close and exciting meet.

Coach Dave Allen has stated that if UNCW wins the men's meet he will shave his head bald at pool side. With a strong student body turnout, the Swimming Seahawks will hopefully have the opportunity to see a bald Allen.

The Meet starts at 1:00 p.m.

REC CLUB BUSY

(+ The First in a Series on Sports and Recreation Related Clubs +)

There are a number of clubs on UNCW's campus that contribute greatly to the campus and to the community as a whole. Not much is written or spoken about their fine efforts, but without clubs such as these a number of vital area programs would suffer. The Recreation Major's Club is one of these organizations.

Advised by Vickie Blake, Derrick Davis, and Robert Wolff, the Recreation Major's Club has grown to a 45-member organization which helps such noted area programs as: Adaptive Swimming at the YM-CA, Special Olympics, Hill Haven Convalescent Home (therapeutic rec. department), the local Boy's Clubs, Solomon Towers, New Hanover Memorial Hospital and a number of others. The majority of students are sent to these agencies through voluntary placements for their practicum and internship courses. A number of the students that were placed in those programs, in the beginning go back in following years to help again.

These programs help Wilmington area residents greatly and deliver low cost programming that can only be achieved through extensive use of volunteers. The recreation majors at UNCW fill many of these positions.

Without their help most of these programs would fold or become tremendously impaired.

Other than working in the community, the Recreation Major's Club serves the campus in a number of ways. Many of these activities promote the club and are worthwhile causes. For example, last semester the majors sold cushions and t-shirts to raise enough money to send about 10 representatives to the State Recreation Conference. At the conference, UNCW can become a part of the decision process that affects everyone state-wide. Also, they can learn about new trends in recreation and potential job placements.

Last semester, they designed and led the V.I.P. olympics. The purpose of this was to raise money for Cerebral Palsy. Area businesses sponsored an employee to compete in the games. The entry fee was $25 dollars and the entire proceeds were donated.

Even though 1979 was a busy year for the recreation majors, plans for 1980 are more ambitious. This semester they plan to continue placing volunteers in Wilmington area programs. Their support in this area is invaluable. They also, sell programs before every home game to raise money for the upcoming game. Student Mini-Conference. This will be held on March 21st in Greensboro, and they plan to send a group to attend. To reduce costs, they will camp-out during the weekend.

The majors will co-sponsor an event on February 23rd that should be the highlight of the year for the club - a wheel-chair basketball game. They are working with the Physical Education Department. This exhibition will feature the Capital City Hustlers from Raleigh and the Charlotte Tar Wheels. These teams will come to Trask coliseum on the 23rd at 7:30 to promote their basketball conference and to rally support for new teams. The teams will bring their own officials and will explain to the fans the basic rules of the game. It is quite different from the ordinary basketball game.

Also in Feb. the majors will sponsor a participant to enter the Rock-and-Roll-a-thon at Hill Haven. Participants will either rock in rocking chairs or roll in wheel chairs to raise money for the Heart Fund. The club will donate two dollars an-hour for their participant.

The Recreation Major's Club is definitely on the move and the activities planned should bring alot of attention to its growing program. Members do not have to be recreation majors, and all students are encouraged to participate. Meetings are held on Thursday nights at 6:30 come and be a part.

BIRD SPARKS HAWKS

The assignment was simple enough, find the Bird and interview him for the Seahawk. I figured it would be a breeze so I gathered my pen and pad and headed to Trask to find out where the Bird kept his nest.

After several inquiries I still had no answer, so I left my number and waited.

It was obvious that if the Bird wanted to speak he could contact me. Later that day while watching the tube, the phone rang and it was "The Bird." I asked him where we might meet, (hoping for a face-to-face interview). He didn't think too much of that idea, and it was clear he wanted to be interviewed right then. I hesitated, then settled in ready to write, not knowing what to expect.

The questioning went like this:

Question: How did the concept of the Bird get started?

Bird: "It was an idea of several friends who wanted to help make the (UNCW) program recognizable." Also, "to help Mel Gibson and the basketball program primarily, and other sports also. We've had a good program, (but) we haven't had enough recognition." It was "a gimmick to bring attention" to the Seahawks. "I wrote the San Diego chicken to find out where he ordered his suit. It was made from a company out of Salt Lake City, Utah."

Question: What is your role as the team mascot?

Bird: "Through students and youngsters I try to get more people to come to the games." He wants the Bird to be a "fun thing" and get the community as a whole involved to help the athletic programs at UNCW grow. "I'm just another stone at the base of a pyramid that's going to put UNCW at the top."

Question: How do you

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Ellen Cushman

This week the Seahawk starts a new tradition by naming an "Athlete of the Week". The athlete will be chosen from one of UNCW's 13 varsity sports. The first recipient of this award is Ellen Cushman of the swimming team. Last week, Cushman paced the lady swimmers in their narrow loss to Virginia Commonwealth University. During the meet, she won three individual events and was a member on the winning relay team. She is a Freestyle and Backstroke specialist.

Cushman is a sophomore from Apex, North Carolina and is psychology major. Last year she qualified for the Nationals and now holds numerous school records.

Beat the blues

De blues ain't funny, but the things we do to fight them often are. How many times have you bought a new outfit in a fit of gloom, only to discover it makes you look thirty pounds heavier? Or tossed your last six bucks on an album with a scratch the size of the Grand Canyon? One friend of mine buys a plant whenever she gets glum; at present her room looks like a set from the African Queen, and I'm sure Tarzan is hiding in there somewhere.

A very wise person (Granny, who else?) once gave you some good advice about the grumps: "Go ahead and be miserable!" I endorsed this bit of wisdom whole-heartedly. Milk it for all its worth, but for your sake, know when to stop. When the dog is sobbing, you've gone too far. If your throat feels like a piece of burlap and your eyeballs are barbed wire, you've still got a few tears to go.

If you really feel like you're riding right off the old rocker, call an old friend you haven't seen in a while. Hearing other people's troubles is bound to make you feel better. (If the old friend is a Yale grad, pulling $30,000 a year, with a great lifestyle, do yourself a favor. Hang up).

You can beat depression; everybody knows that. But sometimes the cure is the real killer. If you have to jog ten miles before life is worth living, maybe you should try those little purple pills instead (just kidding, all you drooling dealers!) Or if you buy out Belk's when you're in a funk, give Dad a break and see a shrink.

When all else fails, get by yourself and go to sleep. Or maybe you'd rather eat (brownies always seem to help)-- or get drunk-- or play strip poker. And me? Well, I have this typewriter, see... The point is, tomorrow will be better. At least that's what they tell me!

BIRD

preceive the future of the sports program here?

Bird: "We need to be in a conference, everything looks good - I can't see anything holding us back." The bird continued on with this analogy: "ACC (Atlantic Coast Conference) teams don't make it on talent alone. They need the support of the student body. In order for UNCW to be like that, we need the students. Most of the support comes from the students, the rest comes from the community. Fans make the difference, (there is) no substitute for good fans."

Question: Have you gone to any of the away games?

Bird: "Yes, I went to the Siena Invitational Tournament in Albany, New York."

Question: How did the fans react to you up there?

Bird: "The fans were super, they loved it." There was a fantastic reaction. "They even ignored their own mascot."

Question: Who pays for the Bird's expenses?

Bird: "I do, it is all my money." He stated that no one helps foot the cost of the bird, there are no donations or financial help from the university.

Question: Are you a student?

Bird: "No, I'm an Alumni." (He didn't volunteer the year he graduated.)

Question: Why do you do it?

Bird: "For the love of the school."

The interview ended and we said our goodbyes and I thanked him for calling. I still didn't know who the Bird was but at least I knew he cared. He gave his time and money to help us (the students) have a progressive and dynamic athletic program here at UNCW. He left a message: "Look for the Bird on the Soccer field, baseball diamond, beside the swimming pool, in the gym, or anywhere there is a Seahawk team playing."

The Bird said that all students are welcome to sign up for the bus or buses (depending on the Student turn-out) going to the ECU game on the 26. The charge is $13 apiece and this includes the fare for the bus and the ticket to get in. You can sign up now at Roseman's in Long Leaf Mall or contact Dillon Bryant. Don't get left behind!

Many parents are unnecessarily alarmed at being told their child has a fundamental heart murmur. This just means the murmur is not caused by a malformation or disease. Murmurs are very common in young children and tend to fade away as the child grows, according to experts such as Dr. Benjamin Spock. They are also called innocent murmurs because they are.

Homecoming

This years Homecoming 1980, drawing of a decade on Feb. 1st will be held in Hanover Hall gym. The dress is a formal - semiformal type. Beer and refreshments will be served and if you wish to, bring your own wine. The dance is from 9-2 p.m. with music by the band Casper from 10-2 p.m. Tickets are limited and will be on sale in the Pub office at $4.00 a couple starting Monday, Jan. 21st.

President's report

This last week has been one of adjusting back to the routine of classes. I'm sure everyone else is experiencing the same problems.

The SGA has responded to the problem of the university's cushion cars driving on the sidewalks. This is against university traffic regulations. We have developed, with the cooperation of the N.C. Highway Patrol, a violation report form, which may be obtained at the SGA office. I'm certain that there will be some slack from the administration, but this problem has been ignored long enough.

On this coming Wednesday, January 30, I am going, along with the other student body presidents in the UNC system, to Washington, D.C. We will be in conference with HEW lawyers concerning the HEW/UNC lawsuit. No student opinion has been sought by HEW, even though this lawsuit will affect 100,000

UNC system students. Hopefully, we will receive some answers to our questions. In conjunction with this trip, the UNCW Polling Agency, under the direction of the student Attorney General Pete Johnson, is running a poll this weekend. The poll covers several subject areas, so if you are called, please answer the questions honestly and cheerfully.

The student senate is having some problems in maintaining a quorum at their meetings. Members with unexcused absences on the January 17 meeting are: Colvin, Heulett, Carter, Corry, Devoky, Durda, Ward, and Watson. If you know any of these senators, please remind them of the duty they were elected to serve. By just being a student at UNCW, you are a member of student government. Take an active part in the total learning experience and get involved.

CAMPUS CALENDAR

Careers Day Planned

On February 6, 1980, the third annual Career Day will be held in Trask Coliseum from 10:30 to 3:30. This annual event is sponsored by the Career Planning and placement Office in conjunction with Sigma Alpha Beta, the Business Honorary Fraternity and the Wilmington Chamber of Commerce.

Career Day was designed by Sigma Alpha Beta and was first held on the UNCW campus in March, 1978. At Career Day 78, there were approximately 35 employers to appear on campus discussing career opportunities in various fields.

The next Career Day was held in February, 1979. This Career Day was even more successful as more employers and students passed through the doors of Trask Coliseum. Now this year, Career Day again makes a repeat performance in Trask Coliseum. This year more than 40 employers are expected to attend.

In the past, certain misconceptions have arisen due to the name chosen for this annual event. Career Day initially was thought of as an event where students could come to find employment. However, Career Day is a service project put on by Sigma Alpha Beta, the Career Planning and Placement Office, and the Wilmington Chamber of Commerce.

Its purpose is to familiarize employers with UNCW students and to give the students a chance to look at a representative cross section of employment opportunities which might be available to them upon graduation.

All Students are urged to attend.

Chess

Interested in playing Chess? Right now, on the campus of UNCW, a chess club is forming for all interested "chess-nuts", and their guests.

Andrew Asbury, founder of the new club, explained that the new organization won't be the type of club that you remember from high school, as he hopes to compete on a national level.

The first meeting of the chess club will be on Friday, Jan. 25, at 4:30 at the Goodwood Tavern, and all interested students are urged to attend.

For further information, contact Andrew at 799-5379, or see Dr. Irving Clator in the Physics department.

Phi Eta Sigma

A meeting of Phi Eta Sigma National Honor Society will be held at 4:00 PM* Tuesday, January 29 in Hoggard Hall Room 227. Business to be discussed will include national scholarships, the national convention, the petition for membership of the University of Pittsburgh, and Founders' Award nominations. All members are urged to attend.

Unique Club

ly and Treasurer Herman Smith.

Future events include firms, lectures, a field trip to Charleston, SC., and many other activities.

Most importantly, the UNCW Historical Society was created for all interested students, regardless of their major. The next meeting will be on Monday, Jan. 28, at the Goodwood Tavern, with inebriating refreshments being served. We will also be playing Yalta, a simulation game. All interested students are urged to attend. See you there at 8 pm.

Volunteer

Linda Moore, Director of Student Union/Activities, can help students find a challenging, exciting way to broaden their education. Check by her office in room 104 in the Pub to find out about the varied volunteer openings available in New Hanover, Brunswick, and Pender counties. Here are two specific needs:

•Woodcutters and stackers needed for Saturday mornings to provide wood to families without fuel.

•Animal-lovers needed to provide grooming, cage cleaning for homeless animals.

See Linda Moore for details.

Watch the seahawk every week for more ideas of how you can do something important with your time this semester!

Video

The UNCW Video Network will meet on Thursday the 24th at 4:00, in K-109.

This is a new organization that will be bringing the students of UNCW a new kind of communication via video broadcasts.

All persons that are interested in working hard as newscasters, sportscasters, camera operators, scribes, reporters, or any other jobs that pertain to video-audio equipment should attend the next meeting. Those students that have no experience at working with video equipment will be trained.

Again we urge all students to participate in this new and growing organization.

APO

We the brothers of the Upsilon Nu chapter would like to welcome everyone back to a new semester and thank those who attended our rush Saturday January 12 at the Pub.

We feel that it was a big success and hope everyone had a good time. As you know, we are about to start our spring pledge period and we would like to give you a cordial invitation to pledge in our coed service fraternity. If you think you would be interested in pledging or just finding out more about us, please contact any ALPHA PHI OMEGA brother or call our Pledge Master, Blake Carter at 799-7898.

Cultural/Bilingual Education," and "Attacks on Education by Far Right Groups."

The number of delegates chosen from each state depends on how many members belong to the State Associations. North Carolina has the fourth largest membership in the nation, indicating what Cathy believes to be "how much students in North Carolina are involved."

Cathy was elected as a delegate to the national convention last year at the state convention in Charlotte. She is the only student from UNCW to represent North Carolina.

"I'm excited about it," she says. "I just couldn't pass up the chance to go. I think it's a worthwhile organization. We're concerned with education, what we can do to change it and what role we have in it."

strength and self-confidence in their ability to attain that goal.

The students will be graded on their physical skills, individual and group projects, and of course, a final exam.

Vans will take the students to Waynesboro and will go ahead of the students during the entire trip. The vans will carry the heavy gear and the food for the excursion. The class will camp in a number of camp grounds during the trip. All fees and costs are covered in the initial charge.

The enrollment for the parkway trip is limited to 14 students. If you are interested contact Dr. Robert Wolff by next week. The enrollment will be set and the preparations for the excursion will begin by the end of January.

The participants will "establish a riding schedule for everyone to assure a good physical condition level prior to the actual Blue Ridge ride."

Also, a cycling clinic will be given by Wolff on bike safety and repair, proper riding techniques and care, maintenance and selection of a quality bicycle.

If any individual loves cycling backpacking, the beauty of the Blue Ridge Parkway or just wants to improve his or her self-image this is the perfect opportunity to have all these things and more. Even though this course is demanding, it is "geared for the general population of UNCW."

them soundly up here," (but at Wingate) "we let them set the tempo, ... we just didn't play well." However, the Seahawks did play a very good defensive game and out-rebounded them by a 42-25 margin.

Against a very strong Pfeiffer team the Lady 'Hawks played even better, but four players fouled out, including the entire back line. "We played well and did some really good things,"

Christoph stated. Nonetheless, the final score put the Seahawks in the loss column. A major bright spot for the Ladies was Kathi Shand's 28 points performance, coming off the bench.

With only one month remaining before the State Division II Tournament in Greensboro, the Lady 'Hawks still have time to regroup. By that time Linda Stuart will be able to return to action and Christoph's switch to a taller line up should make the 'Hawks competitive.

Miller game

College students who usually sit in the stands and dream of being Larry Bird or Magic Johnson, will get a chance to bring their fantasies to life when Miller Brewing Company and Coastal Beverage Company bring their One-On-One Basketball Tournament to the University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

Participants in this tournament will engage in a one-on-one four minute basketball game. The winner will be the first player to score ten points, or who is leading by two or more points at the end of the game.

To be eligible all participants must be currently enrolled at the University of North Carolina as a graduate, or undergraduate student. Eligibility requirements will follow the intramural departments regulations.

The winner will receive a $200.00 scholarship award and a trophy. In the event that he/she is not eligible to accept the award because of financial assistance restrictions, the money will be donated to the school's athletic department.

Second, third, and fourth place winners will receive trophies. The top fifty participants will receive a pair of Miller athletic tube socks and a One-On-One T-shirt.

The tournament will be held

Almost unaware to UNCW, The Seahawk has been undergoing many and various problems since the latter part of last semester.

Back in August The Seahawk was allocated a sum of money from the SGA for this year's expenses. Unfortunately the ads in the newspaper do not cover the cost of printing. Last semester The Seahawk spent $996.86 printing the newspaper.

Approximately the same figure will be spent this semester for printing.

The main problem The Seahawk has encountered has been with the Compugraphic machine. This machine is a vital part of The Seahawk's operations as it typesets all of the newspaper's copy.

This machine is only five years old and The Seahawk staff has been informed that the machine should last at least ten years. However, due to improper maintenance in the past, unwarranted problems have been occurring.

Last semester one of the logic boards had to be replaced costing The Seahawk $608.80 for total parts and labor. This was an unexpected expense to say the least.

This semester many smaller problems have been occurring with the Compugraphic machine. A flash lamp has had to be replaced, a service engineer has come and adjusted a part, and one of the filmstrips that sets the type has been replaced. This semester's cost of the machine alone is $199.43. Also The Seahawk needs at least $600.00 worth of supplies this semester to continue functioning.

The Seahawk is ready and willing to do whatever the situation calls for, but without the money, it will be impossible. Unless something is done to alleviate these problems with the Compugraphic machine and the paper's lack of funds, UNCW's campus newspaper will cease to exist.

UNCW is continuing to grow and The Seahawk should be growing accordingly. The Seahawk has been the major means of mass communications on this campus since UNCW was Wilmington College. Without The Seahawk, UNCW would suffer greatly.

Compared to major publications on other campuses such as UNC, State, Wake Forest, ECU, etc., The Seahawk is found lacking. This semester's Seahawk staff realizes this and is trying to upgrade the paper. Without proper funds and student and administration support this goal will not be reached.

All semester The Seahawk has been fighting off the contagious disease of apathy that seems to be spreading around campus. Unless UNCW cares enough about The Seahawk and its potential, the newspaper will fold under and be just another "good mention" killed by apathy.

Because of the situation fund by the new staff this semester they have performed to the best of their capabilities considering the conditions under which they work. The staff as a whole has and will be trying to save the Seahawk from the situations that have occurred.

Lady 'Hawks upset Duke

by Eddie Knox

The late Franklin D. Roosevelt once said, "The only thing we have to fear is fear itself." Tuesday night Janet Grady knew the feeling as she stood at the free throw line with two seconds showing on the clock. The score was knotted at 41-41.

Grady, however, connected on her second free throw attempt to win the game at 43-41. UNCW had upset their toughest opponent of the season and in the process upped their record to 11-1. Then another desperation pass slid off Margo Walsh's finger-tips the game ended, with Duke unable to score.

It was by no means easy. Neither team could forge more than an eight point lead during the contest, which UNCW held with 9:05 remaining on a layup by Kathy Smith.

Duke had snatched their biggest advantage of the game at halftime, posting a 33-28 margin at the break.

The two teams traded baskets over the first six minutes of the final stanza, then the Lady Hawks began playing their finest five minutes of basketball this season

It began modestly enough. A free throw by Darci Wilson cut the Duke margin to 41-37. Lady Blue Devil coach Debbie Leonard then called a time out.

She shouldn't have wasted her breath. After the time out, The Lady Seahawk deluge began.

A Janet Grady turnaround jumper, which she probably should patent, cut the Duke lead to 41-39.

Two long distance shots by Kathi Shands gave the Lady Seahawks their first lead since the 9:45 mark in the first half.

After Duke scored to tie at 43, The Lady 'Hawks reeled off eight unanswered points on a basket by Grady, two free throws by Shands, and consecutive follow-up shots by Kathy Smith.

The streak was finished, but the Lady Blue Devils weren't. Utilizing a full-court pressure defense, Duke began to wear down the background trio of Pruitt, Shands, and Wilson.

Led by Lisa Warren and Barb Krause on offense, the Lady Blue Devils shut down UNCW and climbed back into a 43-33

EDITORIAL

Beginning the new semester, many clubs and organizations on the campus of UNCW simply picked up where they left off before Christmas and continued to conduct business as usual.

Regrettably, this was not the case with The SEAHAWK.

At the end of last semester, there was a complete turnover of personnel on The Seahawk staff. The turnover was so drastic that the new staff had to literally start from scratch in attempt to produce a paper somewhat reminiscent of the type of paper produced by Bobby Parker. The new Seahawk staff has worked diligently toward that end, only to be penalized from the mistakes and bad management of the previous editor. The major problem this semester, other than the state of chaos that the records themselves were in, has been financial. Under the previous editor, questionable amounts of money were spent on questionable activities, resulting in the fact that the paper itself is almost bankrupt. Added to these problems is the fact that The Seahawk Compugraphic machine has been in need of constant repair.

Obviously, The Seahawk is not completely self-sufficient, but compared to the previous semester, revenues have been increased by nearly 100 per cent. Many people in the surrounding community realize what an important vehicle The Seahawk is in informing the students as well as the community regarding upcoming events, advertising, and the tremendous experience it offers budding journalists. With present funds available, there is a possibility that two or three more editions of the paper can be produced for the remainder of the semester. This is tragic as well as alarming. Many area businessmen have recently expressed deep concern over the fact that the paper has not been printed on a regular basis, as they have found that advertising through The Seahawk is very beneficial to their sales. Added to this, is the fact that campus clubs will not be able to announce their upcoming events to as wide an audience as The Seahawk enjoys.

This semester's Seahawk promises to be a superior publication. A unique combination of dedicated people that work together like a well-oiled machine insure that nothing less than quality news will be printed.

If all goes well with those in control of the needed funds, The Seahawk will be produced on a regular basis, and its readers can be assured of a truly exciting year. Popular support is essential. If the Seahawk is to survive, the students of UNCW must make their voices heard.

LETTERS

To The Editor:

In response to Doug Browne's letter of January 25, I would like to express a few ideas.

There are quite a few women who don't know from the "outset of any encounter with a male" whether they are interested in sexual intercourse. There are men and women who scorn sex with someone they don't even know. There are people to whom a roll in the sack is not the ultimate fulfillment of every relationship between man and woman. Those males who take someone to dinner, movies, etc. only as a means of "buying" a lay, in my view, classify not as men, but as emotional dwarves.

Sincerely,
Carol Collier

To The Editor:

What the HELL are you talking about, Mr. Browne?!!!

Would you have sung "Amen" to a law requiring all blacks to disguise themselves in public because, in fact, the KKK may react violently towards them? How about a law forbidding people to carry money because by doing so they provoke theft? Why not just pass a law that prohibits all existence, because in existing, we run into complications and responsibilities that are difficult to handle? You see, Mr. Browne, there are basic principles involved. The Sexual Disclosure Act is a gross perversion of the fundamental ideals of freedom and personal liberty which our country represents. And your approval of such an act is an even grosser perversion.

Essentially, the Sexual Disclosure Act discriminates. It classifies a group of people on the sole basis of gender, and subjects them to a set of rules. It says that all women exploit their sexuality, wielding it like some sort of weapon against men. To remedy this so-called threat, women would be required to make accessible a record of their sex habits as a warning to their potential male victims. Just how is this to be accomplished, Mr. Browne? Are job applications to read: Name...Address...Sexual Tendencies...? Before the Equal Employment Act existed, employers tossed a lot of applications from blacks into the waste basket. I just wonder, with the passage of the Disclosure Act, which would be tossed in the basket this time—the "Gives A Lots" or the "Real Prudes"?

As you see, even hypothesizing about enforcing such a law reveals how repulsive it is. The fact is, some men find a woman just because she is a woman, sexually attractive. Perhaps, Mr. Browne, you would prefer that women be required to wear Moslem chadors, as our dear Ayatollah has required in his country. But even then, with our bodies curtained in full-length robes and our heads wrapped to reveal only our eyes, we are still dangerous—those provocative glances, you understand. For the sake of the safety of men, keep us off the street! But what would you do, Mr. Browne, if all the lovely subjects spread across the pages of your "recreational magazine" were in prison, serving time for having "displayed themselves in a manner in which an implication of interest in sexual activity could be perceived..." Or is that something else?

The Sexual Disclosure Act is obviously a sickly male effort to shirk responsibility for male actions, to in fact, shirk self-control. Sexual harassment of women is a fact. Rape is a fact. These things exist and they are wrong. The attempt by the Disclosure Act to turn the blame for these crimes right back onto the women, onto the real victims of real horror, is obscene. Come on, Mr. Browne, being potty-trained wasn't so difficult, was it? Let's exert a little self-control.

I would like to think your letter is just an editor's ploy to stimulate response. In any light, however, it is sick and offensive. And it is especially inappropriate in an atmosphere of higher education which attempts to produce

President's report

On Wednesday, January 30, myself along with other student body presidents from the UNC system, met with HEW officials in Washington D.C. We went there in search of information which we requested over two years ago. We received a stack of papers, but it appears it may be another long wait until we receive some information. The bottom line of the dispute revolves around desegregation goals that were approved by HEW in 1974 and were subsequently disapproved in 1977 by a court order on which stemmed from a lawsuit (Adams v. California). It is important that every student in the UNC system and every citizen in the state be aware of what is going on. I will present a special report concerning all of this in the near future. While in Washington, I attended the American Student Association meeting, which UNCW is a member of. I gathered some interesting materials, the most important of which is a course/professor evaluation booklet published by George Washington University. This is an idea which is long past due here at UNCW. I will present a full report at the Senate meeting and will have it published in the next issue of the Seahawk.

Good news! The SGA cushman vehicle reports have had a positive effect. The administration has agreed to stop all cushman vehicles from the sidewalks during school hours, except in emergencies. Also, the sidewalk from the main campus to the dorms will not have cushman cars on it at all, 24 hours a day. However, in order for this policy to stay in effect, you, as students, must report violations, otherwise it will be back to business as usual.

The Student government needs your help. We are entering into a critical period in the year when we need everyone's cooperation to make sure all the projects that we have started get finished. If you are interested in helping, come by the SGA office, upstairs in the pub between 8 am and 5 pm. Together we will finish what we have started.

NCSL educates students in legislature

By Charles Parsons

The North Carolina Student Legislature first met in 1937, and is the oldest active student legislature in the country. N.C.S.L. educates students in the legislative processes of North Carolina. The education that is received, by the students, occurs mainly through the Annual Session. This Annual Session is held in the old General Assembly in Raleigh. During Session, the N.C.S.L. also provides students with a chance to voice their opinions to the North Carolina General Assembly and other relevant governmental bodies. Each year, N.C.S.L. publishes a booklet of all legislation passed at the previous session. The compendiums are then distributed by the member delegations to all the members of the North Carolina General Assembly, Council of State, and other interested parties. Individual committee members and various authors of the bills make presentations, to governmental officials influential to the policy areas. Then, the newly established Research Coordinating Committee will conduct non partisan research of current issues in North Carolina. This research will result in position papers that will serve as a basis for testimony before committees of the General Assembly and the Executive Branch.

N.C.S.L. offers a direct challenge to all students willing to accept it. The North Carolina Student Legislature: We make a difference.

The next meeting of the UNCW N.C.S.L. will be on Thursday at 4:00 in the upstairs library conference room.

Beach explained Dr. James Merritt of the Biology Department.

Merritt went on to say that any student with a bachelor's degree in the Natural Sciences from any accredited college may apply.

The cost is $245.00 per semester for North Carolina residents and $1122.00 per semester for non-residents.

Application forms for admission to this graduate program can be obtained from the Director of Graduate Studies,

Students announce candidacy

by Joyce Stevens

Two students announced their candidacy for president and vice-president of the Student Government Association before a group of Senate members recently.

The two candidates are Jessie Sanders and Mike Stroud. Sanders is vying for the presidential nomination while Stroud is contending for the vice-presidency.

Sanders, originally from the Myrtle Beach area, has lived in Wilmington the past 3½ years. He is a business and computer science major. Sanders is presently the Treasurer for the SGA and vice-president of Sigma Alpha Beta, a business honorary fraternity.

Stroud, a native of Wilmington, is a political science major. He is a member of the North Carolina Student Legislature and the chairman of the Research Coordinating Committee.

When interviewed recently, both candidates expressed great concern over the allocation of funds by the SGA. Stroud stated, "We need to re-evaluate the types of funding that student government should give." Stroud feels that in order to receive funding, an organization should contribute something to the student body and should represent the University.

Sanders is familiar with budgetary procedure. He wants to see student government grow in a responsible manner. "I would like to see the SGA take on a more professional attitude and become more fiscally responsible for student government."

The student elections will be held March 26 and 27. Any student interested in running for office is encouraged to do so.

Notice

The Financial Aid Office has announced that the new '80-81 financial aid booklets have come in and should be picked up as soon as possible.

Mr. Joseph Capell of the Financial Aid Office also asked that all the students who are already receiving financial aid and have not picked up their checks for this semester should do so immediately.

All students who are considering financial aid or are already receiving it should go to the Financial Aid Office, located in the Administration Building as soon as possible.

Friends contribute to UNCW

The 1979 gift of the Friends of the University of North Carolina at Wilmington was presented Thursday afternoon, January 31, during a tea in their honor at the home of Chancellor and Mrs. William H. Wagoner.

Most of the membership campaign gift of $5000 was received by Eugene Huguélet, Director of the Randall Library, for the purchase of a Microfilm Reader-Printer intended to be of benefit to the whole academic community. In addition, three checks of $250 each were awarded, expressing the interest of the Friends in other programs of the University. There to receive these funds were Dr. Ralph Brauer, for the Institute of Biomedical Research; Frank Colvin, of the Student Government Association, on behalf of station WLOZ; and Dr. Norman Kaylor, Dean of the School of Business Administration.

Since January 1964 the Friends of the University have received membership fees, memorials and donations from individuals, businesses and civic organizations interested in the progress of the university. Begun to help the college library grow to meet the accreditation needs of the rapidly expanding curriculum and student body, it has become a friend to the university as a whole.

To date almost $90,000 has been given. Although most of the money has been used for books, periodicals and technical equipment for the library, the organization has directed some of its funds to other university projects such as the display case for archeological exhibits, to the Music Department for soundproofing a room, toward the purchase of the Steinway Concert Grand, and additional special lighting equipment needed in the Sarah Graham Kenan Memorial Auditorium and to the library at the Institute of Biomedical Research.

Graduate school begins

The Biology Department is now offering a graduate study program in Marine Biology.

The program is divided into three tracks: Marine Biology, Biological Oceanography, and Coastal Biology. All tracks require 30 semester hours with a thesis.

The department offers excellent facilities for the program, including boats ranging from 13 to 72 feet, modern research equipment and the Institute for Marine Biomedical Research, located at Wrightsville

Writing Center welcomes all students

"When I came here as a freshman, my first paper got a B minus. Then I went from a C to a C minus. I started going to the writing center and got an A in English 101 and 102. I attribute most of it to the Writing Center." -Ray Kriegbaum, Sophomore.

Today Ray is a student tutor at UNCW's Writing Center. So is Sherry Niven, and both of them have strong, positive feelings about the Center.

"I think it's really valuable. I've taken papers of mine there ever since it has been open," says Sherry.

The Writing Center is designed to help you, regardless of your student classification and major, improve your writing abilities. No grades are given and it is a free service.

In addition to Ray and Sherry, the other staff members are Dr. Lil Brannon, Dr. John Clifford and Dr. JoAnn Seiple.

When you go to the Writing Center, be prepared to write. It is a writing service - not a correcting service. The tutors don't just proofread, although they help find errors. They give suggestions on style, structure, organization and punctuation.

The Center is not just for students with considerable writing problems. People that know all the basics are also encouraged to go.

"Everybody that's writing should go," says Ray. "We're available to the people who can write but just want some feedback."

Both tutors agree that merely talking with somebody about your paper is beneficial. The Writing Center is where you can find someone that's willing to listen.

"Sometimes," stresses Sherry. "I've had students to come in and say 'I'm supposed to write about a personal experience and I don't know what to write about. And I'll say 'Tell me something about yourself. What do you like to do? And they start to talk and pretty soon they've got their paper talked out. They've already talked about what they can write about, but it's just not something that occurred to them because most people think they've never done anything interesting. But everybody has."

"Most of the time you get students that are stuck about what to say," Ray explains. "They have an idea in their brain but they need somebody to help them bring it out. The best way to do that is to rap with somebody else. Just talk it out."

A tutor gives helpful ideas

This year the Writing Center has experienced considerable growth. Last semester the Center saw 410 students, as opposed to 303 in the fall of 1978. Of the students that went in the fall of 1979, 57 percent returned for two or more visits. The average amount of time spent per student session was 45 minutes.

Hannah Ungari and Brenda Moore visited the Center for the first time this semester. Both say they plan to return.

"I think it's helpful," says Hannah. "I really do. If you ever have any questions, the staff would be glad to help."

Brenda echoes these sentiments. "For a student that needs help, the Writing Center is very valuable."

Ray says that a majority of students return to the Center with "really positive" feedback.

"And if they didn't," he adds, "We wouldn't have that big room. We started out in a little closet-type thing in the library."

The most attractive feature of the Writing Center seems to be its casual atmosphere.

"I just found that it's a really comfortable place to be," Hannah says. "It's spacious. The atmosphere is friendly and open."

Ray believes that the Writing Center is the most "Unique" place at UNCW.

"You're dealing one-on-one with a person. You don't have to worry about being uptight. You don't have to worry about twenty other people hearing what you have to say. It's you and your tutor. You're one-on-one and you can't get that anywhere else on campus when you think about it," he contends.

For those that are interested in improving their writing capabilities, the Writing Center is located in room 202 on the second floor of the new classroom building. The Center's hours are from 10:00-12:00 and 1:30-3:30 on Mondays through Thursdays, and 6:00-9:00 on Tuesday and Wednesday nights.

Don't settle for inferior grades. Seek assistance at the Writing Center because, as Brenda says, "It could mean the difference between an A or a B." It could also mean the difference between passing or failing.

Volunteers Needed

Public relations person to plan public relations campaign and develop needed PR information for a new program. A few hours a week would be adequate.

Careful, caring recreation aides to work one morning per week with recreational therapy groups.

Woodcutters and stackers needed on Saturday mornings to prepare wood for families without fuel.

For details on these and other volunteer opportunities in New Hanover, Brunswick, or Pender counties, contact Linda Moore, Director of Student Union/Activities, in her office in the Pub, room 104.

Hope to make Motion Picture on campus

by Wendy Robbins

What began as just an interest for Darrell Hope has grown into an undertaking of great magnitude—a motion picture.

Darrell came to UNCW as a marine biology major. His interest in writing, acting, and directing prompted him to change his major to drama. He has decided to tie all of his interests together and make a motion picture for his senior project. "It was the only thing I could think of that would be a real challenge for me," he says. "I want to show what I've learned here and what I can do with it."

The movie is called "A Dirge for Nagasaki" and it is of a "new genre" called "extrapolation drama." Darrell explains that it "is a variant of science fiction that deals with man's sociological, psychological, philosophical past, present and future as compared to regular science fiction with man's technological future."

Darrell is careful of what he says about script because he doesn't want to give away too much of the story. "But," he says, "my point is: what if, when the bomb was dropped on Nagasaki, certain people died so suddenly that their souls didn't have a chance to escape from their bodies in time? Their souls could become radioactive. Could they be allowed to heaven or hell of their choice? And my answer was no."

Darrell is now on an advertising campaign to get technical and acting help. Auditions will be held February 11-13 at 7:00 p.m. in Kenan Hall.

He welcomes anyone that wants to help, especially UNCW students. But if he can't find help from on campus, he says he "will certainly" go off campus. "I know that there is talent up there in those dorms," he states. "There's talent over there in College Manor. I've seen it out here. It's just that these people have got to be reached. They must know what's going on so they can come and do something."

Technical people are needed immediately, so they can get familiar with the audio-visual equipment. "When we get down to the final taping we don't want to have to take time and give lessons in camera-work," he says.

If anyone wants information, they can go by the Creative Arts Department or call the office at 791-4330, extension 2440. The secretary will know where to find Darrell or will leave a message for him.

Most of the taping will be done on campus at the S.R.O. Theater. The rest of it will be done on location in town. Darrell says that this is not the first time someone has done a film at UNCW. "But I think I can safely say it is the first time anybody has done a motion picture here of this magnitude, of this size," he states.

The movie should be completed "anywhere from now until infinity," Darrell jokes. In reality, he hopes to "have the whole thing wrapped up by the last of April."

If the movie is "good enough" he would like to air it on television. "I'm hoping that if it turns out fine that maybe we can get our educational T.V. system in North Carolina to pick it up and show it over PBS (Public Broadcasting Service) channel. But that remains to be seen," he says.

He intends to give UNCW students the opportunity to see his film. "If we can't offer it to PBS or anything like that," he explains, "we would like to try to see if we can get it on the public access station here in town. If not, I'll just hold private screenings here on campus."

At first, Darrell had a different attitude toward making the film. He saw it as something he could "just sit back and have a nice time" doing. Now his view has changed and he attributes this mostly to Dr. Terry Rogers, the chairman of the drama department. He says that Dr. Rogers is what has kept him in drama. "I think Dr. Rogers is the driving force behind our drama program," he states. "He is what keeps what we have together. I really admire the man and he has instilled within me a sense of cinematic beauty and aesthetics. Before, I saw the film as a fun thing to do but now I can see it as much more than. I owe it to him."

Darrell is disappointed with "what the media has done to science fiction." He says it has "glamorized" science fiction to the point that many people view it as "escapist." More movies need to be made with a "minimal of special fantastic effects and maximum of good strong storylines and characters," he believes. "Special effects are nice, they are beautiful. They're a nice icing on the cake, but you have to have meat," he contends. "It's not just a martian shooting a ray gun at an earth man or Captain Kirk and Mr. Spock all get in the Enterprise and zoom away to the far side of the galaxy. Science fiction does not have to take place on a far planet. It can take place right here on earth. With the extrapolation drama I'm hoping to show people that an idea can be just as powerful and just as stimulating as an image."

It was through the electronic media that Darrell first got interested in science fiction. "Then I got into reading," he says. "I found a whole new world. And it's not just spaceships flying around—it's interesting philosophy, sociology, experiments, and political theory. You can find out about physics but you can also find out things about human nature."

Prestia needs members for Bowling Club

by Wendy Robbins

To baseball players a strike is an unwanted occurrence, one that is sometimes accompanied by disdainful choruses of "boo." But to bowlers such as Tom Prestia, a strike is a blessing that often snatches the lead from an opponent.

Tom, a sophomore at UNCW, is an exceptional bowler. His tournament average is around 190, which explains why he is a certified coach. The highest he has ever bowled is 247.

"I've been bowling since I was about eleven," he explains. "That's pretty close to ten years. Back in New York my father is a manager of a bowling alley. He's a good bowler and he got me interested in it when I was real young. My brother and I started getting good at it and about four or five years ago we began competing against each other. That made us better."

Two organizations for bowlers are the American Bowling Congress and the American Junior Bowling Congress.

Tom says he is a "junior" bowler. "The ABC is for adults. The AJBC is for juniors, those under twenty-one. If you're AJBC you can't win any money. That's the rule," he explains.

Last summer, Tom got into the National Scratch Junior Bowlers' Association. This organization holds tournaments in different cities in North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia. "It (the NSJBC) is for any junior bowler," he says, "college or younger, that wants to bowl. It's scratch, no handicaps."

Tom is now in the process of organizing a bowling club. In order to do so, he has to write up a constitution and get a budget compiled for next year to present to the SGA.

"What I want to do is try and get together a bunch of people that like to bowl. Anybody, because bowling is a lot of fun," he states. "There are a lot of tournaments specifically for bowlers in college. Beer companies like Miller put up many of these tournaments. To participate in them you have to have bowled in college against other colleges. The only way you do that is either to have a team or have a club."

Tom thinks it "would be nice" for UNCW to play matches against Charlotte, Greensboro, Fayetteville and other colleges. He is eager to get some bowlers in tournaments. He says he will "keep records of how the people bowl and when a tournament or a match comes up have the five people with the highest averages represent UNCW."

He is confident that enough students will be interested in establishing a bowling club.

"I know three other bowlers besides myself that go to this school who bowl in the scratch tournaments. So at least there's four. The bowling class is always full, so people do like to bowl. Bowling is expensive, but if we can get a break as far as price goes with the bowling alleys, I'm sure we'll get enough people to play."

Most anyone can learn how to bowl, Tom feels, but some people may catch on to it quicker than others. The main thing to do is practice. "Some people can just pick up a bowling ball and they're natural at it," he states. "A decent average is around 130. To get any better than that you have to want to be better. I've been bowling for almost ten years now and seriously for about four. I went from a 130 up to a 190, where I am now, in those four years. It's no quick thing. You just have to work at it. I had a real good teacher—my father. Plus, I got free practice time at home because he was manager. That's an advantage very few people get. But because of it, I got to where I am a little bit quicker than most people."

For the beginners, Tom offers some advice. Use a bowling ball with a weight that is comfortable—"that's not too heavy and that's definitely not too light. You'd get by with one that's too heavy," he says. "If it's too light you can throw it real quick and fast, but you tend to be a little inaccurate because you're throwing it (in the air), not rolling it."

There's no running or "fancy steps" involved in bowling, he contends. "You simply walk. You've got certain arm movements to get the ball where you want it. I take a five-step approach. The first four steps set me up for the slide which is the fifth step. UNCW lucky to have experienced cheerleading squad

UNCW is lucky to have an experienced and ultra enthusiastic cheerleading squad on hand this year.

The group consists of co-captains Lee Miller and Cathy Mitchell, Sharon Brown, Sady Dwiggins, Vicki Garrett, Cecelia Greene, Phil Heitman, Leila McEachern and Advisor Judith Lewis.

The cheerleaders play a vital role in supporting UNCW sports, as well as promoting school spirit. They can also be considered representatives for UNCW.

Co-captain Cathy Mitchell explained "the cheerleaders, allong with the teams, serve as ambassadors to the other schools we play."

The cheerleaders enjoy what they are doing. They enjoy cheering, they all get along well together, they have fun.

Cheering allows them to meet new people, to travel, to support the school, and most of all to spread school spirit throughout the student body.

Support. That is all the cheerleaders ask of the student body. School spirit is a key factor in aiding the teams to victory.

The cheerleaders are thankful for the amount of enthusiasm that students have shown so far this year. However, they would love a lot more.

They cannot understand why more students don't come to the games. Why should students sit in their dorm rooms when they could be watching quality Seahawk basketball free of charge, and support their school at the same time?

The cheerleaders want to do more audience participation type cheers. However, they must have a full house crowd that is willing to scream. They hope to build up "Seahawk Fever" in games to come.

Co-captain Lee Miller explained that "compared to other schools, UNCW lacks a lot of enthusiasm; our crowds could be a lot bigger." The crowds on hand have to come alive to make the cheerleaders' job worthwhile.

The basketball players have told the cheerleaders that having the home team advantage, and having a screaming crowd pulling for them really fires them up to play better ball.

Therefore, the cheerleaders support the teams 100 percent.

Their performance at every game remains feverishly energetic and constantly supercharged the whole way through. They urge UNCW students and Wilmington residents alike to join them in their constant support for the Seahawks.

In the cheerleaders there is a perpetual optimism. It is evident that they enjoy what they are doing. Even after grueling two-hour practice sessions four times a week, they remain in high spirits.

They are even planning a fund-raising project for the future so that when the Seahawks receive their NIT tournament bid, they can accompany the team and cheer them on to victory. How's that for a positive attitude?

Larson leads Intramurals

by Eddie Knox

(The Second Article In The Series On UNCW's Clubs)

Over the years the intramural programs at UNCW have become an integral part of campus life. A number of students take part in these programs throughout the entire year. The intramural programs this year have taken on a new look chiefly because of a new Staff and Leadership.

Lea Larson, new director of intramural sports here at UNCW, cites more participation, particularly from women, as her main objective in developing the intramural program.

"My personal goal is to have 50 percent of the student population participating in some sort of intramural program", she states.

Larson, who held a somewhat similar position at Austin-Peay University before coming to UNCW, has definite plans for reaching her goal, such as the introduction of new intramural sports and special events.

Among some of the new sports students can expect to see are floor hockey, two-pitch softball, and for the women, coed league basketball.

Special events planned in the near future include an "all-nighter" February 15, which will include many varied activities and, as the name suggests, continue throughout the night.

Skating and surfing parties are also scheduled for spring.

For campus students who complain about not knowing of intramurals in advance, the Salesclerk Display, a device which continually runs messages across a screen, will be placed in the cafeteria to inform students of upcoming intramural events.

Larson stresses her "open door" policy to all students, and can be reached at university extension 2261.

Following a loss on Saturday at East Carolina, the travel weary 'Hawks were ready to come home and play in the friendly confines of Trask Coliseum. The weekend had proved difficult as they dropped their seventh game of the year against a strong Pirates' team from Greenville, North Carolina.

Their Monday night opponent was South Carolina State and the busy 'Hawks were seeking revenge after losing a close game down in Orangeburg, South Carolina earlier in the year. Before the game the Seahawks record stood at 11-7, and needed aid of help in the win column if UNCW was to attain a twenty game winning season and possibly a shot at the N.I.T. With only eleven more games remaining on the schedule this hope was fast fading.

It became brighter Monday night as the 'Hawks controlled all facets of the game and defeated the Bulldogs of South Carolina State by a 72-63 margin. This win moves UNCW's record to 12-7 for the year. More important than this win, however, is how they won.

The first-half was a text-book example of how a team can turn things around. The 'Hawks had been an up-and-down team for most of the year but no sign of that was evident as UNCW cruised to a seven point half-time lead at 31-24.

The burden of the first-half scoring fell on Freshman Shawn Williams and he carried the load for a 16 points, including an eight-for-eight performance from the floor. No other 'Hawk had more than four points. The first-half was the epitome of Coach Mel Gibson's style as the team played intelligent ball control.

At the beginning of the second-half it was obvious that the Bulldogs had regrouped after shooting 31 percent from the floor in the opening half. They blazed to a one-point lead at 36-35 with 15:53 remaining in the period. UNCW called a time-out and settled for trading baskets with South Carolina State until the 11:00 minute mark. With nine minutes remaining Senior, Garry Cooper of UNCW took control of the game and fired up the crowd with several dunk and bank shots.

Leading by only four points at 47-43 Danny Davis of the Seahawks slammed home two points off a steal and the 'Hawks were never in danger again.

The 'Hawks went on to win at 72-63 behind the perfect 11-for-11 shooting of Shawn Williams. He finished the night with a flying slam dunk at the buzzer. Garry Cooper followed William's 23 point effort with 14.

The Bulldogs were paced by Gregory Wilson with 18 points and Marty Lane's 10.

HOMECOMING

Last Saturday night was UNCW's traditional Homecoming game. This year our opponents were the Bulldogs from the University of North Carolina at Asheville. UNCW came into the game hoping to upset the 'Hawks and put a damper on the spirit that prevailed in Trask Coliseum during Homecoming weekend.

Someone forgot to tell the Bulldogs about a player named Garry Cooper. The 'Hawks began the game in a sluggish fashion, but the outside shooting of Senior John Haskins kept the 'Hawks in the game. Then Coach Gibson noticed a flaw in UNCAs defense, their zone was playing the guards and not UNCW's big men. This allowed "Coop" enough room to delight the fans with several exciting slam dunks.

He scored a game high 19 points in the contest. Danny Davis also got into the act as he shook the entire backboard on a two-hand slam. When a lay-up or dunk was not available UNCW passed the ball back outside for an outside shot or fed it back inside for a turn-around jumper.

The strength of the Bulldogs showed as they rebounded well and took several shots each trip down court. Most of the damage during the first half was done by UNCA's Ogden Braxton as he hit on 4-of-5 shots mostly from the 18 to 20 foot range.

Both teams settled for a 32-24 half-time score. The 'Hawks managed an eight point edge.

During the second-half the Bulldogs pulled to within eight on several occasions but trailed by 12 most of the way.

Ladies improve greatly

Staff

Going into last Thursday nights game with Pembroke State University the Lady Seahawks of UNC-Wilmington had managed a record of 4-9. Even though their record is not impressive the Lady 'Hawks have played well all season under first-year coach Marilyn Christoph. Christoph referred to this year as a "return to basics, beginning with the foundation."

The task of improving their record against third-ranked Pembroke proved too much and they dropped the decision by a 72-59 score. Ironically, Christoph was the builder of the Pembroke dynasty of outstanding basketball. She felt like she was playing against her own team and rightly so, because she had either coached or recruited 11 of the 12 members of the Pembroke squad.

Feeling good about the remainder of the season, the Lady 'Hawks took to the court last Saturday night against Elizabeth City State.

Even with a depleted bench and foul trouble the 'Hawks managed a 79-73 win against the Lady Braves. The entire game was marked by exciting play as neither team could dominate the tempo. In the end, UNCW won, pulling their mark up to 5-10.

Guard Beth Pruitt led in the 'Hawks scoring with 17 points.

Her heady ballplay steadied the women and enabled them to capitalize on Elizabeth City's mistakes. Reserves Darci Wilson and Kathy Smith tossed in 12 points apiece.

The Lady Braves were paced by Dina Chavers who scored 19 points.

Monday night the Seahawks knocked off Livingstone College to up their season record to 6-10. With a couple more victories the Lady 'Hawks should qualify for the Division 11 State Playoffs that will take place in early March.

LIVINGSTONE

UNCW's Lady 'Hawks, behind the 32 point performance of Freshman Linda Plum, overpowered the Lady Bears of Livingstone Saturday, 89-68.

The Lady Hawks, who never trailed after the opening 2 minutes, placed four other players in double figures, with Janet Grady pumping in 16, Vertha Dixon and Beth Pruitt each adding 2, and Darci Wilson coming off the bench for 10.

Coach Marilyn Christoph's strategy of deploying her "tall" lineup (Dixon, Grady, Plum, Pruitt, Shands) paid off handsomely as UNCW also controlled the boards, pulling down 53 rebounds during the contest.

UNCW's 15 point halftime lead (47-32) was quickly cut to 49-42, due largely to a tenacious Livingston press. However, the Lady 'Hawks rose to the occasion.

With Janet Grady providing most of the fireworks, UNCW put the game out of reach on the strength of a 14-1 tear. (Cont. On P11)

Ailing 'Hawks lose

by Harold Thompson

Going into last Saturday's swim meet with East Carolina University the swimming Seahawks of UNCW had hopes of knocking off a state contender and possibly qualifying several of their swimmers for the Nationals. What transpired at the meet, however, accomplished neither of these goals.

East Carolina handed both the men's and women's teams of UNC-Wilmington losses as they captured the most points. ECU defeated the men by a score of 10-0 and the women by a score of 10-0. This shameful loss was the meet of the season for the Seahawks because a win over the ECU Pirates would assure the 'Hawks a regional ranking. Unfortunately, a number of the swimming Seahawks became the victims of flu. This caused several line-up changes that produced a weaker team.

The only bright spot for the 'Hawks was Sam O'Leary's record breaking 200 meter butterfly swim. His time was 1:55.40. Ellen Cushman also continued her assault on the record books as she won three individual events.

UNCW's next home meet will be on Saturday, February 9th in the Trask Coliseum swimming complex. Come out and support the 'Hawks as they take on William and Mary University.

Sam O'Leary, Winner of the 200 meter butterfly, while setting a new school record of 1:55.40.

Racquetball Club defeats ECU

(Contributed by) Mitch Covington

A recent trip to Greenville, North Carolina yielded a very successful afternoon for five Seaboard racquetball club members. Mitch Covington, Clint Walker, Jerry Monahan, Andy Bowles and Mike Easton traveled to East Carolina University on Saturday, January 26 to face a tough squad of ten.

Due to the difference in the size of the squads each UNCW player faced two opponents. Because of the two-to-one ratio, each 'Hawk player faced a fresh Pirate player. Even as this may seem, UNCW still came out on top with a score of 9-1. Only two of the matches went into a tie-breaker.

A match consists of two, 21 point games, with an eleven point tie breaker. The tie-breaker is only used if the opponent's split wins in the first two games.

The club plans to travel to North Carolina State University to take on their club team. The Seaboard plans to take on the Seaboard players as well as the Seaboard players over the Seaboard players.

If you happen to be a racquetball enthusiast or curious about the club then a few more details about the club may be interesting to you. They are available through contacting Mitch Covington at 791-9292, or going by and seeing Dr. Robert Wolff in Trask Gym.

The racquetball club reserves five courts every Thursday night from 6:30 until the close of gym for practice and matches. If you are interested come by and check it out. Dues are only two dollars a year. If you can not come by then contact either Mitch Covington, Jerry Monahan or Dr. Robert Wolff.

Students learn Karate in Club setting

by Eddie Knox

Of the many clubs open to students around campus, certainly one of the most exciting and beneficial is the Karate Club.

Mohammad Nafissi, who spearheads the club, holds a Black Panther, the equivalent of a Black Belt, in Chinese Boxing. He stresses that although he is extremely happy with the turnout this semester, and interested persons are welcome to come out and join the group, which meets every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday at 5 p.m. above Hanover Hall gymnasium.

Women are welcome, also. "We have several women members, but any other who want to learn an effective way to defend themselves are invited to attend", says Nafissi, who mastered the art in Tehran, Iran and Montreal, Canada.

"Although a few of the members have some Martial Arts experience, most are beginners", says Eddie Dean, a Freshman who is also a brown belt in full-contact Karate.

Dean, originally from Hawaii, learned Karate in Fayetteville at a school run by his brother-in-law, who is a champion in the sport.

For the uninitiated, proficiency in the Martial Arts is rewarded with belts, darker belts indicating greater proficiency. In ascending order, the belts are white, orange, yellow, green, blue, and black.

SHOULD UNCW RECIEVE A POST-SEASON BERTH???

by Harold Thompson

It's getting to that point in the season where everyone from bookies to coaches to fans are speculating on what teams will be chosen for post-season play. Due to expansion of both the NCAA and NIT tournaments a total of 80 teams will be selected to participate in this post-season glory.

Traditionally, teams like UCLA, Notre Dame, Carolina, Marquette, Kentucky, and St. John's expect a berth in post-season action. Teams such as these and many others prepare from the first day of practice for the "second season." UNCW has not been one of these teams, but should they be? For the last two seasons The Seahawks have 19 games and lost no more than eight. This record is very respectable and we have been under consideration by the NIT for post-season play both of those years. Still no bid has been extended.

Currently, the Seahawks are 14-7 going into the month of February and have a realistic shot at winning the elusive 20 games. With eight games and have a realistic shot at winning the elusive 20 games. With eight games remaining the 'Hawks can win six and lose two to end the season at 20-9. This goal will not be easy as the 'Hawks will face tough games against East Carolina, East Tennessee State, Ga. Southern, Howard, Boston U. and Maine. No one ever said getting into the NCAA or the NIT would be easy.

Ideally, only the elite of college basketball receive bids, and if UNCW goes on to their first 20-game winning season they will have proven that they are one of the elite. One of the best!

A team's record is not the only criteria considered when a team is selected. It's conference standing (unfortunately, UNCW is still an independant), the difficulty of their schedules, the amount of drawing power a team possesses (remember college basketball is a "big business" sport), the charisma a team has, and finally, the overall ability that a team has.

The 'Hawks have the winning record and have proven that it can play competitively with any team it faces (their largest defeat margin in the last three years was by 21 points). We are not in a conference, but neither is Notre Dame or Marquette. UNCW has charisma, just watch Garry Cooper or Danny Davis on a rebound stuff or watch Barry Taylor slide between two or three opponents on a fast-break to score. With John Haskins and Dennis Tobin we have the outside scoring threat. With Freshman Shawn Williams and Scott Prudhoe and backup Jimmy Denton we have versatility and depth. We have charisma, and ability. Our biggest liability lies in our drawing power. As a team, UNCW does not have much national recognition. This is a problem, but not one that can't be cured. A little good old fashion hype could turn UNCW into a house-hold name.

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

SHAWN

WILLIAMS

Shawn Williams has been selected as the "Athlete of the Week" this week for his superb all around play on the hardwood. During UNCW's game against S.C. State last week Williams turned in a record breaking performance and lifted the 'Hawks to a much needed win. His 11-for-11 shooting from the field set a new accuracy field goal shooting percentage. The old record was held by Garry Cooper who went 12-for-14 against Baltimore in 1978. The new record is of course, 100 percent.

Williams also connected on his only free-throw attempt and finished the night with 23 points. Only a Freshman, he has displayed an enormous amount of poise and control on and off the court.

Williams credited his high school coach with much of success this season, but also praises Coach Gibson and Seniors Barry Taylor and Garry Cooper with making the transition from high school to college ball easier.

He is a Business major and hopes someday to land a management position. Also, he hopes UNCW can receive a bid to the N.I.T. and play in Madison Square Garden.

ENTERTAINMENT

Waylon plays to capacity crowd

by Julie Russ

The capacity crowd that packed Trask Coliseum on the night of January 25 was there to hear the man who brought country music out of the barnyard and into the limelight. Waylon Jennings has paved the way for such crossover artists as Dolly Parton and Barbara Mandrell, and without a mane of blonde hair to help him on his way.

Jennings' backup group, the Waylors, opened the show awkwardly with no introduction of band members, which was a pity because there were several top-notch musicians featured. Ralph Mooney, recently spotlighted in Rolling Stone for his innovative style on pedal steel guitar, proved his prowess once again as he made the steel wail and whine with his expert picking.

Launching into a toe-tapping version of "In the Jailhouse," the Waylors played well, and the song was livened by the keyboard skills of an unidentified piano man, who bore an eerie resemblance to the late Lowell George. (Note: no song titles were given throughout the entire performance, therefore any incorrect titles are a result of misinformation). The next number, a bluesy tune which featured Jennings' lovely female backup singer (who was, unfortunately, unidentified to the audience) gave her a chance to spotlight her impressive voice range. Belting out the "Somewhat tired lyrics with impressive style, she proved she was more than an attractive prop as she wooed the crowd with gospel-like fervor.

Finishing their brief set, the Waylors made way for the Crickets. Judging by audience reaction, Buddy Holly's former backup duo was the surprise hit of the evening. Turning in a spare, polished performance, they cranked out such classics like "Maybe Baby," "That'll Be the Day," and "Oh Boy." Aided by an unobtrusive drum backbeat and an airtight bass, the Crickets left the crowd cheering for more. Basic rock and roll made a brief heart-warming return as the rhythm guitarist dominated the acoustics, with vocals that were satisfactory, if predictably perky. Their rendition of "It's so Easy" was the peak of the performance, with Holly's boyish quaver unerringly reproduced.

Jennings came striding into the spotlight like a Viking into battle—wary, but willing. Puffy and slit-eyed, he looked the worse for wear from his months on the road. Beginning with "Well All Right," Jennings made no effort beyond the bare essentials, mousing lyrics he could probably recite from inside a coma. If not for his band he would have been glaringly inadequate; as it was, his fans seemed unaware of his apathy.

Challenging Charlie Daniels in bulk if not in style, Jennings turned in a few impressive guitar riffs while displaying little if any stage presence. His vocals were tired and strained and he moved as little as possible onstage. Mustering up a little showmanship, he managed to deliver some of his best hits in a more enthusiastic vein. "Amanda" was a real crowd-pleaser, and had the ladies shrieking with joy. "Ain't Living Long Like This" and "Good-Hearted Woman" were also well-received, being patented Waylon Jennings honky-tonk songs, just written to drown your sorrows in.

Jennings offered a bit more effort on "Don't You Think This Outlaw Bit Done Got Out of Hand", a song he has admitted is close to his heart. The appreciative audience sang, whistled, stomped and screamed in participation, as Jennings smiled blearily and got on with the business of making a living.

The high point of an otherwise mediocre performance came when Jennings hit the chords in the beginning of "Black to Basics": for just a moment, the nostalgia and disillusionment were plain to see. The lyric "Let's go to Lukenbach, Texas, with Waylon 'n' Willie and the boys! This successful life we're living's got us feuding like the Hatfields and McCoy's," had never sounded more pained, reminding all that the man before us was an aging grandfather, and a road-weary one at that.

Waylon Jennings was recently chosen by Rolling Stone critics as the best country artist of the year. Given his short, uninspired set Friday night, the award could not have been given on the basis of his touring performances. Age is catching up with Waylon, or with his music, or both. Who can say which is the saddest?

John Bayley to appear in Pub Feb. 10

With all of the sounds that woo the public ear and then fade into eternal obscurity, it takes a performer with a special style to make a mark on today's music world. "Unique" is a word that an artist must grasp and cultivate. Such an artist is John Bayley.

John's history as both a musician and a man can be described only as "unique". Born in Georgetown, Guyana in 1946, John began playing professionally at age 14 in local show, clubs, and concerts throughout South America. He first came to the States in 1966 on a religious scholarship which brought him initially to New York City, where he spent the summer playing Gospel music. In Autumn of the same year, he continued on to Little Rock, Arkansas - studied there for two years - and remained for another two playing in coffee houses and clubs.

In September of 1969, he moved on to Tulsa, Oklahoma and played in folkbars, coffee houses, and college concert arenas while continuing his religious studies and becoming an ordained minister at Oral Roberts University.

It was in the Fall of 1972, upon relocating in Kansas City, that John Bayley began the transition from a part-time player to a professional artist. And it was in Kansas City that, within the following five years, he grew from an evangelistic folk musician to an act with a repertoire consisting of a melange of Pop, Jazz, and Rock influences. During this time, he performed as a "warm-up" act in both indoor concerts and outdoor festivals for such varied artists as The Ohio Players, Bill Withers, Herbie Hancock, Ike & Tina Turner, Ravi Shankar, Country Joe & The Fish, Lou Reed, and The Nitty Gritty Dirt Band.

September of 1977 marked John Bayley's arrival in Colorado. After playing the Breckridge lodges for a month with John Bayley & The Family Reunion Band, he went on his own again and has remained so ever since.

In March of 1978 came the move to Colorado Springs where John lives now with his wife and family. He has continued to play the area with his old friends from Kansas City days, and has added the likes of Taj Mahal, Jummy Cliff, Peter Dinklage, Richie Havens, and Eddie Kendricks. And, most recently he has taken on opening for Heavy Metal Rock acts such as AC-DC and New England, and in addition has toured with The Mission Mountain Wood Band. He continues to tour throughout the States, as well as in Canada.

John Bayley has clearly evolved into a musical force. His solo instrumentation includes both Twelve and Six String guitars, Mandolin, Bazouki, all Latin & African percussion instruments, as well as providing his own foot powered rhythm section on the Tambourines. And with a voice that has been described as "honey laced with rum", his music is understandably in a category all by itself. Inclusive of the influences of Latin Jazz, Reggae & Calypso, British Rock, and Contemporary Popular Music, the sound is John's and John's alone - his personal and original interpretation, flavor, and style which make for an "uncommonly dynamic presence".

John Bayley will be appearing in the Pub on Sunday, February 10, at 8 p.m. admission is free with student I.D., $1 to general public. He is presented by the University Program Board in conjunction with the observance of Black Awareness Month.

Dick Gregory visits UNCW

by Doug Browne

Critic, author, philosopher and prophet of doom Dick Gregory memorized his audience as he spoke to a packed house Monday night in Kenan Auditorium. Gregory, a comedian/lecturer, came to the campus of UNCW in keeping with a tour of some 300 colleges and universities throughout the United States. Mr. Gregory commented on everything from food to the Mafia and internal conspiracies in his lecture that lasted better than three hours.

The theme and closing comment was the fact that America was "morally and spiritually bankrupt", and that the college students of this nation have the power to change the situation.

Our hats are off to the Black Student Union for a job well done. Mr. Gregory was an extremely adept speaker and his comments certainly deserve attention. For further literature, write: Dick Gregory "Health" PO. Box 266 Plymouth, Mass. 02360

Campus Chuckles

by Julie Russ

Dad disagrees on music preference

It had to happen sooner or later. I was spinning Molly Hatchet's latest disc when Dad came boiling into my room like a raging tide of Efferdent (blue and foaming!) He ground the vinyl to powder before my very eyes. The man was obviously disturbed.

"Dad!" I howled, in agony. "That was Molly Hatchet!" "I don't care if it was Lizzie Borden!" he snarled. "This family is going to listen to some real music for a change!"

I cringed, imagining the nostalgic strains of Cole Porter wafting through our happy home. Or worse yet, Conway Twitty and the Twitty Birds.

But no, good old Dad was giving me a chance to redeem myself. He was pawing through the stacks of LPs that make my room a fire hazard, mumbling dazedly to himself. "Good lord, I feed and clothe you and you repay me with this?" He pulled out a copy of "Bad Girls" and gave Donna Summer a long appraising stare. "She looks like a hooker," he announced, ignoring my feeble mutterings that uh, she was supposed to look that way.

He did pause and consider Willie Nelson briefly, before sighing, "Too bad, but anyone with a ponytail probably couldn't pick a Gibson worth a damn." A man of quick judgement, my dad. Shuffling through the albums, some of music's greats fell by the wayside. The Knack was perverted, Deborah Harry had lice, Bruce Springsteen looked like a hood, James Taylor sounded terminal, and Elton John was a lost cause. And so it went.

I was beginning to convulse when he finally reached the end of the wax tracks. He gave me a look of pitiful confusion. "What ever happened to Patti Page?" he wailed. "Hank Williams? Buddy Holly, even?!" I suggested he go crank up his gramophone and reminisce to his moldy heart's content.

He slouched out, still muttering, "Frank Sinatra? Rudy Vallee? Brenda Lee?..." He turned on the tube and soon I heard the unmistakable whine of the Grand Ole Opry in full cry.

My eyes were popping and my hands shaking when I finally found my earphones. Soon I was immersed in Florida-based funk once again. I wondered if I should ask for the bucks to hear M.H. in concert...but why flirt with disaster?

rolling to a comfortable 63-43 cushion.

From that point, only the final score remained in doubt. The 89-point effort represents the highest output by the Lady Hawks this season, and the quality of play exhibited should kindle hopes of a .500 record.

UNCW now jumps to 8-11, with six games remaining on the 1979-80 schedule.

Barry Taylor controlled the second-half as he dominated the tempo and scored practically at will with his driving lay-ups. He ended the game with six assists and added ten points, nine in the second-half.

With 7:11 to play the 'Hawks called a time-out and the result was the unveiling of Coach Gibson's new tease-delay strategy. Shawn Williams led the slowdown as he played the middle. The new offense worked well and UNCW maintained the lead and won the game by a 69-57 margin.

UNCW now travels up north to face Boston University and Maine. Their next home game is this Saturday night against Howard, at 7:30 p.m.

word. Just remember UNCW Charlotte and "Cornbread" Maxwell.

The final line is that the time has come for UNCW to be recognized. No longer should the Seahawks be put under the shadow of the other teams in North Carolina. If UNCW wins 20 or even 19 games and does not receive a post-season berth in the NCAA or NIT tournaments then the selection committee for these organizations should be re-evaluated to determine if their selection process is fair.

The Ten Best Albums of the Seventies: By David Carter

With the seventies safely behind us, it's time to examine the best rock 'n' roll offerings of that decade. To pick the best, (for our purposes, ten will be the limit) is to place oneself in dire jeopardy of receiving a thumping, for omitting John Q. Public's favorite LP, but should this gazette neglect to publish such a list, it'll only get done elsewhere, so better here than there. What comprises the "best" is open to the individual's interpretation, but they should be something that will be remembered in years to come in terms of "yeah, that was a good album." Also, they're probably the most worn records in one's collection resulting in periodical replacements. Armed with these flexible guidelines for excellence, the winners for best performance on a rock album are:

The original Woodstock children, Crosby, Stills, Nash and sometimes Young for their 1970 masterpiece, Deja Vu. This album somehow tends to capture the good intentions, hopes and dreams of the hippie-yippie movement that was vibrant in the sixties and that managed to spill over into the early seventies. It also shows that the separate talents in a band are seldom as productive as the whole. In this case, Neil Young was the notable exception, but oftentimes once the chemistry is destroyed, it's seldom recaptured. Incredibly tight harmonies and exceptional guitar work by Stills and Young makes this a shoo-in for one of the ten as does the strong songwriting by all, even Crosby, whose efforts are often, at best, forgotten.

Derek and the Dominos, fronted by the high priest of wailing guitar, Eric Clapton, for 1970's other masterpiece, Layla and Other Assorted Love Songs. The union of the two possibly best guitarists of the decade, Clapton and the late Duane Allman, produced the definitive guitar album of the era. Jean-Charles Costa may have said it best when he wrote concerning Layla that "if Clapton had recorded nothing else during his life, this album could have made up for it, that's how good it is." Beginning with "Bell Bottom Blues," "Tell the Truth" through "Little Wing" and the shimmering title track, the level of excellence reached by Clapton's leads and Allman's slide soars onward and upward, not to be matched by any others in this life.

The Who, for the best album they ever produced, Who's Next. Released in 1971, it was the culmination of everything the Who was and still is proficient at, however altered. The album was complete with Townshend power chords, potent DALTRY VOCALS* THUNDERING Ennistle bass and manic moon drumming, where he seemed to be in ten places at once. Who's Next is a showcase for several of rock's gems such as "Won't Get Fooled Again," "Behind Blue Eyes," and their classic live staple "Baba O'Reilly."

Led Zeppelin for the incredibly great Led Zeppelin IV or Zoso or whatever one cares to call it. Most people know it because it contains that old stand-by of the FM airways, "Stairway to Heaven." Still others know it because it contains such stalwarts as "When the Lee-Vee Breaks," "Black Dog," and "Misty Mountain Hop." However it's remembered, it stands as one of the great works of the seventies rock era with the powerhouse vocals of Robert Plant and guitar genius of Jimmy Page. A late 1971 release, it's easily tallied in among the ten.

That former Buffalo Springfield, CSN&Y, Neil Young for 1972's Harvest. It exhibits Young at his best: mixing rock and folk with equal aplomb. The Canadian shows his versatility by employing the use of the London Symphony Orchestra on one cut and the Stray Gators on another: acoustics on one track, electric on the next. Although the production is perhaps a bit lush for a lone buffalo, Harvest showcases Young greats such as "Alabama," "Heart of Gold," and "The Needle and the Damage Done."

The original bad boys of rock 'n' roll, the Rolling Stones, who bill themselves, as do their legions of fans, "The greatest rock 'n' roll band in the world." With several great albums to their credit, Exile on Main Street is the one that receives the nod here. The Glimmer Twins cranked out a lot of good rockers, with classics like "Tumbling Dice," "Happy," "Rip This Joint," and "Sweet Virginia" being the standouts. Only the departure of Mick Taylor in 1974, and the addition of Ron Wood, lead haircut, in 1976 alters the line-up of this 1972 album.

Yes, for Close to the Edge, which also was released in 1972. Although pre-dated by the Moody Blues, Yes employed the use of a symphonic sound via moog synthesizers, Arp string ensembles and polymoogs, carrying on a bit farther than the Moody Blues cared to. Close to the Edge was the end result of Yes's attempts to fuse rock to an orchestrated sound. The album had excellent musicianship provided by Chris Squire (base), Rick Wakeman (keyboards) and Jon Anderson (vocals) and was not at all over-indulgent as some later efforts tended to be.

That travelling troubadour, Bob Dylan, for 1974's Blood on the Tracks. This album marked the return of Dylan to Columbia, where he began, from Asylum after a short-lived stint, where his career didn't exactly skyrocket the way it might have. Billed as his Comeback album, Blood on the Tracks was a display for Dylan doing what he excels at: strumming the guitar, playing the harmonica and telling stories. This album contains "Tangled Up in Blue," one of the best songs Dylan ever composed. Also, this effort showed Dylan doing acoustic music, when all around him were electric warriors. As usual, Dylan stays a step ahead of the masses.

The Jersey Devil, Bruce Springsteen, for 1975's epic rock 'n' roll album, Born to Run. Jon Landau coined it, Rolling Stone screamed it, and rock embraced it: "I have seen the future of rock 'n' roll and his name is Bruce Springsteen." This album has some of the highest voltage music that the seventies had and was an assurance to rock's old guard that not all the young turks would be punks or wear badges of New Wave. Included on this album was the seething "She's the One," and the haunting "Meeting Across the River," along with the title track that cannot be described, but has only to be heard to be understood and appreciated. □

And last but not least, Genesis for 1976's surprise album A Trick of the Tail. The album was indeed a surprise because the band's lead singer and focal point, Peter Gabriel, departed after several good, but largely unnoticed albums. Drummer Phil Collins stepped in and filled in at vocals the band continued unscathed. Their lyrics are unmatched by anyone as they tell stories and paint pictures with music based around Keyboardist Tony Banks, who shows why he has no peer when it comes to the use of a synthesizer or mellotron. This is probably their effort out of many outstanding albums.

These ten albums aren't listed in any particular order, other than by date of release, as any other way would be pretentious. If, by chance, your favorite hasn't been mentioned, take heart; you may find it in our honorable mentions department.

1. Led Zeppelin: In through the Out Door (1979)
2. Paul McCartney & Wings: Band on the Run (1973)
3. Renaissance: Ashe's Are Burning (1973)
4. Pink Floyd: The Dark Side of the Moon (1973)
5. The Grateful Dead: from the Mars Hotel (1974)
6. James Taylor: Sweet Baby James (1970)
7. Jethro Tull: Aqualung (1971)
8. The Raspberries: Best (1976)
9. YES: Fragile (1972)
10. Genesis: ...and then there were three... (1978)

If you still haven't located what you think should be here, you can be assured that you're not alone. The seventies were host to a flood of tastes and influences in the rock world, and there are several good works that weren't mentioned here, but all told, this is the cream of the crop. In retrospect, we can agree with what the Grateful Dead said ten years ago, ten years later: "What a long, strange trip it's been."

Students

hate dorm food

BLOOMINGTON* IN(CPS)-

Two Indiana University students have lost—at least for the time being—their chance to turn their displeasure over dorm food service into academic credit.

Sue Kesim and Richard Federici had applied for a Home Economics independent study to research, evaluate, and suggest improvements in the residence hall food service that daily feeds some 12,500 students.

Their dorm complex agreed to pay for part of the five-credit study, but the students lost a bid to have the student government pay for the rest of the credits when the government—called the Resident Halls Association (RHA)—tabled their request.

The RHA was going to reconsider the matter at its January meeting last week, but Kesim and Federici failed to ask the government to discuss it again.

The two juniors' request was tabled in December because some RHA officers "did not know if they believed in using student money to pay students to do class work," recalls RHA President David Neumann. If Kesim and Federici, who could not be reached for comment, had gotten their wish, each dorm resident would have effectively paid 1.5 cents for their credits.

Although Coach Christoph stressed that "defense won the game for us," there were a few standout individual performances.

Grady hit 25 points, shooting 9-of-16 from the floor and 7-of-9 from the line, including the big one. She also pulled down 18 rebounds, high for either team in the game.

"The kids were really excited about the win. This was certainly our biggest one, prestige-wise, this year. I can't say this is the most well executed game we've played, because it was messy in spots. I'll take the win, though."

If the Lady Hawks continue to play their final five games as well as this one, they'll win and have lots of fun doing it.

The Lady Hawks' next home game is tonight against Mount Olive. Game time is 5:30 p.m.

steps. The next important part is the release."

Tom explains that it "takes some practice to get used to the release. There's two styles - you can either roll it or crank it. I roll it because you get better results quicker."

When the ball is cranked, he says, it goes very fast. It rolls up to seventeen times from the moment it is released until the time it hits the pins. A ball that is rolled turns eight times, ten at the most, before it reaches the pins. "One isn't really any better than the other," he emphasizes. "A roller tends to have luck on a wider variety of lane conditions than a cranker does. But a cranker will shoot big scores. If the lanes are right for him, he'll blow you out of the house."

Tom says he doesn't employ any particular tactics to win a match. "You try to bowl your best, that's the only strategy there is."

Bowling appeals to him mainly because he has "grown up with it. I've always done it," he states. "I love going out there and bowling. It makes me feel good."

Anyone that shares Tom's interest in starting a bowling club can call him at 799-6905. If he is not home, just leave your name and number and he will get back in touch with you.

Tom believes that a bowling club is "a good chance to meet some other people that have at least one thing in common with you."

Carter proposes female draft registration

by Wendy Robbins

In the 203 years the United States has existed as a nation, no president has ever proposed that women be subject to the draft. But now the situation has changed. Last week President Jimmy Carter made the unprecedented announcement that both men and women should be required to register for the draft. History was made on Friday, February 8, 1980.

The main motive behind Carter's decision was Russia's military aggression in Afghanistan. It is feared that the Russians will try to encroach upon the Persian Gulf, an area from which the United States imports some of its much-needed oil.

Under the President's plan, men and women ages 19 and 20 would have to sign up for military service sometime during the summer. Carter has made it clear that women would be excluded from combat jobs. However, many people feel that registering women will eventually lead to putting them on the battlefield.

Anti-ERA organizations have criticized Carter's proposal. The idea of registering women has also met with strong opposition from Congress, who has been pushing for a program to register men for months.

Carter is now trying to get congressional approval of his plan to include women in the draft. It seems unlikely that Congress will cooperate. But that doesn't mean the plan is doomed. Some legal experts are now saying that the matter will end up in the courts. And there is a good chance the courts will side with Carter.

A random sampling of three female and three male students at UNCW shows that many young people are expecting the draft to be reinstated sooner or later—probably sooner.

"I'm not surprised," says nineteen-year-old Becky Thompson. "As much as ERA has been pushed I think it was inevitable."

Becky feels that it is "not a woman's place" to serve in the military, especially in combat. "They're not physically capable," she states. "Maybe emotionally they are. There's more men that are mentally capable than women."

Even though women shouldn't be forced to join the military, she believes that the United States should build up its strength and show some of its strength to the world. "I think we're holding back," she says.

"Maybe if we did (show strength) it would help."

Becky thinks that today's young people are more willing to defend the country than what the young people of the '60's were. A lot of them lack the courage to fight for the United States' national interests, she says, but "it's not nearly as strong as it was in the last war. It was intense then."

Not all females think war is just a man's concern. Beverly Autry, 19, thinks that women need to be drafted because they are physically and mentally as capable as men to go into combat. "If a woman is drafted and she's on the front line, it's either her or them," she says. "I think a woman has the courage to fight. But I don't think they'll ever be sent to the front. Only as a last resort."

The United States doesn't need the draft to "show its muscle," Beverly believes. But it does need to show the world that it doesn't intend to "be walked all over" anymore.

This generation of young people isn't any less courageous than previous generations when it comes to fighting in wars, she contends. "They can't be any worse than during the '60's, when all the people went to Canada. They just aren't any worse. I think, in a way, a lot of people are tired of the United States being used and mistreated."

Anne Lewis, 20, says that if she got drafted she would "feel it was my duty" to go. Women should have the opportunity to serve their country in the military because Seahawk receives funds from Senate

by Doug Browne

At the weekly meeting of the UNCW Student Legislature Thursday night, Feb. 7, Frank Cohen moved to allocate The Seahawk $2700 from the SGA emergency fund. After debate with members of The Seahawk staff, the motion was seconded and adopted with the stipulation that a representative of The Seahawk staff report finances to the Finance Committee on a monthly basis.

Also, Senior Senator Jack Allen introduced a resolution thanking Dr. Dixon of the Political Science department for his time and care in reviewing the new SGA constitution.

President Fail, in his report, commented on the recent Orlando and Washington trips. He said that further information would be available at tonight's senate meeting.

Unfinished business included a resolution to give Linda Williams, SGA secretary, $135 in the form of compensation for her position as secretary. The money will come out of the executive account. The resolution was seconded and adopted.

Also under new business, Mike Stroud asked Vice-president Downs to ask for Senator Robert Durda's resignation, for lack of attendance. This was seconded and adopted.

During announcements, Pete Johnson announced his candidacy for SGA president in the upcoming election.

The meeting adjourned at 9 p.m. The next meeting will be tonight at 7 p.m. in C-218. All students are encouraged to attend.

Jesse Rehder contest announced

by Becky Owens

Original entries are now being accepted for UNCW's Jesse Rehder short story contest. This year's competition, open to all UNCW students carrying at least six hours, offers three cash prizes: $50 first prize, $30 second, and $20 third. Stories must be submitted to the Department of English by 4 p.m. Thursday, February 28.

This contest, financed by the UNCW Jesse Rehder Memorial Fund, is held annually in remembrance of Miss Rehder—teacher, writer & native Wilmingtonian. She received her M.A. degree from Columbia University in 1931, and later came to Chapel Hill where Miss Rehder taught English in the Chapel Hill High School. In 1947, she joined UNC-Chapel Hill's English staff, where she remained until her death in 1967. Miss Rehder's chief interest became expansion of the university's creative writing program, which consequently grew from one course to six. In addition, she insured a place where students could see their work in print, by establishing THE YOUNG WRITER AT CHAPEL HILL.

Miss Rehder, also known for her own published works, wrote a novel, Remembrance Way, several short stories, a collection of poetry, two textbooks, The Story at Work, and The Young Writer at Work, to mention a few. She also wrote book reviews for the New York Times.

Dr. C. Hugh Holman, author of A Handbook to Literature, says it all in his tribute to Jesse Rehder: "Hers was the ultimate unselfishness, that of putting aside again and again her own work while she nurtured the work of her students....She was a writer of distinction in her own work, but she was supremely an encourager of writing talent wherever she found it."

"they've fought long and hard for every other position," she states. "I think this would be the final frontier, the last challenge. This is an all man game you're talking about. War is just for guys. The girls aren't allowed to do anything but sit and worry."

Women are physically capable of enduring combat, Anne believes. "They can carry an M-16 just as far as a man can," she says. "They can wear combat boots just as well as a man can. It may take a couple of extra days for them to get used to it. There's no real physical difference between a man and a woman. Women may not be able to throw a 360 pound Russian over their head but I don't know of a whole lot of men who can do that, either."

Anne thinks that excluding women from combat jobs would further add to the stereotype that women are the weaker sex. She says women wouldn't be any more "squeamish" about killing than men are. "There are a lot of men that I know of, that I've talked to, who were drafted in the '60's and did their time in the service," she explains. "War and killing terrified them. It just grossed them completely out. But they did it. It's you or them. The survival instinct comes out in the end, I think."

Anne doesn't really blame anyone for being scared to fight. "Personally, I would be terrified," she says. She believes that some of the young people lack the courage to fight. If the politicians were put in the same situation they wouldn't like the draft either, she feels. "I think that if we were to send a lot of the Congressmen that botched things up in the first place out tonight they'd raise all kinds of Cain."

Darren England, 19, says he "definitely" thinks that if "they reinstate the draft it should be for males and females." He believes women "should have the same obligations" as men. "They're fit to fight," he states. "They have every right to. There's a lot of them that want to."

There are women that are mentally capable of going into combat and killing people, Darren feels. "There's just as many female murderers as there are male murderers," he says. "Some women can do it and some of them can't. It's just a matter of how people are. I'm not sure I have the mental stability to go into combat. I'm not sure I could even kill anybody. I'm not sure I ever would."

Darren believes that the youth are not as patriotic as they used to be. "They don't feel the same way as the ones that went to World War I and II. But the threat isn't the same, either. Or it hasn't been. It wasn't the same during Vietnam. The threat wasn't to the nation in particular. During the first and second world wars it was to the nation, even though it didn't reach home soil."

Richard Bryant, 21, believes that women should enjoy the same privileges as men. "That may mean registration for the draft," he says. If they have the privileges, the responsibility should follow."

Richard is not so sure that women could endure the military. "Theoretically, it's a good idea to draft women. But put into actual practice it would present many problems," he states. "It probably would be better to have them at the desk jobs. I believe that if it is possible some women are physically able to go into combat, but I don't really believe that they are as well equipped to go into battle as men." But if they fought on the front line, "I think they'd learn real fast," he adds.

Some people say that the youth of today are too cowardly to fight for the country's best interests, but he believes that they're no "different from any other time."

Richard feels that the draft isn't really needed, at least not immediately. "Carter's wanting it to be reinstated is more of an action to show the world something," he says. "I think it's more that kind of action than an actual need for registration. I think it's more of a show thing. But I wouldn't put it past the government at all to begin drafting people right after they register. I don't want them to draft me unless there's a grave need."

Dave Kermion, 23, feels the draft should come back "because it's a needed thing. I think that the military ought to show some of its teeth," he states, "but not all of it. Not all at one time."

He says women should be included in the draft. "Why not? I think they can do it. They should have the same obligations as the men do or as the majority does. It takes a great deal of mental hardness to shoot somebody or go out in combat. Some women are not mentally capable to do it and some of them are. I think everybody should serve their country at least a couple of years. It's your country as much as mine. If you feel anything at all about it and you want to stay free you've got to do something about it yourself."

Dave doesn't believe that the young people lack the courage to fight for the United States. "I don't think they're cowards," he says. "I think they're realists. They know that old men start the wars but old men don't fight them, we do. I myself don't want to die for some old fogey who stays in Washington and sits in a nice bomb-proof shelter."

S.R.O. presents "The Beautiful People"

The University Theatre will present William Saroyan's "The Beautiful People" on February 22-25 in the S.R.O. Theatre. The play will begin at 8:15 p.m. each evening. All University students are admitted free.

In "The Beautiful People" Mr. Saroyan feels that the world we know is amok, the realm of all reality, therefore, is now also amok. The world has always been uninhabitable but every man alive has been himself a place of refuge from the world. "The Beautiful People" have found a place-one of warm, natural American ease. Every person is innocent and good. No one hates anyone. Every person is living, and letting live. Each person is following his or her destiny as they feel it should be followed.

The cast features Mark Meekins, Amy Forest, Carolyn Creech, C.W. Casey, Tim Wesner, John L. Geier, Larry Matthews, Robby Anderson and Darrell Hope. The director is W. Terry Rogers and the assistant director is Carolyn Creech.

Reservations may be made by calling UNCW at 791-4330, extension 2440 February 18-22 from 8:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.

The University Theatre is supported by the Student Government Association.

Dr. Willey reveals results

Dr. Joan Willey, assistant professor of chemistry and a member of the faculty in the Marine Science Program at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington, will tell of new research results in chemical oceanography at a symposium Monday, February 18, at 3 p.m. in room 114 of the Chemistry-Physics Building on the UNCW campus.

Dr. Willey has just returned from the Gordon Research Conference in Chemical Oceanography held in Santa Barbara, California, and will give a short talk on Gordon Conference history at her symposium February 18. She was awarded a grant from the Gordon Foundation to encourage her participation in the conference.

Her research interests include sediment-sea water interactions, inorganic removal processes for trace and minor elements in sea water, distribution of trace metals across the sediment-sea water interface, pressure dependencies in marine aluminosilicate reactions, geochemistry of marine and estuarine sediments and suspended particulate matter, and silica geochemistry.

Dr. Willey received her Bachelor of Science degree with honors in chemistry from Duke University and earned her Ph.D. in chemical oceanography at Dalhousie University.

Anxiety necessary for test - taking success

by Wendy Robbins

You've studied for weeks and zero hour is here. The professor hands you the exam and you start to shake. Your heart races and your brain stalls, your mouth is dry and your hands are wet; your stomach is tight and your bowels are loose. You have what Dr. Sue Lamb described at the opening session of the Psychology Club's "Test Anxiety Workshop" as "genuine test anxiety."

Mixing professional wisdom and personal anecdotes, Dr. Lamb offered suggestions for recognizing and reducing real test fears. "Most people experience some anxiety over exams," she stated, adding that a certain amount of anxiety is necessary for optimum test-taking success. It is when anxiety reaches a point where ability deteriorates that a student needs to work on reducing anxiety.

The first step in reducing test anxiety according to Dr. Lamb is to make changes in test-taking behavior. Provide yourself with ample study time and reward yourself for doing so. Those people who, because of laziness or over-confidence, put off studying decrease their chances for successfully taking an exam. "They should be anxious," Dr. Lamb said.

When faced with the test, worrying about not knowing everything can affect your ability to remember anything. "Admit you won't know all the answers, but you will know some," she said. She also suggested to not let yourself be intimidated by the test's length before you've even begun. Set a time limit for each section, doing the easier parts first.

About those often confusing and frequently frightening multiple choice questions Dr. Lamb advised, "Look at the whole question first. Decide which answer is obviously wrong; if they all seem correct, choose the one which best answers the question."

"Accept the questions at face value," she said. Don't read between the lines. Above all, "Don't say you can't do it or waste time on other such distracting thoughts."

Learning to reduce physiological and muscular tension is also important. "Make sure you're comfortable," she said, demonstrating the tight, arms-crossed posture of a nervous student. "Practice relaxing. Deep breathing with rhythmic exhalations is useful." She also suggested hot baths or showers and jogging or walking before an exam as being good for relaxation.

Systematic desensitization was another suggestion for reducing anxiety. First learn a relaxation method. Then brainstorm different test anxiety experiences. Write each on a card and place them in order with the least frightening on top. Relaxing deeply, view each card, imagining as completely as possible the actual situation. When the image no longer produces fear, move on to the next card. (A more complete explanation of this technique can be found in James P. Flanders' Practical Psychology, available in the campus bookstore.)

Providing rewards for positive steps toward changing behavior Dr. Lamb advised, is very important. "This can be verbal or material reinforcement," she said. Self-reward and punishment should be used regarding satisfactory and unsatisfactory performance on tests. Both provide needed reinforcement and aid in making success more achievable.

For discovering your irrational beliefs, Dr. Lamb suggested Ellis' ABC theory. She explained this as: A equals Activating event, the exam; B equals your belief system, "I have to make good;" C equals the consequences, fear of failure; and D equals the remedy. In this case the remedy would be the realization that you don't know everything, but you do know something. You can learn from your failures by working on correcting your test-taking mistakes and reinforcing your successes.

Failing a test doesn't necessarily mean you're stupid. "After all," she said, "Louis Pasteur failed the entrance exam at the University of Paris; Einstein failed an elementary math test; and Edison was considered uneducable." "There's no magic pill for test anxiety," Dr. Lamb said. "But, if you're willing to work on it, you can reduce it."

The next "Test Anxiety Workshop" will be Fe. 14 with Dr. Burton speaking on "Math Anxiety." It will be held at 4 p.m. in room 208, King Hall. Provided as a student service by the Psychology Club, it is open to all UNCW students.

President's report

Senate audits executive account

Some concern has been expressed by the Student Senate about our representation at the American Student Association (ASA) Conference in Washington, D.C. First, UNCW is a member of the ASA. Second, in order to effectively judge how well student government is operating, it is necessary to compare our school against others. This accomplishes two things. The comparison itself will aid student government in seeing how other student governments have responded to similar problems. The more important aspect is to discover possible problem areas and unique solutions to old problems. Examples of these are: sports, club activities, a potential problem which we have averted, and information on how to establish a course, professor evaluation system. Through interaction with other schools' matter-wise, we can strengthen and expand the role of student government at UNCW. All the information that was brought back from the ASA conference is available at the SGA office and everyone is encouraged to examine the material.

The Student Senate has also taken upon themselves to audit the executive account.

This type of action is long overdue, as they are constitutionally bound to require reports from every club and organization, something which they have not been doing. I hope the Student Senate sees fit to expand their audit to meet their constitutionally mandated duties.

Any students from the Wilmington area who would like to help with the publication of the new student handbook, please come by the SGA office, upstairs in the pub.

Campus apathy is not the problem at UNCW, it is just a symptom. The problem is two-fold: a lack of communication and an unwillingness to participate. Get out and join in on the fun and tell others how they can participate. There is something for everyone, but it must begin with you.

Scott Prudhoe powers up shot against Howard opponent

'Lady Hawks experience letdown

by Eddie Knox

UNCW's Lady Hawks, playing only 48 hours after upsetting a powerhouse Duke team, saw the inevitable emotional letdown cost them the game against Mt. Olive Thursday, bowing to the Lady Trojans, 74-67.

The Women Seahawks scored the initial 12 points of the contest, and appeared to have the game well in hand after only four minutes had been played, but it was not to be.

Mt. Olive used a tremendous pressure defense and numerous offensive rebounds to outscore the Lady Hawks 24-2 over the final nine minutes of the first half, taking a 34-29 lead into the dressing room.

The foul-plagued UNCW squad began the second half much as they had ended the first, and the Lady Trojans built a 51-43 margin with 12:15 left to play.

The Lady Seahawks made a final run at that point, and Linda Plum, with help from Janet Grady, pulled UNCW to within 53-51 with 9:05 remaining.

Mt. Olive refused to fold, however, and reeled off eight unanswered points to regain control of the game.

Throughout the game, the Lady Hawks were whistled for numerous fouls, and three starters carried at least four fouls into the final five minutes, with Vertha Dixon fouling out.

The Lady Seahawks balanced scoring attack was led by Linda Plum with 18 points, Vertha Dixon adding 17, and Janet Grady hitting 16.

UNCW's women now play their final four contests on the road, needing victories in all four to break the .500 mark. The Lady Hawks are now 9-12.

'Hawks lose three, rebound against Campbell

by Harold Thompson

Against Maine last Thursday night in Orono, the Seahawks were beaten in practically every category including the final score, 69-53. It was one of those days when you should have just stayed in bed. The only bright spot during the contest was Garry Cooper's accomplishment of scoring his 1000th career point, early in the second-half.

Maine, which raised its record is not indicative of their fine play this season as they have faced tough competition all year including top-ranked DePaul.

At the end of the first-half the 'Hawks were only down by nine at 33-24. After the break UNCW pulled to within five at 37-32. This was as close as the 'Hawks could get as the Bears streaked to an 18 point lead with 7:09 remaining in the contest.

UNCW could not overcome the deficit and lost their second game in as many days. The loss dropped the Seahawks to 14-9 on the year.

Danny Davis led the 'Hawks with 14 points and nine rebounds. Rufus Harris led the Bears of Maine with 17 points. Also, Joe Johnson grabbed a game-high 14 rebounds.

vs. Howard

Any hopes of winning twenty games this season for the Seahawks were snatched away by Howard University last Saturday night in Trask Coliseum. During some emotional and tense final minutes the 'Hawks lost control of the game and bowed to the Bison's by a 59-53 final score.

Coming into the game the Seahawks, under coach Mel Gibson, had experienced a frustrating road trip to Boston and Maine, losing to both teams. Hoping to get untracked, the 'Hawks led at half-time 31-30, mostly on the strength of the inside play of Garry Cooper's 11 points and Danny Davis' five rebounds. However, the Bison's hung tough with Benard Perry scoring 12 before the break.

During the second-half, UNCW faced a Howard press and became unraveled. Still behind "Coop" and Danny Davis the 'Hawks managed to gain a six-point lead at 42-36 with 14:50 left to play.

The Bison press and the Seahawk's ragged play enabled Howard to pull within one point at 43-42 with 11:50 left to play.

After a Howard time-out UNCW then went to the stack tease offense which lasted better than six minutes. Then Howard took the lead on two James Ratiff free throws at 48-47, and went into their version of a delay offense. The Bison's ran their offense to perfection and UNCW could not manage to control the tempo.

With 2:29 left and the score at 49-50 in favor of the Bisons, Danny Davis missed a one and one opportunity and Howard opened up a five point lead at 54-49.

The last two minutes were sloppy and UNCW was unable to capitalize on flared tempers and fantastic crowd support.

UNCW stands at 14-10 and Howard moves to 15-7. Garry Cooper scored 15 points and Davis added 13, while James Ratiff scored 13 for the Bisons.

Three Howard players were tied at 12 points apiece.

vs. Campbell

When a team has no chance at scoring twenty games, and even things seem to be falling apart, one can only hope.

Last Saturday, Campbell University was the victim and UNCW taught the Camels a little about hustle and determination. The final score will go down in the books as 70-59, but will not reflect the total dominance of the Seahawks.

With Campbell's six-eleven center Tony Britto the Camels were supposed to dominate the boards and thus hand UNCW its fourth straight loss and the second loss in a row at Trask. UNCW has never lost two straight in Trask since its opening in 1977.

Barry Taylor opened the game with a steal and set up Garry Cooper's first bucket. The score was 2-0 in favor of UNCW. Both teams worked hard and stood at 19-18 in favor of the 'Hawks with 8:31 left. During that period, Tony Britto showed the "Walton" look as he posted low and fed his teammates the ball for repeated lay-ups. UNCW switched to a 3-2 zone and the Camels were unable to figure it out. UNCW led at half-time 31-25.

The 'Hawks opened the second-half scoring with twelve unanswered points and led by 18 at 43-25 with 15:45 remaining. The last fifteen minutes saw the Camels never really mounting a threat and UNCW cruised to a 70-59 win.

UNCW's record now stands at 15-10 on the year and a 19-10 record is within reach. The 'Hawks take on tough ECU Saturday night at 7:30, and all students are encouraged to come out and help the 'Hawks avenge an earlier loss this season to Pirates in Greenville. This game has the potential to be the highlight of the season for the 'Hawks.

John Haskins played well as he scored 16 points and hit 7-of-11 from the floor. Garry Cooper's 13 points and 8 rebounds added with Danny Davis' 10 points and 6 re-

Preview Of ACC Tournament

by Eddie Knox

The stretch run is underway towards the regular season championship, and at this writing, Maryland has all but clinched the title. Although many observers feel that the "home court advantage" of the Greensboro Coliseum gives the Big Four teams the inside track on the tournament title, this writer's pick for the tourney championship game is Maryland vs. N.C. State, with the Terps winning it all.

THE PICK-MARYLAND

As stated, the Terps should take the championship, and more easily than most would expect. At the beginning of the season, Maryland was picked to finish a dismal sixth in the conference, ahead of only Wake Forest and lowly Georgia Tech. The Terps quickly silenced their multitude of critics, with Greg Manning, Buck Williams, and particularly Albert King maturing and forming a cohesive unit around which Lefty Driesell has built a national championship contender.

The Terps shoot, pass, rebound, and play together as a unit better than any other team in the league, and possibly the nation. Gone are the memories of a '78-'79 squad that played a run-and-gun type offense, with little movement and less defense.

This year, even in their few losing efforts, Maryland has yet to give up on a game and seems to have developed a quiet confidence in their ability. This confidence should materialize in the form of a tournament championship and NCAA berth.

BEST BETS FOR THE

N.C. STATE, VIRGINIA, CAROLINA, DUKE
These are the teams that have a legitimate shot at upsetting the Terps and claiming the championship for themselves. The teams are listed in order according to their capability for upsetting Maryland.

N.C. STATE-This is another ACC entry that was lightly regarded before the current season began. The unbelievable play of forward Hawkeye Whitney (certainly a candidate for ACC Player of the Year) has been primarily responsible for the Wolfpack's rise from mediocrity to their present heights.

The precocious freshman Sydney Lowe, along with the unselfish team effort of Craig Watts, Art Jones, Dereck Whitteburg, and Clyde Austin have been contributing factors for N.C. State, and their victory Saturday over Notre Dame at South Bend (which Maryland couldn't accomplish) should give the Wolfpack an added boost for the upcoming tournament.

VIRGINIA-Another surprise, but for different reasons. Over the last month, the Cavaliers have looked pathetic much of the time, especially so Saturday in the loss to Georgia Tech. Ralph Sampson, the much heralded freshman, has been subject to erratic play, and the duo of Jeff Lamp and Lee Raker have not played up to their capabilities.

The Cavaliers, however, can be awesome. It will be no surprise if they put together three "8n" games and take the tournament trophy back to Charlottesville.

NORTH CAROLINA-The Tar Heels have played excellent basketball since the loss of James Worthy, and one must wonder if they've been playing over their heads. The answer is no. Al Wood and Mike O'Koren are probably the most outstanding tandem of forwards in the league. Jimmy Black is a fast-maturing guard, and the center trio of Yonakor, Wolf, and Budko provide adequate, if not exceptional, scoring and rebounding.

When talking about North Carolina, one also mustn't forget about Coach Dean Smith, who can devise a way to win the tourney if anyone can. If Smith can get the maximum effort from his players, together with his coaching ability, UNC may be the team left standing after the championship game.

DUKE-Blue Devil fans were left shaking their heads after Saturday's loss to Marquette. Pre-season polls indicated that Duke was the team to beat in the ACC, and they have been. Everyone's been beating them. Mike Gminski's play has been respectable at best, and even a great player such as Gene Banks cannot carry an entire team.

Don't count out the Blue Devils, however. When Duke is healthy and playing well, they seem to glide through the game, as though they've played together for years. With Kenny Dennard back from an injury, Duke could conceivably regain their early-season momentum and own the crown after the dust settles.

OUTSIDE THREATS-CLEMSON, WAKE FOREST, GEORGIA TECH

These are the teams that seem to be the most likely to be first round losers, or at least manage to avoid the championship. However, any of the three could possibly pull off the necessary miracle and take the championship.

CLEMSON-The Tigers are like two sides of a coin. At home, which for the Tigers is Littlejohn Coliseum, guard Billy Williams plays like a man possessed. Larry Nance shows flashes of brilliance, and Horace Wyatt, John "Moose" Campbell, and others provide the most supportive cast in the league. Away from Littlejohn, Clemson is sluggish, plays with little enthusiasm, and very often loses.

The ACC tournament isn't being played in Littlejohn Coliseum this year, which is why Clemson won't win the tournament.

WAKE FOREST-The Demon Deacons have played extremely well this year in spots, but Wake has seldom put together an entire game. Alvis Rogers and Guy Morgan, two highly-touted freshmen a year ago, have yet to develop into the outstanding players they will be. The red-shirting of All-ACC guard Frank Johnson dimmed the faint hopes that Coach Carl Tacy harbored in November.

The Deacons will be a squad to be reckoned with next year, mainly due to the return of Johnson, but will cause no upheaval in this year's tournament.

GEORGIA TECH-The Yellow Jackets, playing their own style game at their own tempo, can beat any team in the league, as they proved Saturday against Virginia. The chances of their doing so three consecutive nights against the ACC's finest teams are extremely remote. Lenny Horton and Brooke Stepp are fine players, but the remainder of the Georgia Tech squad simply isn't ACC caliber yet.

The Yellow Jackets, in all probability, open the tourney against Maryland. Don't hold your breath looking for an upset.

There it is, a roundup of the teams coming into this year's tournament. Although any team can win, it will take a fine team effort for three straight games, with a victory over Maryland in the finals, for any other ACC entry to take the title. Don't count on it.

Wheelchair basketball comes to Trask

by Harold Thompson

The UNCW campus will have the unique and enjoyable opportunity of hosting a wheelchair basketball game on Saturday, February 23 at 7:30 p.m. The game will be played in Trask Coliseum and will feature the Charlotte Tarheels and the Capital City Hustlers. Both teams are preparing for the 32nd National Wheelchair Basketball Tournament, to be held in Charlotte in April. The teams are coming to Wilmington to create interest in starting new teams and to expand their conference.

This exhibition is only one of many such games that are played around the country each year to promote the sport. The Tarheels and the Hustlers are members of the Carolinas Conference, which includes teams from both North and South Carolina. They will also bring their own officials, because the rules are somewhat different than the regular style of basketball.

During half-time, the UNCW Men's Basketball team will take on the WHSL Radio team in a wheelchair basketball contest. Also, there will be a raffle drawing to determine the winner of 8 prizes. The prizes include a twenty dollar gift certificate at Boseman's Sporting Goods, a dinner for two at one of these fine restaurants: Canton Station, Bridgerender, Tuesday's, and Le Chateau. A gift certificate to the two Wheeler Dealer and Gleen's Sporting Goods will also be given away. Tickets for the raffle contest are available through the Recreation Major's Club, Recreation and Athletic Departments and the Seahawk. The price is one dollar. You do not have to be present to win.

The exhibition is co-sponsored by the Recreation Major's Club and the Athletic Department. The charge for admission is two dollars for adults, one dollar for children under twelve and one dollar for students with a valid I.D. Tickets can be purchased prior to the game at the door.

The Charlotte Tarheels and the Capital City Hustlers from Raleigh are both excellent teams and encourage everyone to come out and participate in the fun and excitement.

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Janet "Shady" Grady

Sports Editor

Janet Grady has been selected as the Athlete of the Week this week because of her outstanding performances against Duke University and North Carolina Central.

Against Duke, Shady Grady hit 9-of-16 shots from the floor and 7-of-9 from the line, including the winning free throw. She ended the night with 25 points, 18 rebounds, and three assists.

In the Central game, Grady scored 19 points, grabbed 13 rebounds and blocked five shots. Coach Christoph has called Grady, "the most pleasant surprise of the season."

Grady said, "It was hard adjusting, but I'm glad I came back." She only returned to action mid-way this season. She credits defense to the major reason the Lady Hawks are having such a fine season.

Her post-season ambitions include playing summer league ball and building up her weaknesses to have even a better season next fall.

ENTERTAINMENT

King accepts title

Casper provides Homecoming entertainment

by Julie Russo

Sponsored by the University Program Board, UNCW's recent Homecoming dance was a social sensation. Live vibes were provided by Casper, a popular East Coast band.

Students shuffled their cares away in Hanover Hall, richly decorated for the occasion. A filmy green canopy spiraled down from the ceiling, casting a glow over the assembled tables and couples. Beer and hors d'oeuvres were served, with the dance beginning at 9 p.m. and the band scheduled to begin at 10 p.m.

Running slightly behind schedule, Casper began entertaining the crowd at approximately 10:30 p.m., allowing revelers to socialize further during the delay. Playing popular singles and beach music, the band had the crowd on its feet and jamming until 2 a.m.

Commented freshman

Kimber Allred, a candidate for Homecoming Queen: "I thought the dance was a lot of fun and the band was great. But I don't think a college dance should be held in a gym." Most of those present at the dance agreed that Hanover Hall was an improvement over last year's location, which was the Armory located on Carolina Beach Road.

One surprising element added to this year's celebration was the crowning of our first Homecoming King, Skip Watkins. Commented a male junior who asked not to be identified: "I think it was great. I think Skip won because he's a nice guy. I don't take it as a sign of the changing times or anything." Added Susie Parr, sophomore, "I thought the whole thing was just a joke, something he could tell his kids about someday."

"Hands" to perform Feb. 22

Formed as a trio, HANDS has developed into the leading jazz group in the Chapel Hill area. The group has played club dates and concerts in North Carolina, South Carolina, and Virginia, drawing from an extensive and varied repertoire. Works of such jazz composers as Miles Davis, John Coltrane, Ornette Coleman, Wayne Shorter, Chick Corea, and Keith Jarrett are included in every HANDS performance, along with a continually growing foundation of original music. They will be performing in the Pub on Friday, February 22, at 8 p.m. Admission is free with a validated I.D. This program is part of the UNCW Program Board's continuing effort to bring quality entertainment to this university and is sponsored by the University Program Board Coffeehouse Committee.

Bayley, festive, energetic man

by Joyce Stevens

A small crowd gathered in the Pub Sunday night to hear a man that nearly defies description.

Dressed in leather pants, tucked neatly inside his boots, a pair of suspenders to keep it all in place, and to top it off, an eight-gallon "Gaitmount Brown" cowboy hat. The man was John Bayley.

He's a black cowboy, that explained his living in Colorado Springs. But memory sent back a message about this man playing Calypso, reggae type music.

He took off his hat and there it was, the culture that at first glance went unnoticed. He's not an Hari Krishner, but he is Guyanese.

Bayley, who has lived in several parts of the United States and the West Indies, delighted his audience with the sweet tempo of the islands.

"Rambling, Gambling Man" was the first ever heard of Bayley's music. Playing on the Greek bazouki (sort of a bubble-like guitar), he let his audience sway to the rhythmic beat of his music.

A festive, energetic man, Bayley performed an exciting version of Taj Mahal's "Ain't Nobody's Business But Your Own" followed by "The Harder They Come, the Harder They Fall", by Jimmy Cliff.

To change the tempo momentarily, Bayley did everybody's favorite, "Mr. Bojangles" by special request, and an oldie by Buffalo Springfield, "Stop Children, What's That Sound".

Bayley also performed two other selections that he had written himself. "Brown Cloud Over Denver" will be released on his new album, "Positively Positive" in June on the Warner Bros. label. It's a song about a beautiful city plagued by air pollution.

His final selection was "African Sunset" a poem he had written in college and set to music. One could almost hear the jungle and feel the aura that emanates from that continent.

It was an evening spent with the unmistakable John Bayley.

Neil Young genius on Lennon- McCartney level

Some live albums can make a singer as in the case of Peter Frampton. Sometimes a live album allows a band to prove that they can perform live what they do so well in the studio. SECONDS OUT by Genesis is a perfect example of this. Still, some live recordings hang around a band's neck like the proverbial albatross. Although a special case, Led Zeppelin's soundtrack from the film THE SONG REMAINS THE SAME comes immediately to mind. Then there are those live affairs that are just a lot of fun like Jethro Tull's BURSTING OUT. LIVE RUST by Neil Young and Crazy Horse is cut in the mold of the Genesis album, with a touch of the Tull.

Just the mention of Neil Young's name elicits a variety of responses. One camp claims he's a washed-up Buffalo Springfield reject. Others say that he's a genius on the level of a Lennon-McCartney, a Jagger-Richard, or a Bob Dylan. Lastly, there are those who don't pay any attention to Neil Young, but will admit if quizzed that he's written a good song or two. LIVE RUST contains a few of those good songs performed proficiently Neil Young and Crazy Horse, who consists of Frank Sampedro (guitar, keyboards), Billy Talbot (bass), and Ralph Molna (drums).

The first side of this double album opens with an oldie, "Sugar Mountain," which laments getting older and no longer fitting in where you once belonged. This acoustic side continues with an old Springfield tune, "I Am a Child," a welcome inclusion that receives a hearty round of applause. "After the Gold Rush" is sandwiched in between two more recent offerings "Comes a Time" and "My, My, Hey, Hey (out of the Blue)." All sound as good here, if not better, than the original versions.

Side two cranks up with "When You Dance I Can Really Love," a classic from AFTER THE GOLD RUSH. Young breathes all the life into this song that we knew he would live. "The Loner" is next and it's great rock 'n' roll, leading into a Woodstock parody (stay off the towers, rain chant) before going into "The Needle and the Damage Done." Originally on HARVEST, its subject matter is obvious and in Young's words "I'm not a preacher but drugs killed a lot of great men." "Lotta Love," made popular by Nicolette Larson, but written by Young, follows and is a nice version. The rock returns with "Sedan Delivery" from last year's RUST NEVER SLE- eps.

The final two sides contain non-stop rock 'n' roll, highlighted by "Cinnamon Girl" from EVERYONE KNOWS THIS IS NOWHERE and "Like a Hurricane" from AMERICAN STARS 'N' BARS complete with hot licks courtesy of Mr. Young. The boys also do rousing renditions of "Powderfinger," "Tonight's the Night," "Hey, Hey, My, My, (Into the Black)," and "Cortez the Killer" from Neil's favorite album, Zuma. All the music on this set, especially the electric material, illustrates that Neil Young's a better guitarist than he's given credit for.

Also, LIVE RUST shows that Young's as good live as he is in the studio. Throughout Young's illustrious career, his associations with Buffalo Springfield, Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young, and Crazy Horse have always resulted in rock 'n' roll being the order of the day. Expertly produced by David Briggs, Tim Mulligan, and Benji Shakes, LIVE RUST could be a pleasant addition to any rock fan's collection and is a must for a Neil Young fanatic. Rock 'n' roll is one of life's necessities, and it'll always be here. After all, the lone buffalo himself said "Hey, hey, my, my, my rock 'n' roll will never

"Black Hole" not Disney's best

by Fuller Royal

The Disney people had high hopes for their $17,000,000 science-fiction epic. "The Black Hole" and it would seem from the looks of its tremendous box office receipts that their wishes have been fulfilled.

However, "The Black Hole" is far from being one of Disney's best cinematic ventures. Studio publicists have made a point in telling the public how it has "grown up" from a "G" to a "PG" rating. They have also made it known that this was not one of their "formula" pictures. Yet, strip away the futuristic setting and robots, and you have "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea." "The Black Hole" is a fairly simplistic story of a scientist gone mad, who wants to discover the secrets of the universe, and keeps our heroes and heroines captive.

The movie all seems crammed together, due to its never ceasing action and pace. In just the first 5 minutes of the story, the crew of the U.S.S. Palomino is sucked into the Black Hole's gravitational field. Character development is minimal and the talents of such stars as Ernest Borgnine, Tony Perkins, Yvette Lemieux, Robert Forster, Joseph Bottoms and Maximilian Schell are wasted and could have been handled by less well-known actors, had the Disney people not wanted the drawing power of big names.

The Black Hole's story is unfulfilling. In the end, we are left to decide for ourselves what happened. One highlight in the film is director Gary Nelson's interpretation of "Hell." It seems that the entire movie is saved by the three robots, who may very well be the real stars of "The Black Hole." Old Bob and

by Julie Russ

Liz Taylor likes to fight

But of course Carter wants to draft the ladies—what has he got to worry about? Rosalyn's too old to go and Amy's too ugly. And according to that adorable Gloria Steinem, we women can fight every bit as well as the men. Well, let her chop her hair off and slog

What really makes my kettle whistle is this: almost every one of the women hollering for the female draft IS TOO DAMNED OLD TO GO! Elizabeth Taylor Warner, bawling out her husband (what a martyr!) and bleating, "I like to fight! And all the women I know would be out there fighting now if they could!" Well, we know the old biddy likes to fight; look how many hubbies she's gone through! As for that crack about all the women she knows, well, I'm willing to bet none of her

So, men, go marching off to war! Just like the Old Spice commercials, we ladies will be waiting by the docks when you get home!

ANN ARBOR, MI (CPS)--Marijuana use among American teenagers may be leveling off for the first time since 1970, but cocaine use among high school students is increasing at a faster rate than previous years.

The three psychologists--Lloyd Johnston, Jerald Bachman, and Patrick O'Malley--found that marijuana use, which had been almost doubling every year since 1975 among high school students, abruptly stabilized in 1979.

"We think the reason is that more kids are hearing that daily marijuana use can in fact make you sick," Bachman explains. Students can still get marijuana easily--one out of ten seniors surveyed said they could get it within 24 hours--but "significantly more" 1979 seniors believe regular users assume a "great the month prior to the survey.

Ten percent of the seniors who used marijuana claimed to be daily consumers.

The Michigan study also found "substantial and accelerating increase in the use of cocaine" among high school seniors. In 1975, only two percent of the cocaine users interviewed had consumed the drug in the month prior to the survey. The rate had tripled to six percent among 1979 seniors.

Twelve percent of the 1979 seniors said they'd tried cocaine, compared to 1975's six percent. The increase in use has been accompanied by a perception of increased availability of the drug, and by a decrease in the percentage of students who think cocaine use is personally risky.

Nuclear energy radiates support here at UNCW

by Wendy Robbins

Almost a year has passed since the near catastrophe at Three Mile Island captured the attention of the world. On March 28, a combination of mechanical failures and human errors caused TMI's reactor core to overheat. It was revealed recently that the core came within 30 to 60 minutes of a meltdown, which could have endangered lives and contaminated hundreds of acres of land.

TMI was a serious blow to the nuclear energy industry. Currently, atomic power plants supply about 13 percent of our nation's energy, but the future of these plants is uncertain. The United States has been counting on nuclear energy because it wants to become less dependent on the oil-rich Middle East for oil.

Some Americans have always been skeptical of nuclear energy and the incident at TMI has prompted them to unite in an "Anti-Nuke" movement. Demonstrators, shouting a modified anti-draft slogan—"Hell No, We Won't Glow"—have gathered in such places as Boston, Manhattan and Seabrook to protest the use of nuclear energy.

The most famous opponents of nuclear energy are Jane Fonda and Tom Hayden. They say that nuclear energy is controlled by Big Business and Big Government, and this is the reason that solar energy has not been fully developed. They argue that solar power has been ignored because it poses a threat to the profit-hungry corporations. Solar energy is the technology they advocate because they think it can be run by small-scale community groups.

Interviews with two randomly selected students at UNCW reveal that, despite the dangers, nuclear energy still has some supporters. George Zedlitz, a senior, believes that nuclear energy is necessary if the United States wants to remain a world power. "In all seriousness," he says, "I think nuclear energy is probably one of the things this country needs right now. It's a form of energy that is going to keep this country one of the leading countries in the world."

George doesn't believe that the Government has been deceiving the public about the safety of nuclear energy. He thinks there are other occurrences that are as hazardous to health as nuclear energy. "You could take statistics on the number of people that are run over by cars everyday and then begin to wonder whether you want to cross the street or not," he states. "People have concern for their safety. I'm not saying nuclear energy is more important than people are because it's not. But it is important for this country's survival."

The incident at TMI was blown out of proportion,

George feels. "News is a big money deal today. It was blown out of proportion but it was good that everyone could hear what was going on. The media can be good in that aspect. So, they had an accident there. Well, they corrected it and I think the U.S. Government is trying to make sure this doesn't happen again."

"Hands" to perform Feb. 22

Formed as a trio, HANDS has developed into the leading jazz group in the Chapel Hill area. The group has played club dates and concerts in North Carolina, South Carolina, and Virginia, drawing from an extensive and varied repertoire. Works of such jazz composers as Miles Davis, John Coltrane, Ornette Coleman, Wayne Shorter, Chick Corea, and Keith Jarrett are included in every HANDS performance, along with a continually growing foundation of original music. They will be performing in the Pub on Friday, February 22, at 8 p.m. Admission is free with a validated I.D. This program is part of the UNCW Program Board's continuing effort to bring quality entertainment to this university and is sponsored by the University Program Board Coffeehouse Committee.

Residents quench fire at Galloway Hall last Sunday

by Chris Campbell

Room 314 of Galloway Hall saw some action Sunday when a fire burned for ten minutes before being discovered and extinguished by students.

The blaze, apparently caused by a bad refrigerator cord, started around 2:00 p.m. Sunday. Some ten or twelve minutes later, students complained that they smelled something burning.

Upon a hurried investigation of the rooms, Phil Davenport, a resident of 314, opened his door to discover the fire. Quick action by third-floor residents helped put out the fire.

"We smelled smoke coming from our heat vent. It kept getting stronger and stronger so we started to search for a fire," commented Kurt Schmidt, a third floor resident that helped put out the blaze.

The fire remained surprisingly small even though it burned for ten minutes. Had there been no students around, Phil and Stuart, residents of 314, could have been homeless now.

A.O. Barry, the Safety Director at UNCW, said, that firehoses are at the end of each hall wing in case of a fire. The only sprinkler system in the Galloway Hall is in the trash chute, where previous fires have been intentionally set.

Barry commented that UNCW has had no real big fires.

This fire is the second to occur on the third floor. The first, an intentionally set small hall fire that caused a lot of smoke, inflicted no damages, except for a burnt spot in the hallway.

When a fire occurs, Jay Moore, the resident assistant on the third floor, confirms the fire to Raymond May, the Resident Director. Then Raymond eventually gets the information to Barry, the Safety Director.

The UNCW electrical system is one with circuit breakers, so when a fire is caused by an electrical occurrence, it can be investigated, Barry explained.

Barry said, "It is the R.A.'s job to report unusual or dangerous hook-ups to Raymond. Raymond either checks it out or goes to Charlie King, who in turn reports anything to me."

Barry commented that since there are thousands of hook-ups on campus it is impossible for him to check them all. He urged all students to be fire cautious and safety conscious at all times.

LETTERS

TO THE EDITOR

I would like to take this opportunity to respond to Derrick Anderson's letter in the Seahawk on the 14th and some of the outlandish comments he made. The philosophy of the University Program Board (UPB) is not to program for whites nor for blacks, but for students. We ask for and gratefully accept any and all input from the student body. It is then the UPB's job to sort through the suggestions and input and try to program the most diversified schedule of programs, activities, and events that will provide opportunities for educational, social, recreational, and cultural growth for the individual and the campus community as a whole. It was with this philosophy in mind that we took advantage of Pete Johnson's polling service to do the Program Board survey and supplied him with questions so that we could gain additional feedback. Although it is Derrick's personal opinion that the UPB has failed in its mission and is not in tune with the students, the survey which was conducted totally independent from the UPB shows that 82 percent of students feel that programming is good and 82 percent of students felt that the programs they attended were well-organized.

I find it awfully hard to believe that Derrick would even dare to comment that this year's Homecoming was a "dismal Homecoming" when he didn't even bother to attend and judge it from being there. It is obviously Derrick's personal opinion that the UPB "did a pitiful job of programming" because I have yet to hear negative feedback concerning the dance. The article in last week's Seahawk by Julie Russ seems to substantiate the dance's success. In the best interests of the UNCW students, Hanover Hall Gym was used for the dance because:

1. The Hilton wanted $1,000 for rental of their ballroom and then would only allow students over 21 years old to attend, due to liquor by the drink and other local ABC laws.

2. Being that last year's Homecoming dance in the Armory was such a let-down, the UPB decided it would not be in the best interests of our student body to hold it there again.

3. The money the UPB saved in rental fees by using Hanover Hall could be used for a more elaborate set-up of decorations as well as being used for a nice food layout and drinks.

Derrick continued in his letter by claiming I cancelled the contract for an appearance by poet Nikki Giovanni which is without factual basis. The contract was never cancelled because it was never signed. The circumstances surrounding the lecture committee this year are as follows:

TO THE EDITOR

It has been shown in the past, that the naming of a building is one of the most outstanding ways of commemorating a fellow student. Galloway Hall, for example, was named after a fellow student who died while in attendance at this university.

Last semester, a fellow student died while going to school here. His name was Chip Gunter, and he was active in many ways on this campus. He lived on the 4th floor of Galloway Hall, last year, and on the 2nd floor of the "NEW DORM" this past year.

There have been petitions circulating around campus ever since Chip's death asking for UNCW to name the "New Dorm" in his honor. Just recently, the Student Senate passed a resolution asking for the naming of the New Dorm in honor of Chip.

It has been rumored, that, the naming of buildings on school campuses is based on the financial status that one holds with the school. Of course this may seem like an economical idea, but it would not reflect the views of this school. Students at this school pay for a variety of services. Also, if it were not for the students of this campus there would be no faculty, no administration, no buildings, and most definitely no school.

Therefore it is for these reasons and many more, that, the naming of the New Dorm after Ricky Knight Gunter is our rights as students of this university.

The ultimate decision must be made by the UNCW Board of Trustees and the Chancellor. Although there are petitions, and S.G.A. backing, there is no guarantee that the New Dorm will be named after Chip Gunter.

As students, we can see that there is so much support for this matter. Hopefully others will see this, too.

We urge every student that has not signed a petition yet, to be ready when one comes around.

Sincerely,
Charles Parsons

In regard to the front page story and editorial in the February 7th issue, we would like to clear a few things up. First of all, the compugraphic machine was not in good shape when we started working on the paper. At the beginning of the first semester. The filmstrip that had to be replaced was probably one which was scratched when we worked on the paper. We got by without the filmstrip, and any maintenance needed was usually done by Dillon Bryant. The expenses you have incurred for maintenance this semester is not for misuse last semester.

The supplies we ordered did not arrive until our last month. We left many

1. Scot Bragg asked Nikki Giovanni's agency for contracts without my knowledge nor the approval of the UPB, most definitely a violation of UPB policy and procedure.

2. Scott rarely attended the UPB meetings held once a week, thus was not aware that a performer had been scheduled (in September) for Black Awareness month in February.

As we all know, for an organization to function properly and efficiently, there must be total communication between members. It was because of Scott's lack of communication and inability to work within set policies and procedures that I asked him to resign his position as Lecture Chairperson, which he did. I am not disputing the fact that Ms. Giovanni is an accomplished poet, but in all fairness to the UNCW students, the UPB felt that to spend $2,000 plus for a poet was not in the best interests of our student body. In discussing the program with students around campus, no one knew who Ms. Giovanni was and stated that they would not attend a poet's presentation. With this in mind, it seemed a waste of $2,000 for a program that would not be attended by students.

Finally, I was misquoted in my comment to Karin Wansley in regards to John Bayley. My exact words were "We (meaning UPB) were lucky to get John Bayley for the amount of money we contracted him for." John's normal fee is around $900 a performance. The UPB was able to negotiate with other schools in the southeast to do John in the same time period. The savings as a result of these negotiations was over $500. It is ashamed that the members of the self-titled "Black Program Board" chose to boycott such an enlightening program.

In all, student programming is not a black-white issue. Students as a whole should and do have input into the UPB and the activities it sponsors. The more this occurs, the less misunderstandings like this one can happen. I ask all students to give the UPB feedback and suggestions. The UPB can never have enough members, so come join us—The University Program Board.

Sincerely,
Steve Chiappisi

You accused the previous editor of misuse of funds, bad management other mistakes. I believe you are stepping over your editorial bounds. I don't think you can prove these accusations, and I would like to see you try.

You also complained of not the drastic turnover of the Seahawk Staff(sic), the old Seahawk Staff made offers to help you get started this semester.

As far as appearance(sic) of this semester's Seahawk it leaves alot to be desired. Another point of bad journalism is interjecting opinions(sic) in news and feature articles.

The student apathy you complain of might be avoided if you were able to take care of your on(sic) problems and not blame them on everyone else.

An article was written suggesting mismanagement of the Seahawk last semester. The Editors were as well, if not better, qualified as any the Seahawk has ever had and did the best they possibly could have done under the difficult circumstances that existed.

In the future, I would like to see the Seahawk present material that is 100 percent Professional Journalistic Fashion. If the Seahawk wishes to regain any level of respect from its readers(sic), it will have to refrain from using The National Enquirer as a model for its style of reporting the issues. Vindictiveness, idle gossip and poor politics should have no place in a university publication.

Thanks For Listening,

To The Editor:

The Red Cross would like to thank those 204 people who presented themselves for a blood donation at the bloodmobile on February 7. Those people, realizing they were saving lives, willingly spent an hour of their time doing something totally unselfish. Their hearts are definitely in the right place.

A lot of people worked hard to try and get more response from the UNCW community. A special thanks to the SIGMA ALPHA EPSILON Fraternity and its president, Parks Griffith; Circle K Club and its president, Brad Love; OMEGA PSI PHI Fraternity and its president, Doug White; DELTA SIGMA THETA Sorority and its president Patricia Wright and the faculty coordinator, Jim Applefield.

Even though the Red Cross had the help of some 50 people, along with the assistance of WLOZ and THE SEAHAWK. We still could only get 183 people to sign a pledge card. Seven of those were faculty out of a staff of 240 plus members.

Considering the student and faculty enrollment plus other staff members, the total is pretty close to 5,000 people. It is upsetting to me that out of all those people only 204 people were willing to donate the gift of life. Perhaps the hours of our visit weren't convenient, (10:00-3:30) or perhaps the location wasn't convenient, (Hanover Hall). UNC-Asheville has a similar population and they produce close to 400 pints of blood each visit. I would appreciate any feedback concerning ways to encourage more response from UNCW.

Our primary concern every day is meeting the patient need. Statistics have shown that only a modest increase in total donations would bring us to the plateau of "true total supply". Our energies and resources are aimed at that needed increase. Those of you who have never donated, please reconsider. For those of you who continue to support this vital cause, the patients thank you.

Remember, it is more blessed to give than to receive.

Sincerely,
Elizabeth W. Adkins
Blood Services Director

To The Editor:

In rebuttal to the letter written by Derrick Anderson, there are a few corrections that need to be made. It was stated that this year's homecoming was dismal due to the job of programming by the University Program Board. Homecoming week consisted of 6 days of activities. It began with the Waylon Jennings concert on Friday night. Monday night we had a basketball game. Wednesday evening we enjoyed the presence of Barry Drake who was the Master of Ceremonies for the Open Mike contest put on by Coffeehouse, sub-committee of Program Board. Thursday followed with Barry Drake again in a one-man performance. Friday evening was the dance and Saturday was the Homecoming game. Since there was something planned every night but Tuesday, how can it be said that Homecoming was pitiful due to programming?

As for the Homecoming dance itself, there are a few factors that have yet to be understood. It was with the luck of UNCW that we were able to have a Homecoming dance at all. In all probability there would not have been a dance, as we have been accustomed to, were it not for the fact of being able to use the gym. The reason behind this is simple. There are only two places in Wilmington that will hold 200 people and a band. One of these places, being the Armory. But due to the negative response from last year, the suggestion was thrown out. The students did not want it there. The 2nd choice was the Hilton, but due to the new liquor laws, only 21 and over would be admitted. Also, the cost would have been $1,000-the gym was free. What it came down to was the gym or nothing. The reason for having it at all was that the students wanted some kind of Homecoming dance to which they have traditionally been accustomed to. This means nice, and a no-blue-jean Pub dance. We were also extremely fortunate to be able to have alcohol. Concerning the band-the response was great.

It was also for the students that a few variations were made concerning the dance. In an attempt to make the dance more exciting, it was decided that the Queen's coronation was to be held at the dance instead of the game. This change was for the students' benefit and no other reason. The student response to this was positive.

Saturday's Homecoming game was kept relatively the same. By offering the President's Award, Chancellor's Award, and 2nd place Banner Award, the expected excitement and unity was again seen, especially concerning the Spirit Award.

This truly looks like the Program Board fulfills its purpose to programming to the needs and wishes of the students.

Dr. Kapraun receives Fulbright - Hays Award

by Wendy Robbins

Dr. Donald F. Kapraun is not the only instructor at UNCW that has ever received a Fulbright-Hays award. But what makes his award so special is that he is the only professor to receive one while at UNCW.

Dr. Kapraun, an associate professor of biology, will use his scholarship to conduct a biosystematic investigation of North Carolina and Norwegian populations of benthic marine algae at the University of Oslo at Norway. "I'm going to collect marine algae, seaweeds," he says. "Basically I'm going to do two different things with them. I'm going to preserve some of them so that I can bring them back and examine them critically with a microscope to see how they compare physically with plants here in North Carolina. And the other thing I'm going to do is bring some back alive. I'll grow them with North Carolina seaweeds to see if they can hybridize. So I'll be answering two questions: Do they look alike? Are they genetically close enough that they can hybridize?"

He says that he found out he was going to get the Fulbright award last May. Usually the scholarships are given out for an academic year, which means he should have started his project last fall. "But because of the unique nature of my project I was able to postpone it," he explains. "In other words, a person doesn't want to go to study seaweeds in the Arctic regions in the winter because there aren't any. It's all frozen over with ice and snow. So I pointed out that it would be insane for me to go there in the fall and sit through the long, cold winter. Why not go over in May, when I'll have all summer to collect things?"

What first gave Dr. Kapraun the idea to embark on such a project was the climatic conditions in North Carolina and Norway. "Our wintertime conditions are very much like Norway's summertime conditions," he says. "So there are some seaweeds that occur in North Carolina in the wintertime and in Norway in the summertime. And that just seems kind of curious in itself. I decided it would be fun to go to Norway in the summertime and bring back those things we have here in the wintertime to see how they would compare."

The Fulbright-Hays Scholarship Program is for United States citizens only. It is offered in most any discipline imaginable. The host countries stipulate what type of person they want and the applicants compete for the positions available. "Most countries are not dying to get a marine biologist," Dr. Kapraun states. "Very few countries, in fact, are. Norway was one of the few countries that was interested in a marine biologist. So that worked out real well."

Dr. Kapraun completed his requirements for a B.S. degree at Eastern Illinois University. He obtained his Ph.D. at the University of Texas after studying for one year at the University of Texas Institute of Marine Science.

Dr. Kapraun says he really doesn't know what attracted him to marine biology. "I grew up on a farm in Illinois," he explains. "I went to college in Illinois. I thought at that time I would be a botanist. One summer I went to the Virginia Institute of Marine Science and got involved in an ecology project with seaweeds. I was fascinated. That was essentially the turning point of my career."

Much of Dr. Kapraun's time is spent doing research projects. He has worked with the Smithsonian Institution in Central America and has participated in a shallow water coral reef project near the coast of Belize in the British Honduras.

His hobby is writing. Currently he is having a seaweed guide published. He is also writing a novella, a short novel about the history of German speaking people in Texas.

Dr. Kapraun is quite pleased and honored that he was selected to receive a Fulbright award. It is a highly competitive award-applicants compete against people from big name universities. Only people who are recognized for their work in a particular area can apply for the grant. "So it's really quite an honor that I got it," he states. "But especially it was an honor for UNCW because it means that it has the research facilities, the library, the academics and the administration to back someone up. A person who is doing research here is equivalent to a person doing research at Harvard or Yale. This should be reassuring to the students, too. They might say 'How do my courses compare with other places?' Or 'If I get an A here is that the same as getting an A at another place?' And this is evidence it is."

Debate Team travels to University of Georgia

by Angie Horne

The UNCW Debate Team will travel to the University of Georgia this weekend, taking with them six awards earned last weekend at Old Dominion University.

The team will go up against approximately 30 of the major debate schools at Georgia, including Wake Forest University and the University of North Carolina in team debating.

Awards received last weekend were given to Dan Goforth and Scott Burton, semi-finalists in debate who also placed second and fourth in debate speakers; Brian Perry, first place in oral interpretation of prose; Mike Stroud, fifth place in impromptu speaking; and Lisa Sanders, fifth place in oral interpretation of prose.

So far this year the team has won 23 awards in both debates and individual speaking events, including one first place position in a tournament hosted by Wake Forest and attended by 46 schools.

In the ten tournaments the team has attended they have competed against such schools as Ohio State University, Harvard, Northwestern and the University of Southern California as well as various schools from North and South Carolina.

This year the UNCW Debate Team will host a combined North Carolina and South Carolina State Championship. March 28-30 on the UNCW campus. Competition will be held in the New Classroom Building and Bear Business Building and is open to the public.

S.R.O. presents "The Beautiful People"

by Jean Honeycutt

The University Theater production of "The Beautiful People" by William Saroyan will be presented in the SRO Theater Friday, February 22 through Monday, February 25.

Curtain time is 8:15 p.m. Admission is FREE to students. Reservations may be made through the Drama Office, Kenan Hall from 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.

Dr. Rogers, calls "The Beautiful People", "a warm and charming play with a universal message: Each person should come to accept himself and try to live life as free of pain as possible and enjoy life's pleasures to the utmost."

This play is impressionistic in style and stresses originality and creativity. Dr. Rogers feels the original scenery and light designs by Don Pickett will be "an outstanding feature of the play."

University Theater productions are funded primarily by the SGA as a service to the student body. According to Dr. Rogers, the productions serve in two capacities: as a lab for students to practice what they have learned from class; and as an extension of life as a means of instruction and entertainment. This service is not, however, limited to university drama majors. It extends to the community at large, which is reflected in the cast.

C.W. Casey, who plays Jonah Webster, the father, is a community actor. This is his first university production, but he has had considerable experience in Readers Theater and other groups. Carolyn Creech, who started as the play's assistant director, has taken over the role of St. Agnes of the Mice. She has also worked Readers Theater and this is her second appearance in University Theater. Mark Meekins plays Owen, a brother, in his first major role in University Theater. Larry Matthews, a transfer student, is a veteran of University Theater, and is playing Father Hogan. Amy Forrest will be returning as Harmony Blueblossom. Tim Wesner, part-time technical instructor, will play Mr. Prim. Drama major, Darrell Hope, will portray Steve, a friend. Robby Anderson, a music major, will play Harold, a brother. Rosie Geier, an Airman from Ft. Fisher will play Dan Hillboy, a friend of Jonah's and friendly drunk.

Counseling and Testing Center Offers diagnostic reading test

When it comes to reading speed do you soar like a hawk or feel more like a snail? UNCW students who came in to be tested last semester averaged 300 words per minute of material of moderate difficulty. What about claims of fantastic rates promised by some reading institutes? Is it physically possible to read at rates of 1,000 or 10,000 words per minute? The answer to this question according to George Spache, past president of the International Reading Association, hinges on the definition of the word "reading." If we interpret the term in the common understanding of reading most of the words on a page, it is impossible to read faster than about 800 to 900 words per minute as shown by definitive research on eye fixation, sweep, and span. Rates over 800 words per minute can only mean that the reader is skimming, rather than reading all the material. While skimming can be appropriate for certain reading tasks, it can be misleading to imply that skimming a book is the same as reading it. Research has shown that those reporting fantastic reading rates cannot pass comprehension tests on the material read.

As a skillful reader, your reading rate should vary from a skimming rate of as high as 1,000 to 2,000 or more words per minute to a slow and careful rate of about 100 to 250 words per minute. You need to size up the reading task, then select the appropriate reading rate. Among the purposes for which different reading rates are appropriate are:

1. a skimming rate (usually 1,000 to 2,000 words per minute) should be used for:

1. locating a reference or new material

2. answering a specific question

3. getting the general idea of a selection a very rapid reading rate (about 500 to 1,000 words per minute for most people) should be used for:

1. reviewing familiar material

2. reading a light novel or fast-moving short story for its plot a rapid rate (about 350 to 500 words per minute for most people)

should be used for:

1. reading fiction of moderate difficulty, for characterization, mood, sensory imagery, or antiipation of outcome

2. reading easy non-fictional material in order to find the main idea, to make generalizations, or to note sequence an average rate (usually about 250 to 350 words per minute)

should be used for:

1. reading complex fiction for characterization and plot analysis

2. reading nonfiction of moderate difficulty in order to note details, to grasp relationships between main ideas, or to distinguish between fact and opinion.

a slow rate (usually about 100 to 250 words per minute)

should be used for:

1. mastering content, including details

2. reading highly factual material

3. evaluating quality and literary merit

4. solving a problem or following directions

Although almost all students can read faster, many would more profitably spend their time developing comprehension skills. The UNCW Counseling and Testing Center offers a diagnostic reading test for those wishing to evaluate their reading rate and comprehension skills. An individualized program of improvement can be arranged using materials available in the center. Interested students or faculty should stop by the Pub, or call extension 2280.

UNCW seeks information on HEW lawsuit

Several things happened last week that everyone should be aware of. First, the Student Senate debated the new constitution. Several hours of debate, amendments, and more debate was conducted by the Chairman of the Senate Constitution Committee, Senior Senator Jack Allen. Jack deserves more credit than he has received for doing an excellent job in the drafting of the constitution and conducting the debate. It is students like Jack that make student government a viable organization.

Second, I attended a University of North Carolina Association of Student Governments (UNCASG) meeting this last weekend at UNC-Charlotte. As some of you are aware, it is through this organization that we have been in contact with HEW concerning the pending lawsuit against the UNC System. This past year has been devoted to seeking a more information concerning the lawsuit, so that UNCASG might publish a position paper on the lawsuit. However, on a motion by myself, seconded by the President of NC State, J.D. Hayworth, we have tabled the position paper idea and are now going to act as an information gathering and distribution center. It was my opinion that a position paper would only bind current student body presidents and may not reflect next year's officers' views. The next scheduled meeting of UNCASG is March 21 at The General Administration Building in Chapel Hill. President Friday, the President of the UNC System, will be present to answer some of our questions and to give us more information. Anyone who is interested, particularly those who are running for an SGA office, are invited to attend.

Elections for Student Government will be in five weeks. Some tentative dates that are of interest are: filing dates - March 17 - 21; election dates - March 26 - 27; runoff dates (if needed) - April 2 - 3. These dates are not set in concrete, and are subject to change. More information concerning the elections will be published in a week or two. I would like to encourage anyone who is interested to run for an SGA office. The workload is dependent on whatever level you set and the experience is definitely rewarding. Ladies Close Season

by Eddie Knorr

UNCW's Lady 'Hawks, under first-year head coach Marilyn Christoph, ended their 1979-80 campaign this weekend with games against Gardner-Webb and UNC-Asheville.

Though the results of these games were not available at printing time, this team will probably double the number of wins they achieved in 1978-79, when UNCW finished 5-18.

A number of pleasant surprises greeted Coach Christoph this year. Among these were the sensational play of Freshman Linda Plum and the return of Janet Grady, who scored a season-high 32 points against Livingstone and 25 in the upset of Duke earlier this year.

The precision ball-handling of Beth Pruitt and Darci Wilson, the unorthodox-yet-effective outside shooting of Kathi Shands, and the slick moves of Vertha Dixon combined to bring Trask Coliseum crowds to their collective feet many times during the 1979-80 season.

The program in general, though it has come far in Christoph's one season, has only begun its upward swing. The possibility of a winning season next year looms large in light of the improvement so far, and that will not be an end unto itself. Coach Christoph, known for her recruiting effort at Pembroke State (where the Lady Braves reached the state semi-finals under Christoph), should be able to attain that same kind of program here at UNCW in the near future.

Neither will graduation affect the 1980-81 edition of the Lady 'Hawks. There are no seniors on this year's squad, and veterans such as Dixon and Grady will provide the nucleus around which a state contender is built.

Hopefully, the quality of basketball will drum up more fan support next year to help the small, yet vocal, crowds which characterized this year's games. Maybe these crowds can urge the Lady Seahawks to their greatest season ever in 1980-81.

UNCW defeats ECU, 71-62

Fans cut down nets

by Harold Thompson

Last Saturday night, the Pirates of East Carolina University came into Trask Coliseum hoping to continue their mastery over the Seahawks. Both teams knew each other and it promised to be the game of the year. It was.

The 'Hawks defeated ECU by a 71-62 score and in the process atoned for their earlier loss this season at Greenville. UNCW used balanced scoring and tremendous fan support to untrack the Pirates. The Pirate's record fell to 14-10, while the 'Hawks upped theirs to 16-10 on the season.

The first-half began with John Haskins hitting an 18 footer with only 15 seconds gone in the first period.

UNCW did not trail again during the remainder of the contest. The 'Hawks continued to play excellent ball as Barry Taylor stole the ball with 15:29 remaining in the first-half and hit Shawn Williams for a 10-4 lead. ECU then called a time-out and tried to regroup. The 'Hawks didn't let up and continued to out hustle and out score the baffled Pirates. UNCW led by as many as 14, at 28-14 with 7:23 remaining in the first period. On the strength of Garry Cooper's 10 points and John Haskins and Barry Taylor's eight points the 'Hawks rolled to a 34-22 half-time lead.

Barry Taylor explained that, "We wanted to execute and run our patterns. We added two new offensive patterns to throw a wrinkle in their defenses. It gave them trouble." I knew that it was going to be a very close and exciting game. It wasn't going to be a blow-out by either team. We expected it to be a nip and tuck game."

The second-half brought an active ECU press and the 'Hawks used it to their advantage. When the Pirates used the full-court press UNCW moved the ball upcourt quickly and scored on a number of easy lay-ups. As the Pirates changed to a half-court trap the 'Hawks fed the ball inside and Danny Davis and "Coop" played two-on-two with the ECU defense. Davis added 13 second-half points and broke out of his dunking jinx as he slammed several home to the delight of 4,000 fans.

The Pirates were not impressed and continued to chip away at the 'Hawk's lead. Herb Krusen who hit 7-of-8 shots in the second-half rallied the Pirates to within six at 66-60 with ECU in possession of the ball. With :32 seconds remaining in the game Krusen fed the ball inside and it bounced off the Pirates. The 'Hawks got the ball and stopped a rally that could have changed the outcome of the game. After a time-out by the Pirates with only five seconds left to play the 'Hawks inbounded the ball and Danny Davis slipped behind ECU's press to receive a pass from Dennis Tobin. He caught the ball and proceeded to slam the ball through the net so hard that the entire goal shook, even the Pirates watched. The 'Hawks preserved a 71-62 win.

After the game, the fans were so pleased with the victory that they cut down the nets.

UNCW was led by Davis as he collected 17 points, but three other players reached double figures. John Haskins had 15, "Coop" hit 14, and Barry Taylor added 12. Davis and Cooper also had 11 rebounds apiece as the 'Hawks controlled the Boards.

ECU had only two players in double figures, Herb Krusen hit 9-of-12 shots for 18 points and George Maynor hit 10.

Seahawk Invitational Meet begins today

by Harold Thompson

UNCW traveled to Norfolk, Virginia last Saturday to face a very strong Old Dominion University team. Even though the 'Hawk swimmers performed well they lost both the men's and women's competitions by a 60-52 and 83-45 margin, respectively.

Coach Allen expected a close meet as he stated prior to the trip, "this is our second toughest meet, next to East Carolina. However, we would like to end the season on a winning note."

Ellen Cushman and Janet Johnson surprised the team as they both turned in national qualifying performances. Cushman qualified in the 400 Individual Medley and Johnson in the 50 Breaststroke. Freshman Rusty Lambe also won both the 1000 Freestyle and 200 Backstroke events.

Despite the loss to ODU, the 'Hawks returned home this week to prepare for the Seahawk Invitational Swim Meet. This is the second year it is being held and 9 universities will travel here to participate. Over 250 swimmers will compete in the three day event. Action begins today at noon and will continue on until Saturday evening. The qualifying events will be held in the morning and the finals held later that day for the separate events.

Thursday the qualifying runs from 12 until 3:30 with the finals being held from 7:30 until 10. The same times for the events will be used on Friday. On Saturday qualifying events will be held from 10 until 3:30 with the finals from 4 until 6:30.

Coach Allen still needs some student assistance and fans are always welcome. Your support is needed.

Baseball Team opens Season against Carolina

by Harold Thompson

It's not even springtime yet, but America's favorite pastime is already in full swing. Remember mom's apple pie, hot dogs, Chevrolet and of course, the ever popular sport, baseball. Coach Brooks and Assistant Coach Guthrie have been working since the beginning of the spring semester to prepare their young team for the tough forty game schedule that they will face this spring. It all begins tomorrow at 3 p.m. against ACC power Carolina, here at Brooks Field.

Even though this year's young starting squad is only composed of three seniors and six underclassmen, Coach Brooks feels confident as he states, "this is one of the youngest teams we've had in quite a while, but most of the players have had a year playing in the summer league." "We've moved John Tallent to third base from the short-stop position he played last year. He is still hitting good and may be even a better player at that position." Brooks went on to mention that Mark Scalf and Bill Austin along with pitchers David Pope and Mike Williams will help the squad greatly.

Because of youth, the Seahawk line-up will not be definite for at least a couple of weeks. Guthrie and Brooks are still in the process of evaluating the team, position by position. At this point, any of twelve guys could conceivably crack the starting line-up. The pitching seems solid with Williams and Pope. Also, Jeff Cole has looked impressive in practice so far. The infield seems to be the strongest area for the 'Hawks thus far, but the outfield will have plenty of speed,

The Baseball team

promises to have a fine season assures Brooks.

In all sports however, there exists doubt about the season and how fate might make or break certain teams. Coach Brooks summed it up well, "Baseball's a funny sport, its just too hard to guess about what might happen during a season, you could get the good breaks or vice versa." At any rate, the upcoming season looks pretty solid for the 'Hawks and they should enjoy a very successful campaign in 1980.

The first annual Miller One-on-One Tournament finals was held during half-time of the East Tennessee State game last Monday night. Ken Deal was the big winner as he defeated Dicky Dixon in the finals by a 13-11 overtime score. Deal received the winners trophy and a $200 scholarship. In the consolation finals Russell Holt took third place and Synclair Hariss came in fourth. Over sixty people entered the tournament and in its first year the tournament was considered a great success. Lewis T. Nunnelee, owner of Coastal Beverage was present to award the scholarship and trophies.

RACQUETBALL

The UNCW RACQUETBALL CLUB defeated the North Carolina State club by an 11-8 margin last Saturday in Inter-collegiate club competition here in Trask Colliseum. UNCW, which is undefeated in competition this year had a tough time of it with many of the matches going into a decisive tiebreaker. The 'Hawks boasted a squad of seven men and four women in this important meet. The club still needs more participants and stresses that outside competition is only one facet of the club. Their primary goal is to compete with men and women of their own potential. Court space is available on Thursday nights between 6:30 and 9:30, the club also meets during this time. If you have any questions or would like to join, call Mitch Covington at 791-9292 or see Bob Wolff in Trask. All interested persons are invited.

OPINION

by Harold Thompson

It has come to my attention that a number of "big industry" lobbyists are trying to "railroad" the Alaskan Land Bill that passed the House in October 1978, by a nine to one margin in favor of the bill. The Alaska Land Bill was intended to set aside nearly 100 million acres of wilderness Alaskan land to remain undeveloped and unspoiled. In the process it would protect and provide habitats for countless animals who need this land to continue living in their natural environment.

Shortly after the bill passed the house an Alaskan Senator began a series of delaying processes that would give the oil and timber industries time to mount lobbyists' support and defeat the bill in the Senate. They managed to send the bill to the Energy and Natural Resources Committee where it was cut and chopped to pieces. The committee's rationale being that the United States needed this land for valuable oil timber reserves. In reality, this section of land only contains five percent of Alaska's potential oil and timber resources.

Thankfully, Senator Paul Tsongas of Mass. (D) and William Roth of Del. (R) introduced a compromise bill for these Alaskan lands and called it the "Tsongas-Roth Substitute." Even though this bill has nearly 50 compromises included, it still preserves the spirit and major intent of the original Alaskan Land Bill. This substitution would fully protect the wilderness areas, safeguard the integrity of the existing Arctic National Wildlife Range, restore national park boundaries to prohibit mining, and assure key wildlife habitat in Alaska.

The Alaskan Coalition has been formed by the Audubon Society and the Wilderness Society to make sure the "Tsongas-Roth Substitute" passes the Senate without suffering the same fate as the Alaskan Land Bill. They need your support and help to make sure that the big oil and timber industries don't lobby away votes in favor of their interests. They are working to save the future of Alaska.

The substitute has been delayed until July and now is the time to act. Write either Senator Morgan or Helms to persuade them to act promptly in support of this bill. Passage is paramount to the future of the last American wilderness and the inhabitants that live there.

Write the Senators from North Carolina or from your own home state to express your views. Your letters count!

Write today to: Senator-----, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C. 20510. Let your voices be heard. Your can also write to the: Alaska Coalition, 530 seventh Street, S.E. Washington, D.C. 20003.

Pop's warmth and concern touches many at UNCW

by Harold Thompson

For the last fifteen years the UNCW campus has had the good fortune to have an individual on their staff that has inspired, motivated, and helped its students to earn their degrees and have fun while doing it. The students just call him "Pop". The name itself speaks of the gratitude and warmth that the students have for this man. His name is actually David Warner but most students and staff prefer "Pop", it just fits him better.

Last July, "Pop" officially retired from the university. However, he returned last fall to teach two courses and continue with his mainstay of announcing and score-keeping during basketball home games. This semester he only teaches one course but is still keeping very active in school activities. "Pop" says, "keep with the young ones and you stay young. For as long as possible, I'll stay as close to the students as I can. Tentatively, I'll teach one class next fall. I just enjoy the university and following the sports," continues "Pop". He has no plans to slow down now.

"Pop" grew up around athletics and it got in his bloodstream at an early age. His father was the football line coach for Penn State in the late 1920's. With a constant love for sports he graduated from Springfield College in 1937. While there he served as the official scorekeeper for home basketball games. James Naismith invented the game of basketball at Springfield, Mass. "Pop" then served at several universities in a variety of positions before coming to then Wilmington College in 1965 as the Director of College Relations.

"Pop" moved from this position to the head of the Intramural programs in 1969 after Wilmington College became the University of North Carolina at Wilmington. Over the next ten years he took the idea and turned the Intramural program into an organization that stressed participation for all students. In this position, "Pop" took advantage of the opportunity to be near the students and show concern about them. But, being humble as he is, he down-plays his accomplishments and stresses that others should receive the credit. He credits his teachers and advisors in college for giving him the direction, and his wife and family for giving him the backing and support.

While at UNCW, "Pop" has been the driving force not only behind the Intramural program but also Career Day, the Alumni, APO, and better faculty and students relations. His warmth and concern has also touched many during his tenure.

"Pop" has given the university a lot of himself, but being humble he would like to thank the students for their continuing support and encouragement. He was particularly thrilled last year when the yearbook was dedicated to him. "It was real nice, it completed the cycle. Every school I've worked for has dedicated a yearbook to me," he says.

Obviously, other schools have felt the same way as UNCW does about this man. UNCW is fortunate to know a man called "Pop".

Atlantis plans 72 page double issue

by Greg Glickstein

Believe it or not, Atlantis, the university's literary magazine, is alive and well. Faced with a lack of financing and a wounded printing press, our energetic staff was forced to forego our traditional fall issue. However, the 1979-80 school year crowns a decade of Atlantis, and using our funds from last semester, we're planning an extravagant seventy-two page, double issue, spring anniversary.

Included in your special edition will be an eight page center spread of some of the most outstanding art submitted this year, in addition to illustrations for the sixteen selected short stories and Tome Jones' award winning cover. Also featured will be the poetry contest winners from the fall as well as the finest poetry of 1980. Totally new for the anniversary is a directory of the artists, poets and short story authors whose works appear in the magazine.

If all this hasn't already slackened your jaws perhaps money will Ah! We knew it. No kidding, though; we've got a whopping one hundred dollars in prize money-fifty dollars for first place; thirty dollars for second and twenty dollars for third-just waiting for you talented winners of the Jesse Rehder Short Story Contest. Also for those high caliber stories, there will be two honorable mentions. Only meager requirements, such as a minimum six hour classload;

a limit of two submissions per student and a firm March six deadline, can prevent you from claiming your prize.

Last semester's savings and ten years of quality art and literature has inspired us, here at Atlantis, to really give it a go this semester. Yet, our big plans will only be as good as your submissions. Therefore, help us to give you something to enjoy when the weather finally warms and those textbooks get old.

Heart: Bebe Le Strange

During the summer of 1976, Heart burst upon the rock scene with an exciting debut LP, DREAMBOAT ANNIE, that contained an infinite amount of promise of better things to come. Heart, a Seattle-based band, was led by two sisters, Ann and Nancy Wilson. Although the notion of women singing rock 'n' roll wasn't new, the concept of women having their own band was, and their success no doubt made it easier for other female-based groups to garner recognition. The next couple of albums, MAGAZINE, and LITTLE QUEEN, proved that Heart wasn't merely another pretty face, but more recent offerings suggest that this act needs something to lift it out of the doldrums.

What finally decided that this bunch needed a shot in the arm was their new album BEBE LE STRANGE. The cover, which is a black and white print, should grab the attention of one and all because it features those two cuties, the Wilson sisters. It's a cheap cover, much like last year's Aerosmith cover, and that's where the problems begin. This, coupled with the outrageous $8.98 list price, doesn't make the album very appealing to anyone, which is what a band who is rapidly approaching borderline status must have.

Oh, they still have Ann Wilson (lead vocals, bass, drums, piano, alto flute), Nancy Wilson (guitars, piano, bass, vocals), Howard Leese (guitars, keyboards, vocals), Steve Fossen (bass), and Michael Derosier (drums), but absent is former lead guitarist Roger Fisher. The problems continue as neither Howard Leese nor Nancy Wilson is a suitable replacement for the departed Fisher.

Their troubles endure on side one where the title track opens the side. "Bebe Le Strange" sounds like led Zeppelin's "Kashmir," with a Heart refrain. This mediocrity is followed by a bland attempt at the blues called "Down On Me." Simply, "Down On Me" is an average song that would've been a lot better with a searing guitar solo. Third on the side is "Silver Wheels," a nice, short acoustic piece by Nancy Wilson. In fact, it's so short (1:22) that it seems to be more of a filler or an afterthought than anything else. It's followed quickly by "Break," a song that is complete with unorganized guitar. This chaos leads into the side's finale "Rockin' Heaven Down." All that can be said about this is that it may rock Heaven, but it wouldn't ever make it at the Fillmore.

"Even It Up" initiates the second side, and is the album's sole respectable effort. It's a strutting, power chord affair that sounds like something that Heart would've done a few years ago. The Tower of Power horn section are featured on this cut, but are hardly noticeable as producer Mike Flicker kept them in the background. "Strange Night" is next, and it sounds like Blondie meets Heart, with the result being total pandemonium. "Raised On YOU" is Nancy Wilson's one-person Karla Bonoff imitation that fails miserably. This monotonous tripe is followed by "Pilot," a dreary song that has a refrain reminiscent of Nilsson's "Me and My Arrow." The last song on the side is "Sweet Darlin'," but really ought to be termed the "Ann Wilson Show" as she attempts to play virtually all of the instruments on it. The key word here is bad.

There are three serious problems to be solved if this band is to ever be taken seriously again. To begin with, they are in dire need of a good lead guitarist. Two good rhythms don't equal a lead, which is a must for a rock band. Roger Fisher wasn't the best lead in the business, but he was better than those he left behind. Also, the songwriting talents of the Wilson sisters and Susan Ennis must either improve or the band must draw from outside sources, as the music lacks organization and the lyrics are so bad they're embarrassing. Lastly, Mike Flicker, Heart's longtime producer, should be sacked in favor of someone new that will breathe some new life into a group that has drifted off into the dull and melancholy. The shame is that Heart is a much better band than they've showed on this album, but unless they make amends they're destined to become yesterday's news in tomorrow's bargain bin.

Senate reviews constitution at last regular meeting

by Joyce Stevens

The UNCW Student Legislature met February 7 to review the new constitution before its approval.

The rules were suspended and Jack Allen, Chairman of the Constitutional Committee, presided over a special constitutional debate. After all the revisions and corrections are made, the new constitution will be submitted for approval.

Vice-President Downs announced that his report from the recent trip to Washington is now on file in the SGA office for student inspection.

The SGA has two new Senators, Nancy Kelker and Kimberly Mills. A seat is still open for special students. Those interested should come by the SGA office.

President Jon Fail announced that a student coordinator is needed for Governor Hunt's campaign. Any interested student should contact Jon Fail or Frank Colvin. If you would rather support Bob Scott than Jim Hunt, then contact Mike Stroud at the SGA office for a position with Scott's campaign.

Under new business, a resolution was passed to preserve the decor of the Goodwood Tavern in the new student union building. The resolution passed by consent.

The meeting adjourned at 8:45. The next meeting will be February 21 at 7 p.m. in C-218. All students are encouraged to attend.

Campus Chuckles

by Julie Russ

Remember when college students all wore Levis and the natural look? Guys grew beards and talked about seeing Europe by thumb; girls were just getting their teeth into ERA, and bongs and beer were (as always) campus institutions.

Well, the times they are a-changin'. The beards are still here, and so are the Levis, but the All-American hippie/yippie/dreamer has been replaced by a new fast growing breed: the Prep. Now before my sorority sisters come after me tooth and nail, let me define my terms. There are the harmless innocent preppies, and then there are the true-blue, I'd-kill-for-another-add-a-bead PREPS. And frankly, they give me chills.

What is a prep? A prep (male) is blow-dried, bright-eyed, white-toothed, wide-shouldered, well-mannered, well-bred, and (it grieves me to say) more than occassionally boring. They travel in packs, but are harmless. Preps drink moderately (Strohs when it's available, Lite when it's not) smoke almost never, and toke only under pressure (at frat parties, during exams, when the little alligator peels off a new Izod shirt...)

One thing about those BMOC guys, they know how to treat a girl. But then, so do a lot of men. What it all boils down to is CHARM, which most preps ooze from every pore. These dudes could talk the Unknown Comic out of his paper bag, the San Diego Chicken out of his pinfeather. (And once in a while, Sorority Sue out of her skirt!)

Female preps are really kind of cute, if Kewpie dolls turn you on. Seriously, everybody likes "the look" now and then, but the LIFESTYLE has got to go! Phrases like "Much, really, later, honestly, gross, and (Lord, abolish this word) YOW-ZAH!" aren't worth twisting your tongue around. And those plaid skirts are cute as can be, but my hips are big enough without that kind of help. Monogrammed sweaters are nice, but I can remember my name without having it sewn on my shirt, and I'll bet you can too.

One plug I've gotta give the fairer preps: they ain't plain, Jane. Maybe it's the designer jeans or the fifty-dollar perms, but by and large they're okay to look at, right guys? Actually, preppie MEN can be kinda hunky, but clones just aren't my thing. I mean, they need tattoos in their ears to tell 'em apart!

Well, kiddies, I've had my fun. Now if you can just find it in your wholesome preppie hearts to forgive me...who knows, someday you might get your turn!

Bahamas trip planned

In cooperation with the International Field Studies program a Sailing excursion in the Bahamas is being offered this spring after graduation and before the first summer session. Coordinated by Dr. David Dean of the Chemistry Department, an experienced outdoorsman, the group will form May 19 in Ft. Lauderdale, Florida and fly to the Bahamas.

Once in the Bahamas they will set sail in three Sloops each of which has an experienced captain and first mate. Although actually helping to crew the boats is part of the program, no sailing experience is necessary.

The ships will normally stay within sight of each other while sailing from place to place. The trip will combine eight days of sailing, island camping, island beach combing, diving, reef snorkeling, medical insurance, and a return flight to Ft. Lauderdale to produce a memorable experience.

The entire cost will be $345. A non-refundable $50 deposit will be required by March 17; the balance will be due in mid April. The group will be limited to 18 people. To sign up, contact Dr. Dean in the Chemistry Department, phone extension 2452

The services of the University Polling Service are open to all UNCW students and organizations.

Sadie Hawkins Dance

The UNCW Dance Committee is proud to announce that plans for the Leap Year-Sadie Hawkins Dance on Friday, February 29, are now being finalized. Although a Sadie Hawkins dance, where the girls do the asking, is usually done on Sadie Hawkins Day, we thought that the observance of Leap Year Day was enough of a reason to have one. And to make the dance even more interesting, hats will be required for admittance, so start looking for the hat that will compliment you the most. The doors of the Pub will open at 9 p.m. and the festivities will carry on till 1 a.m. A valid I.D. and legal proof of age will be required. The Dance Committee is a division of the University Program Board.

Editor's note:

Due to technical failure, there are two different type sizes in this week's Seahawk. This problem will be corrected as soon as possible.

In regard to the statement of student programming being not an issue of black or white but a student issue, why then are there two separate program boards and why is the name for the other program board entitled "Black Program Board"?

Now, concerning the lecture put on by the "Black Program Board", it seems the board is stating their overall success in regard to that one activity. The positive or negative feelings toward any organization cannot be based on the success or failure of merely one activity.

Many Americans were alarmed to learn that a substantial amount of TMI's difficulties were caused by human errors. George says this "could be corrected. No matter what we have there's going to be human error in any form or shape," he explains. "I think we need to remember that people can make mistakes."

George says he believes that the big corporations who control nuclear energy want to repress solar energy. "Face it, these corporations have the power because they have the money," he states. "Naturally, they have invested all these millions of dollars in nuclear energy and they don't want to see solar energy developed to do the same thing that nuclear energy is doing."

Preregistration changes

by Wendy Robbins

All students take notice—there will be some changes in the upcoming preregistration for the 1980 summer sessions and fall semester.

The main change is that class schedule cards will be given out earlier than usual. Now students will have to pick up their schedule cards from their advisor on the date they are to report to his office to plan their schedule.

Students will obtain master registration cards on the day their class is assigned to preregister. Then they can pick up their course cards from each department listed on their schedule card. "They must keep in mind that they will not be able to pick up their course cards until they get their master registration cards," says Director of Admissions and Records Dorothy Marshall.

Juniors and Seniors will obtain their master cards from the Registrar's Office, but the procedure has been modified for sophomores and freshmen.

"The juniors and seniors will, as usual, pick up their master registration cards in this office," explains Marshall. "But for one hour on the first day of preregistration for sophomores and freshmen, we will set up in the gym and have several alphabetical breakdowns. The sophomore and freshman classes are much too large to handle in this office."

This means that on March 24 between the hours of 8:30 and 9:30 sophomores will report to Hanover Hall to pick up their master cards. Freshmen will repeat this procedure, except the date they will get their cards is March 27. After 9:30, the master registration cards will be available in the Registrar's Office.

Dates for preregistration are as follows: Seniors and Special Students, March 20; Juniors, March 21; Sophomores, March 24-26; Freshmen, March 27-31 and Unclassified Students, March 20-31.

April is the deadline for students to return their master registration and course cards to the Registrar's Office. Failure to turn in cards by this date will invalidate preregistration.

Carter says boycott Olympics

by Wendy Robbins

The crisis in Afghanistan has caused a one-on-one confrontation between the United States and the Soviet Union. Both countries are discovering that their allies are not rallying behind them as they have in the past.

The Russians have received little support for their actions in Afghanistan. By a margin of 104 to 18, the United Nations overwhelmingly voted to censure the Soviet Union. The Soviets' aggressive behavior has especially raised the indignation of the United States and the Moslem nations. But the United States has also been plagued by the lack of international support. For the most part, President Carter's decision to boycott the Moscow Olympics has generated only a lukewarm response from the other countries. So it seems that the Afghan crisis boils down to a conflict between two superpowers—the Soviet Union and the United States.

In an address to the nation on January 20, Carter warned the Soviets that they had thirty days to clear out of Afghanistan or the United States would not participate in the Summer Olympics. The deadline was last Wednesday and the Russians are still in Afghanistan. The U.S. Olympic Committee is supposed to have the final word on whether or not American athletes will participate in the Moscow Games. But it, along with the athletes, is expected to comply with Carter's decision. It appears that it is official—the United States will boycott the Moscow Olympics.

A majority of students randomly interviewed at UNCW support the boycott of the Summer Olympics. "I think everybody should line up behind the President," says George Safadi, a sophomore. George believes that the boycott will accomplish a lot of things. "One of them is that the Russians will think many times before they take any step that will affect the world community," he states. "Their action was quite obviously against the international community's welfare."

George hopes that Russia will "get the message" that from now on the world "will react in the same strength as their actions." He thinks the Olympic Games should be put off for a while, long enough for the Russians to reevaluate the situation. "It might be wise to postpone them," he says.

"Maybe the Kremlin will change their minds, given more time."

Laura Smith, a freshman agrees with Carter's decision. "We've got every right to do it," she says. "I can see why Carter did it. It wasn't fair to the athletes, but I can see the reason. If I was one of the athletes, I would be kind of angry after all that training."

The boycott will not accomplish much, Laura feels. "I don't think it will do that much. It just shows where we stand, that we don't think they (the Russians) did the right thing."

In some ways, Sam O'Leary, a sophomore, agrees with the boycott and in some ways he doesn't. "I think politically it's good but in the athlete aspect it's really bad," he states. "It's unfair to the athletes, but it's a move saying we're not going to condone what Russia is doing. I know a few people who have worked really hard for the last two years trying to make the Olympics and they finally made it. This girl back home on the swimming team finally made it. Now she's afraid she won't be able to go."

The boycott does have its advantages, he believes. "It will show that the United States does not condone the Russians' actions. The invasion of Afghanistan is not right. The boycott is showing we won't have anything to do with it."

Sam hopes that there will be enough nations supporting the United States "so we can have an Olympic of our own." He wants the Games moved

LETTERS

To the Editor:

Rumor has it that the administration of this campus sees fit NOT to move the Goodwood Tavern into the new student services building, but to destroy the intimacy and warmth that it has represented since it became part of this institution. The administration can certainly find another source of firewood.

Through the years that I have attended this university, I have had the pleasure of attending many CoffeeHouse productions in the Goodwood Entertainers such as Mike Cross, Tom Parks, Barry Drake etc., etc., etc., feel that the Tavern's intimacy is a unique quality in the college entertainment circuit.

Barry Drake said that we (the students) should NEVER allow the destruction of the Goodwood.

Apart from the entertainment aspect of the Coffee House, having such a relaxed atmosphere in a lunch-time setting is truly a life saver in the hectic schedule of students. The Tavern is a place to sit, relax and to socialize with friends, while having lunch without the harshness of a cafeteria. The Goodwood staff also adds a lot to the enjoyable atmosphere.

The S.G.A. has passed a resolution to save the decor and atmosphere of the Goodwood. It is time to stop the administration tyranny. Don't take a passive attitude about this. The Goodwood means a lot to the students, staff and entertainers who frequent this haven. It is time for us to unite!! Write to the editor and express your feelings now!

o the Editor:

Is our campus running out of satire on the local problems of student apathy, available parking, available housing, the cost of books that change semesters in most regular introductory classes, and poor food services???

Julie Russ evidently thinks so, for her February 14 column wasn't funny on campus situations. The relating of famous women's views on the PROPOSED draft registration of women was a brave attempt at humor. The witty description of "ugly" Army, "adorable" Steinem, and "biddy" Elizabeth Taylor Warner along with clichés complete with "a rolling pin," "slaying together," and "old spice" would have made Rona Barrett or Archie Bunker proud.

Presumably, Miss Russ simply forgot that "suggested registration for the draft" and actual "drafting for combat" are separate concepts with totally DIFFERENT definitions. Her notion of "all that patriotic jazz" would have made Rosey the Riveter cry. During World War II Rosey knew the importance of women in the civilian or military work force which has become a reality today in peace time where the cost of living continues to rise as the value of the dollar declines. Campus chuckles would do better to focus on local University issues rather than trying to equal Trudeau's Doonesbury or Erma Bombeck!!

To The Editor

The Student Government Association Regular Spring Elections are scheduled to be held Wednesday, March 26 and Thursday, March 27 from 9 am to 5 pm. At present, only one location has been established as the polling place. (If more manpower becomes available, polling places will hopefully be opened at the University Cafeteria and the lobby of Galloway Dorm, in that order.) The present polling place is the foyer of Randall Library. (Anyone who is interested in helping to man these polls are encouraged to call Lynne Wells at 763-7195.)

ing for these positions will be held on March 17-22 from 9 to 5 in the SGA office.

All UNCW students who are interested in Student Government activities are encouraged to consider running for these positions.

This year's election will prove to be an exciting one! So, exercise your duties by voting this year. If you've never voted before at UNCW, now is the time to begin. The only requirement for voting is that you be a registered UNCW student with a valid I.D. on hand at the polling place.

COME OUT AND VOTE!

Thank you,

S. Lynne Wells

Board of Elections

To the Editor:

Last week's article entitled "Nuclear energy radiates support here at UNCW" was extremely biased and very much opinionated. The interviewing of two students is not hardly any justification for saying that UNCW as a whole is Pro-Nuclear power. The term "RADIATES" in itself is enough to wonder

EDITORIAL

As everyone on campus should be aware of, SGA elections are just around the corner after spring break.

During the next few weeks, you'll see campaign posters lining the halls and around the campus grounds, people with buttons and hats, and maybe even hear a few campaign speeches.

Don't shrug this off as just being another game to play or as being plain dumb. Take some time; maybe between classes, or at lunch, to read these posters and talk to the candidates. These elections aren't as unimportant as they sometimes seem. Many times after college an SGA official will run for an elected position in the community or state.

Most of you reading this now are probably thinking, "SO WHAT?" Well, the SGA controls a reasonable amount of the money that YOU pay for in student fees. The SGA decides which clubs and organizations to fund and how much funding they are entitled to receive.

It is your right as students of UNCW to know who is spending your money and for what purpose. But every time SGA elections roll around and you don't vote, then you don't have the right to criticize or complain about the way the SGA handles finances.

Also, the SGA's voice is heard in many student and administrative affairs at UNCW. It is your responsibility to make sure your opinion is heard. This responsibility can be fulfilled in two ways: By either supporting a candidate who shares your views, or by running for an office yourself. It is still not too late to file for office at this date.

"What difference does it make if I vote? I'm just one person." Everyone else is just one person, too, and if 300 people felt this way, that's 300 lost votes. And 300 votes can make a hell of a difference between one candidate and another.

Voting doesn't guarantee that your candidate will be elected. Voting DOES guarantee YOUR right to be heard.

The Once and Future Expert

UNCW Student Forum

by Gladys Lewis

When an older student returns to school, he or she may expect problems that are unique and overwhelming. My family senses this, and they take a great interest in my education. When my older son reported that my math professor told him I was doing "very well," I was both irritated and comforted. When my ten-year-old granddaughter showed up with her math book and volunteered to help me, I grew anxious. And my younger grandson, a born critic, wonders about the fitness of my being here at all. He remarked, "Mothers don't go to school. Aren't you my daddy's mother?" The problems of an expert in life coming to college to learn to be another kind of expert are strange and unusual, but I have earned the right to be an involved spectator, listening for a change to the opinions of others.

When I was an expert and when they didn't want them, I cheerfully inflicted endless opinions on my children. This was no big deal; all mothers do this, and in spite of good intentions they seldom come up with the right answers when you need them. I ought to know. Because I am a parent, the role of decision-maker was forced upon me; with no previous experience, I handled the role confidently, doing whatever was necessary. I was in charge; I knew what I felt and where I was going; I was sure of what I thought and what I wanted for myself and my family. My sons, who pretended to listen for so long, are married; they listen now to other female experts—more attentively, I hope.

While there were times when I was willing to fight to maintain my position of "walking encyclopedia," I am relieved to know that there are many experts around. Now that I have abdicated, my English professor wants an opinion paper on a subject I feel strongly about. I can't think of a thing to say, except that I am tired of being an expert.

At one time on the home front, I had the following full-time responsibilities; wife, mother, cook, purchasing agent, and manager of the sink, washing machine, clothesline, and ironing board, for openers. Adding an outside job involved the precision and expertise of a juggler. The secret to handling so many obligations lies in the ability to determine what must be done, what can be postponed, and what can be ignored indefinitely. Now, ironing is a lost art at my house, and whoever is hungriest starts the meals, cooks whatever is thawed, or suggests going out to eat.

Then, I was an efficient and dedicated railroad employee. My work, an important part of my life, was demanding, challenging, and rewarding. My husband and I made a bargain; whoever reached home first started, and usually completed, the evening meal. All too often, driving home in separate cars, we met at bisecting corners and tried to wait each other out; a Mexican stand-off. A typical male chauvinist, he ignored the frustration of drivers behind him, and insisted on allowing me, against all rules and regulations, to turn before he did. Embarrassed for both of us, I let him get away with his dirty trick; I was the one who reached home first more than my share of the time.

Now that I am a full-time student, he is more cooperative. He cheerfully cooks waffles and sausages on Sunday mornings; he is the acknowledged family expert when it comes to making chocolate fudge, and since I gave him my secret recipe, he is the final authority on homemade fresh peach ice cream. He is not, however, a paragon of virtue; all of his specialties are tempting and fattening. Then there is another problem; he finds the sound of my voice so soothing, he invariably falls asleep just when I get to my most important point; he has yet to receive the full benefit of my unique and enlightened views. Clearly, he has not learned how to be an expert listener. On the other hand, when I become more knowledgeable, I hope to have better material and a more entertaining presentation.

When I registered at UNCW in August 1976, my youngest son began his senior year. I promised if I passed him on campus, I wouldn't speak; I would pretend he was a stranger. He didn't demand this courtesy; I offered it freely. We had a class at the same hour in the same building, but we drove separate vehicles. One day when my car wouldn't start, a neighbor gave me a ride to school. Approaching the strange bearded student who tried to ignore me as I walked down the hall toward him, I demanded a ride home. Walking away I heard the quiet giggles of his friends and the laugh that was louder and more impolite than the others; I knew it well. What he didn't know was that I always saw him when he walked by my classroom door, checking to see that I was in place. Now that I am a senior, he is still

Creative Arts Department needs student participation

If your interest include painting, drawing, print-making, ceramics, acting, stagecraft, theatre design, lighting or production, directing, jazz, orchestra, choir, chamber music, opera, voice, piano, or musical instruments, the Creative Arts Department is looking for you. Whether you have a creative arts major or are a non-major is not important; what is important is your participation.

The Department of Creative Arts is made up of art, drama, music, and speech communications. The department offers concentrations leading to the B.A. Degree in (1) creative arts in art, drama, and music, and (2) speech communication.

Dr. James K. McGowan, assistant to the Chancellor and Federal Compliance Officer, is the acting chairman of the Creative Arts Department. He urges all students at UNCW to stop by the Creative Arts Department in Kenan Hall and be awakened to a whole new visual world.

Dr. McGowan said, "Students can become extremely enriched by experiencing the arts. In the creative arts there is a certain openness to sound, color, and music. Once you start to enjoy the drama and art you get the bug...there are lots of dimensions to it."

McGowan also said that many students with music backgrounds are unaware that membership in the Concert Choir is open to any student in the university with the director's approval, and any participant may earn credit. Non-music majors are also encouraged to participate. Dr. McGowan stressed that the choir offers great social opportunities for students.

Blacks are minority at UNCW

by Derrick Anderson

With the problem of low minority enrollment on the campus of UNCW black students must play a part in the recruitment of young blacks toward this university's campus. It is a known fact that in the past UNCW was not that receptive toward black people. It is also true that most white campuses in this nation were not that receptive toward black people. Still there is somewhat of a recruitment, effort on the part of the administration to increase the minority enrollment and blacks on campus must play a part for this effort to be successful.

Many of the young black high school graduates forsake the confines of home to go away to school. Yet many of these same young talented blacks would prefer staying in the Wilmington area. If these young blacks were aware that it would be in their best interest to attend the local university there would be a substantial increase in black enrollment. Dr. James McGowan of the compliance office will soon meet with members of the Wilmington Branch of the N.A.A.C.P and discuss the matter of reaching the area's young blacks. The purpose of this is to lay to rest some of the negative feed back in the black community concerning the university.

Black organizations such as the Omega Psi Phi Fraternity will visit local high schools in March to counsel minority students on the economic benefits of staying in the area and going to school. Other black organizations may not be as readily equipped as Omega Psi Phi, but we as black students personally can do our part. It is to our benefit as well.

JOB ASSISTANCE

There is a place on campus that offers valuable assistance in finding employment.

The UNCW Career Placement and Planning Office, located in Room 207 of the Administration Building, is there to help students with employment problems.

Sandra Harkin, a counselor in the office, said she can help students find any type of employment, from a summer job to a full-time career.

Job opportunities range from federal internships, to retail and manufacturing companies, to work in the State Parks system.

The office also has positions available on a "co-operative education" basis. These jobs allow students to have a full time job and still attend school.

The office staff is eager to assist students but can only do so if students will come there for help.

SGA audits executive account

The regular weekly meeting of the UNCW Student Legislature was held Thursday, Feb 21, with all but seven members in attendance. Treasurer Jesse Sanders distributed a previously requested audit of the executive account, which presented all expenditures of the executive, from Francis De Luca's initial expenditures to the recent Washington trip attended by President Fail and Vice-president Downs.

In other reports, program board chair Steve Chiappisi distributed and explained information from the convention on National Entertainment and Campus Activities that various program board members attended in Washington last week. Lynne Wells, chairman of the Board of Elections, announced the dates for the upcoming spring elections; Filing: March 17-21 - Voting: March 26-27 - Run-offs: April 2-3

Vice-president Glen Downs announced that Guy Pushee's senate seat is now open, due to his resignation. President Jon Fail reported that the resolution concerning the preservation of the Goodwood Tavern had been favorably received by the administration. President Fail also answered questions concerning his expenditures of the executive account.

Constitution committee chair Jack Allen asked all senators to read over the final draft of the constitution, and announced possible plans for a summer senate.

Under New Business, NCSL asked the Legislature for $76.05 to attend the NCSL session in Raleigh. A motion to do this was made by Frank Colvin, seconded and adopted. Larry Hulett moved that all SGA accounts be audited by the Treasurer, except the Executive and Program board accounts, which were previously audited by request of Senator Mike Stroud. Hulett's motion was seconded and adopted.

The meeting adjourned at 8:25. All interested students are urged to attend the next meeting, tonight at 7 in C-218.

Jon Fail, President
Student Government Assn.

President's report

$15,000 per year

The elections for student government are only four weeks away, and planning has already begun. One of the major problems with any election, is volunteers to man the voting boxes. The more volunteers, the more voting boxes we can man, thereby giving more students the opportunity to vote. Anyone who is interested in helping, please contact Lynn Wells, Board of Elections Chairperson, at the SGA office. More details concerning the elections and a candidate debate will be made available as soon as we receive conformation of dates and places.

Last Friday, the business seminar that has been studying SGA property control gave me a preview of the work they have accomplished so far. They will make a full report to the SGA Senate on Thursday, March 6 at 7 p.m. I would like to urge all clubs to send a representative, as this report will outline the proper procedure to do business with the SGA. The business seminar class deserves recognition for a job well done.

Finally, after three weeks delay and misinformation, the Student Affairs Committee will meet. This is the committee that is conducting the intramural investigation. For those of you who are not aware, each student at UNCW pays, in your fees, $2 per semester for the intramural program. This comes to over $7,000 per semester or almost $15,000 an academic year (the total is much higher when you add in summer school). There has been little accountability of these monies to students, who after all, pay these fees.

I'm sure that not many students know where their fee money goes, so here's a breakdown for one semester:

$135.00 (55.1 percent)
Tuition, in-state
($1,012.50 out-of-state);

this cost is set by the N.C. General Assembly.

$25.50 (10.4 percent) Athletic fee; pays for the athletic programs, such as baseball, basketball, etc.
$13.50 (5.5 percent) Physical activity fee; pays for the auxiliary services of the athletic department, such as locker room, towels, P.E. uniforms, etc.
$2.00 (.05 percent) Intramural fee; pays for the intramural program. This is the budget which the Student Affairs Committee is investigating.

$11.00 (4.5 percent) Health fee; pays for health services on campus.

$25.00 (10.2 percent) Debt service; pays for the debt on Trask Coliseum, students are paying for this building. This fee will increase by $35.00 to pay the debt on the new University Center, making the total for next semester $60.00

$19.00 (7.8 percent) Student Union fee; pays for the maintenance, upkeep, and salaries of the people who keep the Pub open.

$14.00 (5.7 percent) SGA fee; pays for over 30 clubs and committees, all student programming by the University Program Board (UPB), Seahawk, WLOZ, etc.

$245.00 Total per semester, tuition and fees.

As you can see, the SGA has a relatively small portion of your tuition and fee monies. When you multiply these figures by the 3,545 full time equivalent students here at UNCW, you can plainly see that this is big money. Your money.

Take a part in your student government. You don't need to be elected to take part. Ask questions, be inquisitive, help your student government represent you.

CHANGE?

Treasurer's report :It's budget time

by Jesse Sanders

Since October 15, I have been Treasurer of the Student Government Association. During this time, the SGA has seen many changes. Even with all these changes, the Student Government has continued to serve you, the student, in a large number of capacities. The most important way the Student Government serves you is by funding most of the clubs and organizations on this campus.

The term "funding" may be new to some of you so I will explain how the "funding" procedure works. The SGA fiscal year runs from July 1 to June 30. During this period clubs and organizations use monies allocated to them from the previous year. In March, new Student Government officials are elected. After taking office, these officials are faced with allocating funds for the next school year. The month of April is the budgetary month for the Student Government Association.

The term funds can be defined as the amount of student fees that are given to Student Government to finance the different interests of the Students on the campus of UNCW. The SGA is given a set amount per student per semester to allocate to the clubs and organizations.

The intermediary group for the clubs and organizations and the SGA is a standing committee called the Finance Committee. The committee is made up of 4 Senate members, 2 at large members and the Treasurer. As a whole, the group analyzes all budget requests by the clubs and organizations, making corrections to the budgets so that they represent a fair allocation to the clubs and organizations. After going through the budgets with each club/organization individually, the Finance Committee presents its recommendations to the Student Senate. As the recommendations come to the floor of the Senate, a debate ensues on the amount of the allocation. After considerable deliberation, the Senate approves the budget whether it has been altered or remains the same. Once it is approved, the Senate then proceeds along these same lines until all the budgets have been approved and the amount of monies allocated are not greater than the forecasted amount for the new school term.

My purpose in writing this report is to announce to all clubs and organizations that budget time is almost here, and preparation for your 1980-81 school year budget should begin. Any clubs or organizations who need help in preparing their budget should come by the SGA office upstairs in the Pub. I will be glad to help you get prepared for the upcoming year.

Seahawks win 19, third straight year Dump Eagles, 82-67

by Harold Thompson

Traditionally the Seniors were introduced, with their parents in attendance, first, John Haskins, then Barry Taylor and finally with the echoes of "Coop", "Coop", Garry Cooper. Each had built a forte at UNCW and the success for a nineteen game winning season rode on the wave of emotion that surrounded their last game as a Seahawk.

The Seahawks came into the game with an 18-10 season record, in sharp contrast to Georgia Southern's 5-21 mark. All players like to end their careers with a win and the Senior Seahawks did, rather convincingly at 82-67.

UNCW opened the first-half with a flurry as they scored eight straight points. The Eagles of Georgia Southern had their difficulties in the opening minutes. However, with 12:30 remaining in the first-half the Eagles pulled to within one point at 13-12. Both teams traded baskets until Garry Cooper unveiled his last edition of the flying dunk show. With ten minutes remaining "Coop" received a patented Dennis Tobin lob and the show began.

The Eagles tried to recover but couldn't and went down by eight at half-time. The score was 42-34.

In the first period, Cooper had eight points on a 4-for-5 performance. John Haskins and Barry Taylor were hot from the outside and added nine and thirteen points, respectively.

During the second-half the Seahawks tip-toed out to a nineteen point lead and totally dominated the taller Georgia Southern team on the boards. It wasn't easy though as the Eagles kept rallying to reduce the 'Hawks lead. Behind the outside shooting of Tim James and Bobby Jahn Georgia Southern managed to stay into the game up until the end.

Mid-way through the final period the 'Hawks employed a half-court trap defense and the Eagles repeatedly turned the ball over, for a number of easy scores. Barry Taylor led the way with four steals, while Danny Davis added two. It was the 'Hawks defense that eventually enabled them to cruise on to the 82-67 final score.

On the evening, Garry Cooper played his high percentage game and hit 7-for-9 from the floor and scored 17 points. Barry

Taylor who also scored 17 added five assists and four steals. John Haskins followed with 16 points and three assists.

Cooper also broke his own single game rebounding record with 18. The old record set in November of 1973 against South Carolina State was 17. Shawn Williams who had 12 points also grabbed 14 rebounds. UNCW out-rebounded GSU by a 54-to-25 margin.

John Fowler led the Eagles with 12 points and eight rebounds, while teammates Bobby Jahn and Tim James added 10 apiece.

UNCW ended the 1979-80 season with a 19-10 record while Georgia Southern dropped to 5-22 on the year. This is the third straight year that the twenty game winning season has evaded Coach Gibson but the 'Hawks finished the season with a five game winning streak.

Even though the UNCW Basketball program will miss the performers of John Haskins, Barry Taylor and Garry Cooper the future still looks bright as the 'Hawks plan for next season. With Shawn Williams, Dennis Tobin, Danny Davis and Prudhoe twins the future has to look good.

Tarwheels and Hustlers delight crowd

by Harold Thompson

Last Saturday night about 700 people came to Trask Coliseum to watch the Charlotte Tarwheels take on the Hustlers of Raleigh. It was quite an event but the most important attraction of the game was the skill and knowledge that the players had of basketball. Each team dazzled the crowds with an assortment of plays that ranged from fast-breaks to outside shooting.

It was obvious from the outset that these teams possessed a tremendous amount of knowledge about basketball. The Hustlers opened the game with a number of scoring plays, mostly directed through their center. The Tarwheels, who fell be-

Swimmers finish third, sixth in Invitational

by Harold Thompson

In last weekend's Seahawk Invitational the UNCW Men's and Women's swim teams gave it a good effort but could finish no higher than third in the men's competition and sixth in the women's events.

A strong East Carolina team beat their next closest competitor by 233 points and swam away with the men's team title, while Virginia Tech captured the women's team title.

UNCW hosted the three day event in the Trask swimming complex and during the Invitational a number of pool records were set. "It was a tough and competitive meet and all our swimmers swam very well, even though our lack of diving did lose us some points," commented Dave Allen.

UNCW swam well indeed, against the regional competition and Sam O'Leary won two individual events in 200 butterfly and the 100 fly. The men's team as a whole amassed 332 points to finish in third place behind ECU's 566 points and William and Mary's 342.

The women finished in sixth place behind VTI, ECU, Old Dominion, W&M, and VCU.

The Invitational was a huge success and all the swimmers participating saw this event as a crucial stepping stone to the Eastern Regionals next month. Nine UNCW swimmers have qualified for the Easterns this season and five lady swimmers have qualified for the AIAW Division 11 Nationals. Both post-season meets are the highlights of their respective swimming seasons.

Freshman key in tennis opener

by Eddie Knox

UNCW's men's tennis team has begun spring practice and Coach Larry Honeycutt believes that his freshman are the key to a successful season.

Coach Honeycutt, who is in his ninth year at UNCW said, "The potential is there for us to be a very good tennis team and although we play a demanding schedule, I believe we'll be competitive if our freshman can continue to improve."

Included in that schedule are such traditional tennis powerhouses as Purdue, East Carolina, William & Mary, and Appalachian State.

The number one seed for UNCW this year is Paul Gemborys, a senior from

to as "a much improved player".

Other members of the squad are Ricky Watson, Charlie Ponton, Lance Thompson, John Shackelford, Joey Everidge, Lee Smith, Jerry Swanner, Phil Hinton, and Steve Cahill.

Although Gemborys is the lone Senior on this year's squad, Coach Honeycutt is enthusiastic towards the Seahawk's chances for a winning season.

"Our last three teams posted records of 14-6, 14-10, and 15-14. However, of the 29 matches last year, only 12 were lost. This year, 14 of our 29 matches will be played at home."

Two of these 14 home matches will be held during the Azalea Festival at the Azalea Classic. The Seahawks host the round robin tournament, with guest teams from UNC-Charlotte, Campbell College, and the College of Charleston on April 11 and 12.

UNCW opens the 1980 tennis season on Saturday, March 1, hosting a strong Appalachian State team at 2 p.m.

"This will be a very tough opening match for us because, although we've never played them, they have a strong tennis tradition," said Coach Honeycutt.

Interested individuals are encouraged to come out to our newly resurfaced tennis courts on that day and help the Seahawks break tradition.

and early in the contest rallied behind their superior outside shooting. They repeatedly set double picks to the wings to free a shooter. When they missed, the Hustlers cleared the rebound out to the middle and set up a 3-on-1 fastbreak. Their quickness proved to be the difference.

During half-time the UNCW's Men's Basketball team played an eight minute contest with the WHSL Radio team. In the end, UNCW won 6-4. Barry Taylor led the event with four. All of the participants were light hearted and a friendly atmosphere prevailed throughout the entire evening.

ough out the entire evening.

Lee Dages of the Tar-wheels informed the audience during half-time about wheelchair basketball and demonstrated a number of moves on his wheelchair. Unlike what many people might assume, the players in the Carolinas' league are athletes. They work at the game and are dedicated to the sport.

The Recreation Major's Club and the Athletic Department sponsored the event and it was a huge success and each person who attended felt not sorry for these individuals but proud of their accomplishments.

OPINION

The heroes of tomorrow

by Eddie Knox

The United States, coming off one of our finest Winter Olympics ever, owe much of our Lake Placid success to one individual and one team.

The individual is Eric Heiden. After capturing the Gold in the 500, 1000, 1500, 5000, and 10,000 meter races, there is no doubt, He is the best speed-skater in the world.

The build-up he received before the Olympics ever began put tremendous pressure on the young man, but a champion overcomes pressure. During the 1500 meter race, Heiden lost precious seconds when he slipped and almost fell to the ice, but a champion overcomes adversity, too.

Eric Heiden is a champion.

His performance, although unparalleled in Olympic history, didn't come as a complete surprise. The U.S. Hockey team, however, stunned the world with their gold medal. Before the Games began, no one gave America a chance to survive the opening round, much less giving them a shot at the gold. After an opening 2-2 tie with Sweden, however, the U.S. upset Czechoslovakia, 7-3. Three more victories followed, landing the youngsters in the medals round of four, along with the U.S.S.R., Sweden, and Finland.

One cannot say enough about Friday night's upset of the Soviet Union. Two weeks prior to the match, in an exhibition, the Soviets had destroyed America, 10-3, in Madison Square Garden. Then, during the opening round of the Olympics, they had trounced Japan 16-0 and Holland 17-4, among others. This was also the team that had beaten the NHL's best, and were regarded as veritable kings in the ice hockey world.

The young Americans, using a mixture of enthusiasm, skill, and intelligence, dethroned the kings. After trailing throughout the match, the U.S. fought back to tie at 3-3 in the third period. Late in the match, the final U.S. goal brought the Lake Placid crowd to its feet and sent the Soviet Union down to defeat for the first time in Olympic play since 1968.

Sunday's Gold medal victory over Finland was anti-climactic. Although the U.S. again trailed entering the third period, there was no way these young men would be denied the honor of being the world's best. Three goals in the waning minutes, all by the U.S.A. (Verchota, McClanahan, Johnson), sank Finland and gave America its first gold medal in ice hockey since 1960.

The herculean triumphs of Eric Heiden and the U.S. hockey team, aside from being two of the major sporting events of this decade, also brought about a feeling of warmth and togetherness on the part of Americans everywhere. It was evident in Lake Placid, where hockey fans poured forth emotion during the medals ceremony Sunday, and it's evident to all of us, as we review the action with our friends.

All in all, it's the stuff heroes are made of. Kids who witnessed Heiden's accomplishments are even now emulating his style on roller skates. Others are outside flipping a plastic puck against the wall with their hockey sticks, trying to become the next Eruzione or McClanahan. Who knows? Maybe one of these kids, with determination and practice, will be a hero in the 1992 Olympics.

Athlete of the week

John Haskins and Barry Taylor

Sports Editor

For the first time this year the Athlete of the Week has been won by two UNCW performers, John Haskins and Barry Taylor. Both basketball players scored twelve points apiece in the Charleston Baptist win last week, and along with Senior Garry Cooper, retired from collegiate hardwood action in last Monday night's win over Georgia Southern. In that contest Taylor scored 17 points and Haskins 16.

The twosome spearheaded the Seahawk offense this season at the guard positions. Between the two they have produced about one-third of the offense this season, and their leadership value is intangible. Both athletes have been an asset to the UNCW Basketball program and will be sorely missed.

Both were honored before the Georgia Southern game and their families introduced. Each was greeted with a standing ovation.

Barry Taylor is a Recreation Major and Haskins is a Physical Education Major.

Sky diving; different world only 15 minutes away

by Maggie Madden

Scuba divers do it deeper, but skydivers do it higher.

This attitude is typical at many drop zones including Rocky Point. Skydiving is becoming more popular with UNCW students as well as other people around the country.

Many people don't realize there is a different world just 15 minutes from Wilmington. It's the world of the thrillseekers, the daredevils, the skydivers.

Here people throw themselves out of a plane and dive toward the earth at 180 mph.

According to Steve Cone, a former UNCW student, "It's always a thrill, you can't get tired of it because every jump is a new experience. Also the constant progression is exciting, starting on a static line and working toward freefall, then relative work (contact in the air) - it's endless."

Asked how he felt after his first jump, Cone said, "There is no way to explain it. There is just a grin on your face the rest of the day." Mike Cunningham, instructor and pilot, explains the steps in preparing a jumper. "A student goes through 4-6 hours of training which includes PLF's (parachute landing falls), stability in the air and safety and emergency procedures. After that you can jump the same day if you're ready."

"The first five jumps are static line, which means that the chute is opened automatically. After that, it's freefall."

Tommy Shepard, 23, explains the most exciting experience he's had in his 50 jumps. "It was the first time I saw another jumper looking me in the eye at 5,000 feet...It was my seventeenth jump and beginning of relative work."

Tommy is an instructor at Cape Fear Technical Institute. "Skydiving attracts all kinds of people from lawyers to students. It's the excitement completely unique to the sport which attracts most people."

When asked how often he jumps, Shepard said, "Whenever the plane goes up; (Wed., Fri., Sat., and Sun.), depending on the weather."

Mitch Covington, presently a student at UNCW, was asked his first thought after jumping out of a plane at 3,000 feet. "My first thought was I have to do it again. It was a sensation I've never experienced before."

Asked what attracted him to skydiving, Covington said, "I wanted to fly."

The atmosphere experienced at the Rocky Point dropzone is relaxed and at the same time exciting. Most jumpers are either re-packing their chutes, jumping or impatiently waiting to jump again.

Doug Christen, a member of the U.S. Parachute Team, tells of his average jumping day. "I might get in six jumps in eight hours. I've been told that one 60-second freefall is equivalent to the physical and mental stress of an 8-hour work day. So you can imagine what several in a day feel like."

Christen, a 28-year old fireman, has been jumping for nine years and has recorded more than 2,600 jumps.

What about the danger involved? Because of it's daredevil image, many people shy away from skydiving, but most jumpers consider that a bad image.

According to Christen, the chance of a malfunction is very slight and the percentage of deaths is very low. There are something like four million jumps made each year and usually less than fifty deaths. Very few of those are because of equipment failures, and mainly due to human error.

"Considering the euphoria experienced, the little risk that exists is worth it," John Giezentanner, a student at UNCW said. "People break arms falling off their front porches everyday and never experience the feeling of freefall."

Hamp Hardison, a football player at UNCW, is addicted to skydiving. Most every weekend he's saying, "When's the next lift?"

This is the general attitude of the jumpers at Rocky Point dropzone and with good reason. To find out why, COME FLY WITH US. Spectators are more than welcome and even encouraged.

James Burke presents Senior Recital

James Burke, composer, will present a Senior Recital in Kenan Auditorium on Sunday March 2 at 8 p.m. Mr. Burke is a former student of Dr. Frank Wiley and is currently studying under Dr. David Kechley. The program will include Sonatas for Violin and Piano, 1978, performed by Mr. Michael Smith and Dr. Sherrill Martin; Concerto for Piano and String Orchestra, featuring Dr. Richard Deas as soloist with Dr. Kechley conducting; Intonazione, performed by Mr. Ivey James, pianist; Kyrie from Mass for Chorus and Mixed Instruments, performed by the UNCW Concert Choir in conjunction with the University New Music Ensemble, conducted by Dr. Joe Hickman. Linda Ronstadt mixes New Wave with rock 'n' roll

Record Review

By David Carter

Linda Ronstadt first rose to national prominence as a member of the west coast band, The Stone Poneys, who scored with a hit entitled "Different Drum" in late 1967. After several less-than-well received solo albums, Ronstadt finally resurfaced in 1974 with her very successful HEART LIKE A WHEEL album. With the demise of Grace Slick and the Jefferson Airplane, rock searched for a new first lady, and with Carly Simon having babies and Joni Mitchell fading off into mediocrity, Ronstadt inherited the job. Indeed in the last six years no other female artist has so dominated the rock field as Ronstadt has. Not only has she been successful, but she's proved to be versatile by running the gamut from country to rock and to finally, New Wave.

With her new album, MAD LOVE, Ronstadt mixes New Wave with rock 'n' roll with good results. In an attempt to establish herself apart from the laid back L.A. atmosphere that one usually associates with the likes of The Eagles, J.D.

Souther, and Jackson Browne, Ronstadt has made some changes in her band that result in a much more gutsier sound than she's ever had before. Gone are guitarist Waddy Watchel, bassist Kenny Edwards, keyboardist Don Grolnick, and drummer Rick Marotta. The new bands' personnel includes guitarist Dan Dugmore and Mark Goldenberg, with the latter doubling as lead guitarists for the Cretones, an L.A. based New Wave band. Also counted are session drummer Russ Kunkel, former Dave Mason bassist Bob Glaub, and former Little Feat keyboardist Bill Payne.

Side one begins with the first of three Mark Goldenberg contributions, "Mad Love," the title track. Ronstadt proves to be in good voice as a swirling organ and power chords pace this rocker. Elvis Costello's "Party Girl" follows and Ronstadt delicately caresses the lyrics as only she can. The single release "How Do I Make You" is next and is a perfect example of Ronstadt's melding rock and New Wave with outstanding results. "I Can't Let Go" is next up. Originally done by The Hollies, it receives no variation on the arrangement, but is nicely done nevertheless. Little Anthony and The Imperials' "Hurt So Bad" rounds out the side and is a welcome inclusion, as this mid-sixties classic is a natural vehicle for Ronstadt's considerable talents. The infamous Danny Kortchmar guests here and lends a guitar solo to the proceedings.

Neil Young's "Look Out For My Love" opens the second side, and is consequently the only song on the album that has any country feel to it at all. Goldenberg's "Cost of Love" is next and cannot be termed as anything but rock 'n' roll laced with New Wave. "Justine" is the final Goldenberg composition covered and it's a snuttin', powerful song with strong Ronstadt vocals. Bill Payne sounds good here, and this song features old friends Andrew Gold and Kenny Edwards as backing vocalists. The final two songs, "Girls Talk" and "Talking in the Dark," were written by Elvis Costello. "Girls Talk," recently popularized by Dave Edmunds, is performed superbly here as it's the best song on the album. The album concludes with "Talking in the Dark," a good rock song that Costello himself has never released in this country.

Expertly produced by long time associate Peter Asher, MAD LOVE will undoubtedly alienate those who prefer Ronstadt's country side, but new fans will be made. Although Mad Love is only a scant thirty-one minutes and nine seconds long, it's very definitely a worthwhile investment as it's easily the best thing Ronstadt's done in a long time. Her revised band rescues her from the stagnate doldrums that she was beginning to drift into. Ronstadt is to be applauded and respected for taking an unnecessary risk by tampering with an accomplished formula. Instead of resting on her laurels and continuing to release albums that were not reflective of her musical preferences, Ronstadt has produced a work that is not guaranteed to sell two or three million copies. Next to the United States Hockey team, this is the best happening of the year.

Safety standards up at UNCW

by Dianna LeBoo

When Alfred Barry came to UNCW as campus Safety Officer in Oct. of 1974 he found many safety hazards.

In various buildings there were no handrailings in the stair wells, and the handrailings that were in use were poorly mounted. The thread used on stair steps wore out quickly and frequently had to be replaced, especially the cafeteria steps since it had more traffic than the others. 50 percent of the fire extinguishers on campus were of the wrong type and since then have been replaced with types; A,B,C (wood, oil and electrical). The maintenance Department did not have safety shoes, glasses, gloves, etc.

Since this time Barry has been instrumental in bringing UNCW up to the standards set by the Occupational Safety and Health Act of N.C., also referred to by the abbreviations, "OSHA."

"OSHA" was established on May 1st 1973 by the General Assembly of N.C. It was manned by administrative institutions capable of implementing action to provide safe working conditions for the populous.

Barry has been involved in many projects at UNCW including; re-designing access routes in buildings attics and putting lighting and electrical plugs in those areas. He has secured all handrailings with stronger mountings and put handrailings in the Chemistry-Physics Building (because of the width of the stairs). All types of safety clothing and equipment has been purchased for the Maintenance Dept. personnel.

Barry has also made things easier for the handicapped students at UNCW. There have been 4 ramps built outside of various buildings on campus, and restrooms have been modified for the handicapped. Reserved handicapped parking spaces were allotted and designated with signs.

Barry said, In 1974 at the university system level each college or university was designated its own safety representative to record accidents, allot personal protection equipment, and oversee that the health and safety of each individual is given due consideration."

All campus clubs and organizations are requested to stop by the SGA office and submit a phone number that they can be reached by and also a list of current officers.

UMOC is finally here

This year the Upsilon Nu chapter of Alpha Phi Omega is planning a unique way of raising money for a national charity--Easter Seals. We are following in the tradition of many colleges and universities across the USA by sponsoring an UGLY MAN ON CAMPUS (UMOC) contest. This fund raiser is slated for March 4, 5, and 6, 1980. We would like your group or organization to nominate a candidate (or candidates) to run. The candidate would need to dress up (or down!) so that he or she is "ugly." Votes for the nominees are cast by placing pennies, nickels, or dimes in containers in front of photographs of each candidate. The winner is determined by the highest number of 1 cent votes.

The contest is all done in fun and the UGLY MAN will be awarded a special key on a velvet ribbon. If you or your group is interested in UMOC, nominations will be accepted until March 3 at noon in the Student Activities Office in the Pub. Candidates will need to submit a photo and, if possible, be present at the voting on March 4-5 between 11:30 a.m. and 1:30 p.m. and on March 6 between 11:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m. in front of the cafeteria.

We'd appreciate your help in our endeavor to raise money for Easter Seals. START SAVING YOUR PEENIES NOW!

how much we've been brainwashed. Such sources are clean anti-inflationary and job creating, and will ultimately offer small communities and individual homeowners true energy independence-emanation from corporate control.

Looking at the other side of the issue there are quite a few students who are very much anti-nuke and here is an explanation why. The health of the human race and each of us individually is inseparable from that of the planet. And no single industry threatens our survival, or the quality of our lives, with such brutal finality as atomic power.

On the other hand, we know that all our energy needs can be met through a concerted program of increased energy efficiency, and with the rapid development of energy technologies based on the natural power of the sun.

And finally in response to Tony Foley's comment about how more people have been killed in Ted Kennedy's car than by nuclear energy. The worst accident of all occurred at a nuclear facility in the Soviet Union, where an explosion contaminated a huge land area, killing hundreds of people and rendering much of the region uninhabitable. Touching back here at home. In 1961 3 men died at the SL-1 test reactor near Idaho falls. Apparently a crewman lifted the main control rod a little too far, a little too fast, allowing the core to run wild in less than 1/500 of a second. The explosion released enormous amounts of radiation, and impaled a crewman to the ceiling of the plant with part of a control rod, which passed through his groin and out one of his shoulders. The heads and hands of the dead workers had to be buried along with high level of radioactive wastes for fear of contaminating civilian cemeteries.

For all these reasons and more, there is a fraction of us devoting our own energy toward the day when not one more cent is spent on nuclear power except to decommission those plants already built and to dispose of those wastes already created. At the same time, we are asking that all future energy efforts be directed toward a democratically controlled energy supply based entirely on renewable resources.

Each of us, in our own individual way, can do something to halt the spread of this radioactive plague. We must stop nuclear power and move into the solar age. A few of us feel privileged for this opportunity to help make the transition happen, and we would like for everyone to join us.

NO NUKES* EVERYBODY!

unimpressed. When I boast about an accomplishment, he comes up with his favorite comment, "Well, you're still just an undergraduate to me." Clearly, he no longer considers me an expert.

Believe me, it took a lot of courage to walk into my first college class-English 101. The students were young enough to be my children; the silence was overpowering. I had never been more uncomfortable.

In the final analysis, an expert is a wise person who is highly informed and has learned from life that there are many truths; a complete picture is never seen; no one is ever in possession of all facts. The once and future expert realizes that the more one learns, the less sure one is. Knowledge breeds tentativeness.

out of Moscow. "I think moving it is the best," he says. "Get out of that country."

A student who wishes not to be identified believes the Americans should support Carter's intention to boycott the Summer Olympics. "I think we should stick with the President and all his decisions," the student states. "There are times when we can come back on his decision but this time the U.S. should be unified."

The student says that the athletes have the right to protest Carter's decision. "There's nothing wrong with disagreeing. You may not agree with what someone above you says but you have to go along with their decisions."

The boycott will show the world that this country is unified, the student feels. "It will show that once a decision has been made by the President, the rest of the country is willing to go with his decision."

Derrick Anderson, a graduate student, opposes the boycott. "How are you going to support it?" he asks. "People have been working as many as eight years for those one or two weeks in their lives. I think to boycott the Olympics would not only deny the athletes but it would deny this nation a chance to be in a competitive atmosphere. You can show much better unity by competing than by abstaining from the Olympics."

A boycott will not be very effective, Derrick thinks. "It won't accomplish anything that a good, strong statement would have accomplished," he contends. "This country's athletes should not be denied the chance to engage in competitive athletes."

Instead of being out of the Olympics completely, the U.S. should try to get the Games moved to another location, he feels.

"The lesser of evils, I guess, is to move. Don't postpone them. This country still has the best athletes. Let them do something. Just don't let them train all this time and not exercise their abilities," he says.

Derrick believes that the U.S. will get the support it needs from other nations.

"But you've got to look at who those governments are," he states. "A lot of them are dependent upon the U.S. for economic aid, so they're not going to bite the hand that feeds them."

Snow brings UNCW students an extended vacation

by Wendy Robbins

We all know that it's not nice to fool Mother Nature, but this time Mother Nature fooled us. On Sunday, March 2, Wilmington, and the rest of the State, woke up to find itself powdered by a thick carpet of snow. Officially, this city received 7 inches of snow. It wasn't the biggest snowfall in Wilmington's history, but even 1 inch of snow in this part of North Carolina is a rare occurrence.

Businesses, public schools, colleges and universities all across the state were forced to take an unexpected holiday. Ironically, the winter snowstorm extended spring break for UNCW students.

Here at UNCW, opinions on the snow ran from one extreme to another. The students that were interviewed either really loved it or really disliked it.

Alvin Davis, a senior, didn't "think too much" of it. "I didn't like it," he says. "I liked it at first but then it got to be a problem. I was stranded at my father's store. It was three days before I got home."

The best thing about the snow was that it "gave the kids something to do," he states. "They enjoyed it, but it was paralyzing. If you had an emergency, if one of the kids got hurt, you wouldn't have been able to get to the hospital."

Penny Wright, a senior, says she "loved" the snow. "I'm from New Jersey. I really miss the snow," she explains. "But I did get stranded. I couldn't get to work. I had to walk. My car wasn't going anywhere. People with four wheel drives didn't have any trouble."

The best thing about the snow is that it was "so unusual" for it to be in this area, she feels. "Everybody seemed to enjoy it," she says. "Everyone was out playing in it. They seemed to enjoy the break. There was nothing bad about it to me. I enjoyed it a lot."

"I disliked it," says Emery Ashley, a freshman. "I just like the warm weather." This was the biggest snowstorm he has ever seen. He says the best thing about it was the "snowball fights" and the worst thing was "being cold."

Candidates to speak March 24

On March 24 at 7:30 p.m. in the Pub, there will be a meeting, at which all candidates for the Spring elections will attend. A panel of questioners will be on hand to ask the potential presidents of the SGA questions that will pertain to their platforms, ideas, and proposals for the school year 1980-81. After the panel has completed their part in the forum, the public will be invited to ask their own questions. Come join us for this night. It may help you make a decision! There will be two units of refreshments served. So don't miss this grand opportunity! And remember, VOTE on March 26 and 27.

New University Center to open at UNCW in 1981

by Joyce Stevens

Students at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington can soon look forward to a new University Center.

The necessity of a new student union has been evident for quite some time. According to Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs, Dr. William M. Malloy, "The present structure was designed to meet the needs of approximately 650 students. There are now 4300 students enrolled at UNCW."

"The personnel, commitment and finances necessary to seriously plan such a project have only been available in the last year and a half," stated Linda Moore, director of student union/activities.

The new University Center is nearing the final drawing stages, and the fine details must now be worked out before construction begins this summer. The ground has already been tested for supporting the Center.

The University Center will be located on the eastern section of campus on Street F near the Bluethenthal Wildflower Reserve. In the coming years, this area is anticipated to be the "hub" of campus life as more of that section is developed.

The new University Center will cover approximately 50,000 square feet with many advantages over the present student union. It will be a two-story structure with a one-story wing extending towards the Wildflower Reserve. The wing, or "Phase 11," will be the food-service dining facility. The snack bar in the cafeteria will move to the University Center and full course meals will be expanded to both floors of the cafeteria.

The bookstore will become strictly a bookstore when the University Center opens. A student store will supply students with notebooks, T-shirts, and other materials presently being sold in the bookstore.

Automated teller machines representing at least two banks will be installed for student convenience.

Also, a post office will be located in the new Center with mailboxes for all students attending the University. A separate zip code will be assigned to this post office to expedite the mail service.

The multi-purpose area will be slightly larger than the area in the Pub. The new lounge area with a fireplace at each end will be around 250 sq. ft.

larger than the present area in the Pub. The multi-purpose area is located adjacent to the courtyard, which will provide for the overflow of students at a large social gathering.

A gameroom and billiards room will be included.

An information desk will be at the University Center. Students may call or come by to locate other students or inquire about upcoming union activities.

The second floor of the building will have one large meeting room, two medium, and two small cont. on p.13

EDITORIAL

Well, it seems to be that time of year again when promises are made and candidates kiss babies in order to obtain the badly needed majority of votes required for them to enter office for the next school year.

This year's SGA election promises to be a truly exciting one. As of this writing, many concerned students have thrown their hats in the ring, hoping to see their "issues" and "policies" implemented in the next administration. This year marks the first time in recent UNCW history that there have been actual issues at stake, to the point where the various candidates have a virtual platform for office. This new trend is exciting as well as refreshing in that it shows a general reversal in the apathy that has plagued college campuses within the past ten years. Instead of a couple of candidates running for office on the basis of personal popularity or how many dorm rooms they can visit, hard issues are at stake, ranging from monetary policies to a walkway being built over College Road.

One tremendous problem facing this year's election is the way in which the election is being handled. The Chairman of the Board of Elections has set the following dates for those interested in running for office: Registration; March 17-21, and elections; March 26, 27 and 28, with special run-offs at the beginning of April. This is all well and good in the fact that it gets the whole election process completed within a two week period. What is bad about these dates is the fact that:

1. There will be a candidates' Forum on March 24, two days after the cut off date of registration for office, and 2. The election will be the following week, which hardly gives enough time for "late comers" to campaign, much less prepare for the forum.

Traditionally, the SEAHAWK has endorsed candidates for various offices, but this will not be the case this year. The majority of the SEAHAWK staff feels that it is not responsible journalism to conduct partisan politics in behalf of the candidates. What we do feel though, is that each candidate, as practiced in the past, should have the chance to run a short platform narrative in the paper, showing their views on various issues, so that the student, in reading the Seahawk, might have the chance to make a responsible decision on which candidate he wishes to support. Here again, we are being penalized by the dates set forth by the Board of Elections.

Some concerned individuals have approached me in regard to the election, and together we came up with what seemed to be a viable alternative to the problem. I approached the chairman with the proposal that, because of the time lost by the recent snowfall and the fact that the dates set for the registration, forum, and election were entirely too close together, that she postpone the whole schedule for at least one week. This would give the candidates more time to prepare for the forum, the various mediums on campus more time to adequately cover the forum and the election, and most importantly, give the students a chance to make a responsible decision on the type of leadership that they can expect for the upcoming year. Regretfully, our efforts were in vain. Ms. Wells, along with President Fail, arbitrarily decided that the elections would be held as scheduled - the only revisions being that the forum would be on Monday the 24th, and the elections themselves, be extended one day to include Friday, the 28th, as previously mentioned.

I feel that I speak for the majority of students on this campus, as well as representatives from the various campus mediums, in saying that a definite injustice has occurred. Avenues were open to the chairman to remedy the situation, but she has refused to act.

With attitudes such as these, there is little wonder that so many students feel alienated from the SGA. With some luck, the Board of Elections can anticipate a big 8 percent turnout at the polls, which would be 3 percent less than the last election. Hopefully, if the students of UNCW do decide to exercise their right to vote, this sad situation can possibly be alleviated in the next administration, and the future elections will be handled more responsibly.

LETTERS

To the Editor:

As an amused observer of UNCW Student Government politics, I could not let this little gem pass by:

Several weeks ago, two gentlemen officially announced their candidacy for executive offices in student government; Treasurer Jesse Sanders for President and Senator Mike Stroud for Vice President. Their reasons for announcing this early were obvious. They wished to get a head start in their efforts to gain broad-based support and to build the strength of their respective organizations, of which to no one's surprise, they have done successfully. This political move soon proved to be worthwhile, for one week later Pete Johnson announced his candidacy for the Presidency. Johnson has since built a strong organization.

So far, these have been the only people to announce their candidacy. This is surprising because the elections are being held next week!

I recently asked Mike Stroud how he felt about running unopposed for V.P. He stated that in actuality he wasn't running unopposed. According to Stroud there will be two or three others who will file for this office during the filing period the week before the election. When asked why the others waited so late to announce their intentions, he offered the following explanation. There are basically three types of people who run for an SGA executive office. First there are those who really believe that they have something to offer to students and to student government. Secondly, there are those who have been in student government long enough to feel as if they are "owed" some type of "honorary" position such as an executive office. Finally there are those who run "for the hell of it" with no real thought of winning. In any case, the only ones who are willing to speak on the issues that effect the students are those candidates in the first category. The others usually wish to avoid any type of serious campaigning and tend to shy away from confrontations with other candidates. This is mainly because they have no views and are usually ignorant of the issues.

When asked about the state of the elections, Attorney General Pete Johnson stated his dismay that the students have not been given ample opportunity to scrutinize the various campaigns and platforms. "Furthermore," Johnson stated, "not allowing the students to make a well-informed decision is indeed an infringement on their rights as student voters."

Treasurer Jesse Sanders said to a group of

Morris feels UNCW needs adequate reading room

I sat for two hours on the wooden chair leaning over a book. My back aching I looked up for the thousandth time at the hazy glare of the white library lights. They made me drowsy, as did a droning hum, and my book fell closed upon the table. It startled me and I realized I would never finish another chapter. If I wasn't nodding and straining to stay awake, I was being distracted. File drawers banged and clanged. Squirmy people were constantly getting up and sitting back down, moving here and there, talking in penetrating whispers. They were as uncomfortable as I was. I decided then that the library isn't enough. We need a cozy reading room at UNCW.

The room I imagine is full of curved lines and rich colors. Paintings hang on the walls and plants grow by the windows. The windows are large, letting in a lot of sun. Goldfish swim in bowls on the room-keeper's desk and she makes sure that coffee and tea are plentiful. The atmosphere is soothing, not tiring. Chairs worn to the sink-into-em-able stage seem to invite readers to sit in them. They are accented by adjustable lamps and heavy wooden tables. Footstools are scattered about, too, but readers can put their feet on the chairs if they'd rather—shoes off, of course. It is a homey place. Reader's are content here and any distractions could hardly be called that at all; rather, pleasant diversions to rest the eyes. Comfort is foremost here.

The idea of this reading room is based on more than comfort, though. It is based on Oswald Ottendorfer's realization that people need fine impressions to evolve as human beings. He knew that books are a great source of these as are the right environments. And in New York City he put the two together in his library, The Ottendorfer (The New Yorker, Oct. 1, 1979). Our reading room, too, could combine fine impressions, books and comfort to create an ideal environment.

In this environment, a reader could look up from some thought provoking passage and any object around him would serve as a candle on which to meditate. An ornate carpet might enhance the reader's sensations or at least encourage him to ponder these. A bare wall, on the other hand stifles thought. In a bare-walled, stiff room words seem to march from the page. But in a soft room words flow and all the fine impressions, from the book and from the room, mingle. The mingle and the reader is doubly enriched. His senses, which I believe are on the alert even as he reads, are stimulated. And so, not only could a reader sit comfortably and read for a long time in a good environment, but he would enjoy reading more. And he would get more out of what he reads.

As idealistic as this reading room sounds, it would not be impossible to create. A committee of UNCW students dedicated to its development could scheme and plan and raise money for the project. With a frugal and enterprising group, costs would be kept low. Nothing newly bought would even be necessary—or desirable. Old, worn and comfortable would be the criteria for anything going in this room. Finding a location would be the hardest part of the task. But surely there is a room on campus which could be set aside as a reading room. Students are constantly using the UNCW writing center—which does have some comfortable chairs—as a place to read. So, there is a need for a more appropriate location and setting for readers specifically.

After the completion of the room, the constitution would be written. It would include the uses of the room and a certain code of conduct for the readers. I think respect would be an important part of this code, respect and consideration for others. And only those who had this respect could use the room; it would be an exclusive privilege. A membership of the room could be established, to insure the seriousness of its users. The reading room would be a quiet place, suitable to readers and yet, bubbling with good vibrations. I think I could feel the warmth flowing through a room like this, and see the fine impressions painting subtle smiles on the faces of the readers.

senators recently that one of the reasons that he and senator Stroud opted to announce early was so that they may have the opportunity to confront their opponents and speak on the issues. This would allow voters to compare and contrast their platforms, ideas, and the candidates themselves. (This seems to be true because Sanders, Stroud and Johnson never pass up the chance to say something about anything, and are, without a doubt, better at it than anyone else.)

I applaud Mr. Sanders, Mr. Stroud, and Mr. Johnson for giving us, the students, the opportunity and the time to listen to their views and make a responsible choice. It is a shame that their soon-to-be opponents did not do the same.

Sincerely,
David Schmidt

To the Editor:

I note with interest that another Student Government Association election is drawing near. Two individuals have already announced their candidacy for President of the SGA, others maybe on the way. And yet, although this is the fourth year that I have attended UNCW, I have never seen an election for President that was based on student concerns or on the actual issues of student Government. Campaigns for president (and, to and even greater extent, for other SGA officials) are little more than popularity contests. Campaign strategies to date have been on the order of who can put up more, better or larger posters; or which candidate can meet more people in the dorms. This, to me, is not what campaigns should be based upon. "Pressing the flesh" and baby-kissing is fine, but it leaves a little to be desired when one is trying to make a logical choice for candidates. Therefore, I ask each of the candidates to state, in the Seahawk, what they feel to be important issues and concerns of students, and how they stand on these issues. I challenge Pete Johnson and Jesse Sanders to state in writing what they wish to accomplish as President, what they feel are important concerns of students, and how they plan to attend to those concerns.

I feel that it is high time to hear what the candidates think is important in student Government. Perhaps then this election will be based upon something besides name recognition.

This, then is my challenge. I ask the candidates not to assume that I will vote for them because I recognise their pretty faces.

I remain

Jon Fail, President
Student Government Assn.

President's report

Fail speaks on upcoming elections

I hope everyone has enjoyed the "extended" spring break. I have. There is some more good news about the cancelled week of school: Dr. Malloy, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, has told me that we do not have to make up the time!

Many of the projects started last year will not be finished without more student help. Some of these projects will save all students some money, and other projects will help students in dealing with the SGA and the University. Also, working on any of these projects could help a student directly, as there is some compensation involved.

Elections for Student Government will be in one week, on the 26th and 27th of March. Volunteers to man the voting booths are needed. If you can spare just an hour or two on either day, please come by the SGA office and let us know. If you are planning to run for an office, the filing deadline is 5 p.m. on the 21st of March. Filing forms are in the SGA office, upstairs in the Pub. Office hours are 8 to 5, Monday thru Friday.

Student Government is exactly what it says: STUDENT government. This means it takes students to make it work, from voting for someone to being the person who everyone is voting for. Take time out next week to at least vote. With student voter turnout as low as it is, your vote actually does count. And if you are going to vote, take two friends with you.

In the next issue of the Seahawk, I will review the past year, and point out areas in which the SGA has had successes and failures and some possible courses of action to correct failures.

Pi Sigma Alpha inducts students and faculty

Ten students and three faculty members will be inducted into the National Political Science Honor Society March 21.

According to Dr. James Dixon the installation of the UNCW chapter of Pi Sigma Alpha will be held at the Terrace Inn.

The guest speaker will be Dr. Richard Richardson, the Chairman of the Political Science Department at UNC-Chapel Hill.

Pi Sigma Alpha was founded at the University of Texas in 1920. There are 202 chapters among the leading Collegiate institutions in the country. Since its founding there have been 60 thousand members.

Pi Sigma Alpha is a member of the Association of collegiate Honor Societies.

Board of Trustees announces faculty scholarship

In the autumn of 1977, the Board of Trustees for the University of North Carolina at Wilmington established the Board of Trustees Teaching Excellence Award. The award is designed to underline the institution's commitment to teaching excellence. Recipients of the award should manifest excellence as a way of life and should stand out among the faculty as persons who have made and continue to make a significant contribution to the university through their dedication and service to students. ELIGIBILITY: Any person who is currently a member of the UNCW teaching faculty and who teaches at least a half-time load may be nominated for the award. SOURCE OF NOMINATION: Any faculty member, currently enrolled student, or member of the alumni may submit nominations.

Students are particularly encouraged to take an active role in submitting nominations. In order to do so, a student should write a letter of nomination, indicating as thoroughly as possible how the nominee satisfies the following criteria:

1. Exhibits genuine interest in each student's intellectual and creative development.
2. Exhibits knowledge of and enthusiasm for the subject taught.

3. Maintains high academic standards.

4. Fosters the intellectual development and competence of students.

5. Exhibits personally and fosters in students both respect for other viewpoints and an openness to new ideas.

Letters of nomination must be signed by the student and submitted to the Office of the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, Room A-109, no later than 5:00 p.m., Thursday, April 3, 1980.

Chancellor William H. Wagoner will designate a special AD HOC committee to assist him in selecting a recipient for the award.

All students, faculty, and staff are invited to attend, free of charge, UNCW's 1980 Jessie Rehder Short Story Contest's awards presentation. Cash prizes will be given Tuesday, March 25 at 11:30 AM in Kenan Hall, room 121.

$50.00 will be awarded to the first place winner, $30.00 for second place, and $20.00 for third.

This year's contest judges are Bill Atwill, Lecturer in the English department, William Woodhouse, Assistant Professor of Spanish, and Linda Farrell, a New Hanover High School English teacher.

Doug Swink will read the winning story and refreshments will be provided by the N.C. Junior Sorosis Club.

Detention facility needs volunteers

A short-term detention facility, which provides an evaluation and other services to juvenile offenders before disposition of their case, has several openings for volunteers. These openings include: 1. Administering tests (achievement, I.Q., personality, etc.) to youth, and taking social histories from youth and family for use by professionals in advising juvenile court judge. 2. Assisting individual youth or small group with school work (tutoring), crafts and recreation programs. 3. Assisting school teacher in classroom.

FOR THOSE WITH A

GOOD AIM--Volunteers are needed to instruct small groups of 4-H members in either archery or photography, or similar activities, which may lead to contests and competition. Program time is year around.

Small groups of volunteers who enjoy giving parties to brighten this Easter season. Only a small amount of time required!

For more information on these and other volunteer openings, see Linda Moore, Student Activities, room 104 in the Pub or call the Voluntary Action Center 762-9611.

"Seaside Jam" offers full day of music and fun

by Wendy Robbins

Chapel Hill has its "Springfest," N.C. State has its "Zoo Day" and now UNCW has a "Seaside Jam." The University Program Board, in conjunction with the Save the Whales Foundation, will present a benefit concert from noon until dark April 26 on Brooks Field. "It will be a full day of music and festivities," says Steve Chiappisi, chairman of the UPB. "We are expecting from 3,000 to 4,000 people to attend."

"It's a big dream we've had for a year now," states Linda Gentry, the UPB's Coffeehouse Chairman. "The closer it gets the more we realize what a celebration it's going to be. The students will make it successful."

The intent of the "Seaside Jam" is to raise money for the Whale Foundation. Admission for UNCW students will be $1.09. There will be a requested donation of .91 cents, which will go toward the whale benefit. Students will be free to decide whether or not they want to donate money for the whales. Those who don't want to will pay just the $1.09 admission charge. Tickets for community residents will be $4.00.

The UPB is starting a campaign to get additional assistance. All students, campus organizations and clubs are welcome to participate. "It won't be totally hard work, it will be fun work," says Mark Davis, chairman of the UPB's Dance Committee. Clubs and organizations will set up booths on the perimeter of the field. Each booth can be as creative and bizarre as a club wants, just so it is not "imoral, indecent, or illegal," Davis explains.

To help raise more money for the Whale Foundation, there will also be an aluminum can drive on the day of the concert. "We are not allowed to serve alcohol," says Chiappisi. But students can bring their own refreshments in aluminum cans. The cans will be discarded in two dumpsters that will be in the middle of the field.

There will be a 100ft. balloon of a sperm whale flying over the stage where the musicians will be performing. According to Chiappisi, there will also be "surprises dropped from the sky."

Steve Chiappisi, Mark Davis, and Linda Gentry are the UPB members who are co-producing the benefit. But "the idea of the Jam originally stemmed from Mark Davis," says Chiappisi.

When Mark Davis first came to UNCW, he says he "noticed a lack of student activities." He has been to many outdoor events on other campuses, so he has seen first-hand what they are like. "Here we are at UNC by the sea and have such beautiful weather and we've got those 14 acres (Brooks Field)," he states. "A lot of other outdoor events have been on fields smaller than that. I saw a need for getting new ideas for student activities, so I made up a formal proposal last year and approached the Administration and the present-day University Program Board for this idea."

Davis hopes the UPB will get a lot of support from around campus. "We want to get as many people and campus organizations as possible. We've got ideas—if we could get together with them I'm sure we'd come up with something for them to do."

The "Seaside Jam" project was originally thought of two years ago, says Davis, and attempts were made to have a benefit last year. "I wanted to have it last year," he explains. "I guess I basically started on the project too late. As the year progressed, funds ran low. We just didn't have the full organization we needed. I'm glad I started two years ago. It has taken that long to get the idea planted. It's been a well researched event. It was originally called 'The Spring Fever Hoedown.' I thought it would benefit UNCW as a whole."

Davis gives WLOZ the credit for thinking of the idea to have a benefit. "WLOZ, for the past two years, has also been trying to put together an outdoor concert," he says. "They brought up the subject of possibly having a benefit. Since this is a marine science oriented school—and it's UNC by the sea—we saw no reason whatsoever why we couldn't turn the interest to the ocean. I have to give the credit to WLOZ for the idea to save the whales."

Six Flags needs 3500 people for jobs

Independence, a supportive atmosphere and a chance to make new friends are other reasons why a Six Flags job is popular with young people.

Six Flags sponsors softball games, trips to other parks, movie nights and other activities that expand the social benefits of employment at the park.

Application for employment may be made in person from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., Monday through Saturday, at the Six Flags Personnel Office, 1-20 and Six Flags Road.

Ringg...ringgg. "Good morning, Acme Employment Search, Inc.; may I help you?"

"Yes, I need 3,500 people, immediately. They have to be bright, personable, ooze charisma and have a lot of mom-and-apple-pie clean-scrubbed appeal. They also have to like the idea of dealing with three million strangers. Can you help me?"

What any employment agency seeking to fill this order would have is one large headache. Yet this demand, in a nutshell, is one the huge Six Flags Over Georgia theme park must meet each season.

From March to the end of November, it takes approximately 3,500 seasonal employees, termed "hosts and hostesses", to staff, run and supervise

Campus Minister Haywood bearded, outspoken and not blasé

by Julie Russ

UNCW has added an important element to its faculty roster in the person of Bob Haywood. Recently appointed as campus minister, Haywood has been a spiritual leader at various universities for fifteen years.

Bearded and out-spoken, Haywood does not adhere to the traditional "man of the cloth" stereotype. He describes himself as a non-typical minister, broad-minded, but not blasé. Married and the father of three children, he states, "My family is my hobby. My wife is my best friend, and our kids are neat people."

Haywood has been in Wilmington for almost a month, while his wife remains in his former homestate of Pennsylvania "finishing up her masters degree." He claims to enjoy the coastal and college ambience of Wilmington, remarking, "As much as I like water sports, it's a thrill to live on the coast."

Next to his family, outdoor activities are Haywood's favorite hobbies. He takes time out for backpacking, swimming, and sailing. He participated in a Colorado Outward-bound excursion and proudly reports having "lost thirty-six pounds!" Obviously, he appreciates challenge and thus is looking forward to his days ahead at UNCW.

"This university is my parish," he stated. "I want to meet as many people as possible. I don't ask people about their sins or get them to pray with me. I am a counselor. I want to help those who are interested in spiritual growth. I am not tradition-bound, and people are sometimes surprised by that."

Haywood reports being "raised in a Christian home was a good thing." He added that "the spiritual part of my life is very important to me—I'm not going to downplay that. But I do believe in being somewhat low-key...."

Anyone who wishes to contact him can reach him

"through Student Affairs. I receive Mail and other messages through Dr. Malloy's office." Or dial 799-1160 and ask for Bob.

Allen receives $500 scholarship from Thaliens

by Wendy Robbins

Participating in drama has paid off for Angela Allen—with a $500 scholarship. Angela, a sophomore at UNCW, received the scholarship from the Thalian Association, Wilmington's community theatre group. "When I found out I got it I was really shocked," she says, "because frankly I didn't think I would. There was so many fantastic people that applied for it. I'm very proud I got it. The Thaliens are good people."

The scholarships are given out on the basis of financial need, a major in drama or strong interest in theatre, a positive attitude toward university and community theatre, a willingness to work in theatre and a good academic standing.

According to Juanita Menick, the President of the Thalian Association, this is the first time the scholarship has been given out in several years. All of the applicants were carefully reviewed. "Each application was critiqued by the professors in the Drama Department," explains Mrs. Menick. "Then the Executive Board of the Thalian Association reviewed the applications. We also talked with the Financial Aid Department. We came up with Angela."

Angela has been attracted to drama for a long time. "I was in my first play when I was about eight," she states. "I really like acting. It's like jumping into another skin. I can be somebody else for a while."

When she first came to UNCW, Angela took a theatre appreciation course under Dr. Terry Theodore. "He was directing 'Our Town,'" she says. "I was one of the townspeople and later I got lucky enough to land one of the parts of the dead people."

Unlike many other performers, Angela isn't particularly bothered by stage fright. "As far as I'm concerned, stage fright is something you get before you get on stage," she contends. "Once I've stepped out on stage it goes away. It's mostly anticipation."

There is one instance, however, when Angela says she was a little scared to walk out on stage. It was on December 8 of last year, the night she publicly received her scholarship at a performance of "Scrooge." She says she was terrified. "I was sure that when I walked across the stage to get it I would fall down. I had the worst case of stage fright then because that was me, not some character I was playing," she states.

The key to making a convincing performance, Angela feels, is trying to understand the character

Dr. Terry Theodore, Angela Allen, Juanita Menick

being portrayed. "You have to try to make yourself the character, at least for the time being," she explains. "You have to be able to slip into a role. You have to understand how a person who is different from you could react to a situation. Plays were not meant to be read, they were meant to be acted. There's so much more than just the words on a script. You have to envision how the person would be as they say those words and do those things. And you can't act at the audience, you have to act for them. If you can do that you're all right."

Angela enjoys portraying characters that have opposite personalities from her own. "It's more fun to play somebody different from yourself. Especially if it's somebody you normally wouldn't act like, because it gives you an excuse to do something you wouldn't usually do and it's perfectly acceptable."

Comic and dramatic roles appeal to her at different times. "It depends on the mood I'm in," Angela says. "Drama takes something out of you to watch, whereas comedy just entertains. A comic role you can kind of pass off after a performance. A dramatic role tends to hang over you, stay with you."

In addition to acting, Angela has also worked with make-up crews. "The make-up is interesting," she says. "There's a little less tension there. When 'The Beautiful People' came up I thought I would do make-up instead of getting involved in the full-fledged production. I mostly did people's hands. Some of the characters had to appear older and part of that was to make up their hands. I did that every night. You paint over the veins faintly with blue paint to make them stand out. Then take brown and paint inside their fingers to accent the bone structure. You paint in the creases, too. Next, you have to powder the hands down so the make-up will stay on. It's amazing how long it can take you to do one hand. It took around 15 to 20 minutes for each hand."

Angela says she would like to see UNCW's Drama Department grow. "I'd like to see it get bigger and better. This is a nice campus," she states. "The campus itself stands to grow quite a bit and I hope the Drama Department will grow with it. We've got some good people in the Drama Department. Dr. Terry Theodore is a very dedicated man. You don't see many people that are so dedicated to what they're doing, that put so much of themselves into it."

She would also like to see more UNCW students take an interest in university and community theatre. "I encourage other students to go out for plays. You don't have to be a drama major. A lot of people are like me, they have a strong interest in it. It's a very rewarding

Johnson overcomes adversity and national competition to be named All-American - A UNCW first

by Harold Thompson

She's shy, she's quiet, she's All-American.

Last week Janet Johnson was your average college freshman, coping with being away from home, adapting to a new environment, and trying to palate the cafeteria's food. This week she is still doing those things except now, she is an All-American.

"I'm still in a daze, but now I'm relieved and very happy," said Johnson; still not able to believe that she finished second in the 50 yard breaststroke, sixth in the 100 breaststroke, tenth in the 200 breaststroke, and eleventh in the 200 medley relay, in last week's AIAW National Finals in Clarion, Pennsylvania. Except for the 200 breaststroke all were new school records.

Each finish placed her in the elite top twelve that earn the right to be called All-American. Her second place finish also earned her the National Collegiate Women's Swimming Coaches Association's All-American award for placing in the top three.

Asked which was the best Johnson replied, "I thought the team relay was the best. When the last heat was over we (the team) looked up to the scoreboard and started crying. We were so happy. We were in the second heat and we had to wait until the last heat to see if our time had held up."

Ellen Cushman, Denise Squires, and Karen Young each earned the title of All-American in that event. All of the girls were so supportive, they all helped me a lot," said Johnson.

The road to the AIAW Nationals wasn't all glory however. Johnson, who plays volleyball for UNCW also, got a late start in practice this year. She began practice only two weeks before the team's first meet. Added to this disadvantage, Johnson was not used to the rigorous training schedule on the collegiate level. "In high school I was used to swimming a total of about 3,000 yards in practice. Down here, the team is used to swimming ten to twelve thousand in a heavy work-out," said Johnson.

However, Johnson ad-

Athlete of the Week - Janet Johnson, astounds school and herself in route to All-American status

justed and qualified for the Nationals slightly over a month ago in the Seahawk Invitational. She qualified in the 50 yard breaststroke, after only swimming the event once, prior to the meet. After her determined performance, Johnson was headed to the Nationals.

Almost unbelievable is the fact that she had contracted a slight case of mononucleosis two weeks prior to the Invationals.

Coach Dave Allen explains, "She had a slight case of mono about a month ago and had to ease off, and change her training schedule. She had to rest before the Invitational. I have to give her a lot of credit, she was discouraged but she hung in there and didn't give up. We had to cut down on her swimming schedule and increase her land training program. She was very conscientious and worked very hard."

When asked about Johnson's performance Allen replied, "I can't say enough nice things about her. She is very dedicated to any activity that she's involved in. I believe she has received a lot of her just rewards and it's only the beginning. I think that she can become a national champion in Division 11. I just hope that the other students on campus appreciate what she has done for the school."

Coach Allen also pointed out that three others received All-American status and their efforts were just as noteworthy and important. Cushman, Squires, and Young should be commended on their fine efforts in the Nationals; because as Johnson pointed out, it was a team effort.

This is just the beginning, however, for Johnson and the team. No one will graduate from this year's squad and with the new recruits that will arrive next fall, the women's swimming program will even eclipse this year's exceptional season.

Last week UNCW didn't have a female All-American, now it has four.

Seahawk split with Eastern,

by Eddie Knox

The Seahawks of UNCW playing two games in two days against Eastern Connecticut, saw Sunday's effort result in a 5-4 victory, followed by a heartbreaking 2-1 10th inning loss to the Warriors Monday.

In Sunday's game at Brooks Field, UNCW raced off to a comfortable 5-0 advantage after seven innings, then managed to hold on to the victory despite a frantic Eastern ninth inning.

Kenny Smith, on the mound for the 'Hawks, allowed only three hits in seven innings against the Warriors, all singles. Reliever Mike Williams, however, found the going rough against Eastern. After walking pinch hitter Tony Mitta to open the Warrior ninth, another pinch hitter, Kevin Burke, singled Mitta to third. Then yet another pinch hitter, Rick Perun, bunted on to load the bases.

A sacrifice and a single brought home Mitta and Burke, and after a fly out, another single brought the final Eastern Connecticut run across. Left-handed reliever Ronald Inman then came in and shut down the Warrior rally, getting out three on a fly to center.

Monday's game was a study in frustration as the 'Hawks couldn't push but a single run across home plate, despite getting seven hits.

Freshman Carl Willis, hurling for the Seahawks, opened up shakily, allowing two walks in the Connecticut first, and a walk, single, and sacrifice in the second. UNCW however, used the luck of the Irish on St. Patrick's Day to avoid a Warrior tally, while scoring their only run in the second inning.

Clyde Holley opened up the Seahawk second with a single. After John Milkovits flew out, Bill Austin grounded out, advancing Holley to second. Catcher Jim Montague drew a walk from Eastern's Art Benson, and Tom Jones, running for Montague, gave the 'Hawks runners on first and second with two out.

Designated hitter Ricky Watkins then knocked in the only UNCW tally of the game when he doubled home Holley. Third baseman Gary Chadwick flew out to end the inning.

Eastern Connecticut answered immediately, pushing across a third inning run on the strength of an Al Leboutef single and Tom Reynold double, knocking the score at 1-1.

The Warriors could get only three hits the rest of the way, but two of those came in the decisive Eastern 10th, when a Jim Silva single following a James Mugavero double gave the Warriors a 2-1 victory over the 'Hawks.

UNCW's most serious threat after the second came in the Seahawk seventh. Ricky Watkins struck out to begin the inning, but back-to-back singles by Gary Chadwick and Tim Whitehead put 'Hawks on the first and third with one out. Mark Scalf then smashed a hellacious line-drive directly to Warrior second-bagger Dennis Glynn, who doubled up Whitehead to end the inning.

The 'Hawks, now 2-5 on the young season, meet Eastern Connecticut once again Thursday at 3 p.m. on Brooks Field.

hope to avenge loss today in rematch.

OPINION

by Harold Thompson

Last week the UNCW Men's Basketball team finished its third straight nineteen win season and capped off the season with a convincing and emotional win over Georgia Southern. Everyone was pleased with the team's progress and sorry to see starters Garry Cooper, John Haskins, and Barry Taylor graduate. This brings up a very interesting question: Is there life after basketball season?

Hardcore fans such as myself have been glued to the action since November soaking up every fast-break and dunk-shot. Now, with the passing of February and the dawning of March, the entire country is awaiting the next number one team (personally I hope it will be either Maryland or UCLA). The suspense of not knowing which team it will be will temporarily postpone the inevitable: the end of the season.

After the finals, desperately we will turn to the pro ranks for guidance in the waning days of March. The terminal illness of withdrawal has now set in and the word summer means six months without the hardwood and the sound of a wish.

During May, the game will become dormant and we will search for other areas in which to channel our frustrations. The withdrawal will fade and life will again find purpose and meaning. The words of baseball, tennis, softball, and golf will be introduced into our vocabularies. The memories of last fall will fade and new heroes will emerge.

During the spring and summer at UNCW, we have sports that will be as fascinating and beautiful as our beloved basketball. It's hard to believe, but instead of hearing "Coop," "Tobo" or "B.T.," baseball fans will chant the names of David Pope and John Tallent. Tennis fans will watch intently as Paul Gemboya matches strokes and strategies against another opponent, and softball enthusiasts will cheer the women's team onto an excellent season.

Golf fans will follow Bob Mailloux and John Cregean; and Darci Wilson and Connie Poole will burn up the course in route to starting a new golfing tradition.

Jan Sweet will be the darling of the tennis courts as the women plan to dominate the scene in future years.

Club football will be holding its version of spring training and will take on N.C. State and Appalachian. This will aid those hardcore fall fans who long for cold weather and the sight and sound of the fury of football.

The season's are changing (despite this week's unusual snow) and basketball is headed for the backs of everyone's mind; and a new crop of sports and heroes are just waiting to burst onto the scene.

UNCW has the teams, the talent, and the potential to make spring as enjoyable as last fall. Many of the teams will be splitting at the seams after the long awaited spring break, just ready to delight the students of UNCW.

No, life does not end after basketball, it just temporarily goes to sleep; only to wake up to a new season and more adventures.

"10" takes three-on-three title

In round-robin, three-on-three intramural action, the team of Bob Bordeaux, Sinclair Harris, and Bruce McCoy which comprise the Wilmington 10, defeated the No Name's in the championship game, prior to spring break.

Both teams entered the final contest with a 9-0 records. The No-Names, Dave Vanderbosch, Bill Patterson, Mark Brisson, and Kent Porter fell to the "10" and finished with a 9-1 record.

Eleven teams entered this year's competition sponsored by the intramural office. John Dail organized and directed the event.

Ultimate frisbee invades Wilmington

by Eddie Knox

One sunny afternoon about eight years ago in Yellow Springs, Ohio, Steve Spier began tossing a frisbee along with his friends, and found that he enjoyed it.

Now he and a friend, Carl Champney, also of Yellow Springs, have begun a frisbee team in the Wilmington area, and he is passing on his enjoyment and expertise to all comers.

Exactly what does a frisbee team do? Well, it plays Ultimate Frisbee, which is the official name of the sport.

O.K., so what is Ultimate Frisbee? It is one of the fastest growing sports in America, and one of the most fun.

Ultimate Frisbee is played on a football field. It has some similarities to football, yet it is a non-contact sport.

Like football, there are also passers and receivers in Ultimate Frisbee. Unlike football, there are only seven players on the field for one team at any one time.

The object of the sport is to toss the frisbee over the goal line to a teammate, which results in a 1 point goal.

There is no actual running with the frisbee, as there is in football. Once a receiver catches the frisbee, he must immediately stop and surrender the frisbee to another teammate.

Of course the defense, while not being able to tackle the passer, has ways to interrupt this process. A defender can either deflect a pass or intercept it. Once he intercepts, the defense immediately takes possession and begins their offensive.

Sounds fast-moving? It is. "During a game, the average player will run from three to five miles, so one has to be in pretty good physical condition to play an entire game," says Spier.

An average game consists of two 24-minute halves. Each team is allowed three time-outs per half, and each may substitute players only after a goal. The action stops only for fouls, out-of-bounds, time-outs, and goals. This aspect of the sport is somewhat akin to soccer, as both are particularly fast-moving sports.

The standard frisbee uniform is the standard soccer uniform, for it allows the greatest freedom of movement. The 165-gram frisbee is the model sanctioned by the Ultimate Players Association (UPA) as the official frisbee of the sport.

Ultimate Frisbee is also a co-ed sport, and although Spier currently has no women on the team "any females who are interested in playing should

SUMMER SPORTS CAMPS SET AT UNCW

The UNCW athletic department is again sponsoring five sports camps this summer during June and July for young boys and girls, with five different activities featured.

Separate camps are scheduled in basketball, swimming and soccer, as well as a new session for athletic trainers. For the first time this summer, individual basketball camps will be staged for boys and girls.

For applications or further information regarding any of the Seahawk Sports Camps, please contact the UNCW athletic department, or call 791-4390.

come out and try it, because it's a lot of fun and women are always a nice touch," he says.

The Wilmington team, headed by Spier, has 17 actual members, although it is not uncommon, he says, to have over 30 players at any one gathering. The team will compete in an exhibition tournament in Raleigh on March 22, along with four other North Carolina teams.

Those interested and/or curious should pull on their most comfortable shorts this (or any) Sunday afternoon and come over to the UNCW athletic field, where Spier says "everyone who enjoys a fun afternoon in the sun can drop by to either participate or just watch."

Spring Preview: Larson confident of positive season for lady golfers.

by Harold Thompson

Lea Larson, in her first year at UNCW, will have a tough time in developing a regional golf power at Wilmington, but seems confident that it can be accomplished.

Larson, who comes to Wilmington from Austin Peay University in Clarksville, Tennessee, where she coached her team to four state championships and two second place finishes in only six years, has hopes of turning the UNCW program into a Division III contender in the near future.

Before coming to Wilmington in the fall of 1979, Larson recruited two top-notch performers in Darci Wilson and Connie Poole. Wilson, a native of Clarksville, was a local favorite of Larson.

"I've worked with her for seven years and I consider her the best athlete that has ever come out of Clarksville," states a proud Larson. This is a particularly boastful statement when you consider that Wilma Rudolf, of Olympic fame, is also a Clarksville product. Wilson also started on UNCW's Women's basketball team.

Poole's is a unique story altogether. Larson first met Poole as a competitor several years ago while playing local Tennessee tournaments. They became friends on an off the course. At the time, Poole was not in school and after encouragement from Larson and her club pro she decided to give college a chance. Her choice, of course, was UNCW. "Connie and I have a different relationship. We began as competitors, then friends and now have a coach-athlete relationship," Larson said.

Robbie Roberts and Sibbie Johnson round out this spring's squad of four. "Robbie had to make a big adjustment, but she has the potential and is probably our hardest worker. She spends more time on the game than any other golfer."

Sibbie Johnson is the big surprise for the Lady Hawks this year because no one even expected her. Johnson, a Junior, walked on the team last fall.

"Sibbie is also a hard worker and I've been very impressed with her timing and good foundation. She is very teachable and responsive to instruction" said Larson.

"These four will be the hub of the wheel and next year when more golfers come to UNCW we will have depth and a seasoned line-up. I'm recruiting around them to build a quality program" states Larson.

Their spring schedule, which begins March 20 at the Duke Spring Invitational, again pits the ladies against outstanding collegiate competition. Purdue, Meredith, Duke, Marshall, and powerhouse Georgia are among the teams that UNCW will face on the road to the Nationals in June.

Even though Larson is new to this area, she has compiled a noteworthy history in golf that includes winning a state women's championship in Arkansas and a runner-up finish in the Tennessee tournament. Also, she has studied under Coach Labron Harris of Oklahoma State fame.

Men's Golf team overcomes difficulties

by Harold Thompson

A number of problems have beset the UNCW golf program in the last three years, a lack of communications between coaches and administration, lack of publicity, and a lack of money. However, new golf coach Jerry McGraw feels all of these problems can be corrected. "Wilmington should be the home of a fine golf tradition, this area has the climate, a number of excellent golf courses and a solid University. I plan to supervise, and qualify the team for tournaments and help the guys anyway I can," commented McGraw.

McGraw is in his first year as UNCW's Golf Coach and he is bullish on the team and its potential. He knows talent when he sees it. In 1970 as a Freshman his Campbell College team won the National NAIW Golf Title, and after graduating in 1974 he became an apprentice pro. His is now a registered P.G.A. professional and runs the Echo Farms Pro Shop while giving lessons.

Echo Farms is UNCW's home golf course and McGraw has been hired on a contractual basis to coach the semester.

With Freshman Bob Mailloux of East-Angus Canada and returners Chris Gibson and John Cregan, McGraw has the nucleus to build a tradition in the Wilmington area.

Cregan is the longest hitter on the team, while Gibson and Sophomore Rick Burger are known for their consistent rounds of 70's. Stacy Bledsoe and Gary Baldwin are also capable of helping the team quickly with their complete games.

Mailloux, who is considered the finest golfer on the team, traveled a long way from Canada but, McGraw explains, "he just wanted to come South and play golf all year round, he's a very good player and has the potential to be an excellent golfer after school."

The team only plays in six tournaments this spring but the top six golfers are seasoned and ready to turn the program around. Their competition includes N.C. Wesleyan, Pembroke State, Elon, Methodist and McGraw's alumnus Campbell. With the help of an enthusiastic McGraw the teams should put the past behind them and stroke their way into the eighties and prominence.

Lady Netters look to "ace" opponents

by Harold Thompson

The outlook for the UNCW's women's tennis team doesn't look very good with only one senior, one sophomore and seven freshman. Not so, say first year coach Gwynn Hawes. "There is a lot of enthusiasm on the team and the girls are eager to learn about the game. They work together as a team and are fired up about playing this season."

With powerhouse teams like East Carolina, North Carolina State, and St. Mary's on the schedule, the girls will have to mature rapidly.

Hawes, who is a flight attendant for Piedmont, was asked by Bill Brooks last fall if she would like to coach the women's team when coaching conflicts arose with fall coach Debbie Dowd. She was glad to do it and now feels that the women will have a good Spring after finishing the fall season with a 4-3 mark.

"The team has good depth and is as strong down the line as it has ever been," stated Hawes. With freshmen Jane Sweet, Kathy Kreuzburg and Susan Peireva in the top three positions she feels the team will win its share in Division III play.

Conchie Gembores, Brenda Kalevas and Renee Kabbaby round out the top six, but the starting line-up will change weekly as the players challenge those about them to matches in hopes of moving up the ladder. "There is tremendous growth here and the team will get stronger and stronger," commented Hawes on how her team will progress during the season.

Her optimism might falter after matches against Atlantic Christian, East Carolina, Methodist, Campbell, and UNC Charlotte; but don't count on it.

Hawes does admit that her team is young and inexperienced but points to the future as the UNCW Women's Tennis team tries to prepare themselves for a difficult Spring Schedule.

Amazing Kreskin to demonstrate psychokinesis at UNCW

Fifty thousand dollars is on deposit in a Phillipsburg, New Jersey bank, and internationally famed mentalist, entertainer, author Kreskin expects it to remain there for quite some time, UNLESS, anyone can demonstrate, under scientific conditions, 'psychokinesis' - the controlling or changing of a physical object by thought power. If this extraordinary feat is challenged and proven successful by another individual, Kreskin will release $50,000 to that individual. "This challenge will last 'till the day I die'", states Kreskin.

Aside from more than 200 appearances on the

"Mike Douglas" and "Tonight" shows, Kreskin has worked with dentists and physicians and acts as a consultant to a clinical psychologist. On occasion, he is called on to work with witnesses to crimes where a case might hinge on unearthing forgotten details of a crime from someone's subconscious.

As a television personality Kreskin's widely syndicated show, "The Amazing World of Kreskin," is beamed throughout this country, as well as Canada, Australia, New Zealand, Japan, Scotland, the Philippines, and Ireland.

The mysterious $50,000 challenge is only one phase of this truly amazing personality. Can "Psychokinesis" really be accomplished? Can Kreskin, in fact, succeed at this extraordinary feat? Is his motive to debunk or validate claims of practitioners of "Psychokinesis"? One thing has been proven, Kreskin gets people to wonder.

Aside from the $50,000 challenge, the Amazing Kreskin will be paid

$2,500 for this performance at UNCW on March 25. If he can locate the check among the audience hidden during the performance. If he fails to find the UNCW check, then the University Program Board gets to keep the money and doesn't have to pay for his show. Only twice in his career has this happened, we hope to make it three times.

Admission to this amazing performance is FREE to students with UNCW I.D. and $2.00 for all others. March 25, 1980, Kenan Auditorium. $2,500 is at stake!!

Stevie Wonder tallies more Grammys than Beatles

PSS Answerperson

Q: Is the Kenny Rogers who has the hit, "Coward of the County," the same one who had a band back in the '60s called, the First Edition? If it is, he certainly has changed his style since then—Myrtle P., Pensacola, Fla.

A: Kenny Rogers and the First Edition scored a major hit, in 1968, with the psychedelic rock tune, "Just Dropped In to See What Condition My Condition Was In."

Yes, Kenny Rogers certainly has changed his style since then—to the country-rock strains of such hits as, "Ruby, Don't Take Your Love To Town" and his current hit single, "Coward of the County."

If you're interested in checking out the First Edition's more rock-oriented material. "Kenny Rogers and the First Edition's Greatest Hits" is still in print on the Rep-rise label.

Q: Please settle a bet for me: Who has won the most Grammy Awards? I say the Beatles, and my friend says Stevie Wonder Dave Merced, Mobile, Ala.

A: You're both wrong, although your friend is more right than you are.

Composer Henry Mancini leads the pack, with a total of 20 Grammy Awards since the awards' inception, in 1959. Pianist Vladimir Horowitz is second, with 16, and Stevie Wonder is third, with 15 Grammy Awards. The Beatles are a long way down the list, with a total of four.

Holder to appear in Goodwood March 21

Martha Holder, songwriter/singer/guitarist, will perform at Goodwood Taver, Friday, March 21 from 8 to 11 pm. Martha is an impressive young musician who oversteps the boundaries between rock 'n' roll, jazz, blues, and traditional music. In addition to her own jazz-oriented works, Martha offers a potpourri of songs by Heart, Joni Mitchell, Led Zeppelin, Rickie Lee Jones, Dan Fogelberg and many others.

Martha has been playing guitar and creating songs for eight years and also accompanies herself on mandolin and dulcimer. She has performed at the S.C. Folk Festival and was honored at the National Entertainment and Campus Activities Association's regional convention in Atlanta.

Martha was three years into a double major in psychology and art when she decided to devote herself to music full-time. Martha has done extensive nightclub and studio work and is currently on a tour of colleges and universities throughout the southeast, where she continues to receive excellent response. George Lee, of WSJS radio in Winston-Salem, summed up a performance by saying, "Audiences will be captivated by her charm, warmth, sensitivity, and, above all, her ability."

Warren Zevon's latest album as sure as death and taxes

It is currently an even numbered year, and as sure as death and taxes, there is a new Warren Zevon album for all to consume mass quantities of. You remember Warren Zevon. He's the guy who likes to write macabre songs and has a pre-occupation with guns. He also hit the AM airwaves in 1978 with a clever ditty called "Werewolves of London," which featured no less than fourteen howls. Linda Ronstadt had some success with another of his compositions, "Poor, Poor Pitiful Me." And if that's not enough, he's a member of the L.A. Asylum school of rock 'n' rollers, which should assure one and all of some degree of competency.

Well, the new album is entitled BAD LUCK STREAK IN DANCING SCHOOL, and it features an all-star roster. Contributing musicians include David Lindley (lap steel guitar), Joe Walsh, Waddy Watchel, Don

Record Review

By David Carter

Felder, and Jorge Calderon (guitars), Jackson Browne (slide guitar), Ben Keith (pedal steel guitar), Leland Sklar (bass), Rick Marotta (drums), and Zevon himself provides guitar, keyboards, strings, and harmonica. The backing vocalists are some of the members of the aforementioned L.A. Asylum school. They include Linda Ronstadt, Eagles Glenn Frey and Don Hendley, Jackson Browne, and of course, lonely J.D. Souther.

"Bad Luck Streak in Dancing School" opens the first side and picks up where 1978's EXCITABLE BOY left off. It sounds like typical Zevon material, and is almost like a military march with its short lines and rolling drums. The enjoyable title track leads into "A Certain Girl," an early sixties tune that should've remained in the sixties. "Jungle Work" is a definite Zevon song as it deals with guns and S.W.A.T. teams. It has a jungle rhythm, complete with a chant that one would imagine that the Bandar pygmies employ when trying to contact the Phantom. Although "Jungle Work" features a vapid Joe Walsh solo, it would've fit nicely in APOCALYPSE NOW.

The side continues with "Empty-Handed Heart," a so-so attempt at a love song. The sole noteworthy feature of this song is a descant with Linda Ronstadt. "Interlude No. 1" follows and sounds like a short excerpt from the soundtrack of a French film. "Play It All Night Long" concludes the side and is a bland rock tune that suggests it is more of a filler than anything else.

Side two begins with a song co-written by Zevon and The Boss, Bruce Springsteen. It's called "Jeannie Needs a Shooter" and it's a good song that would've been better if Springsteen had done it himself. Zevon's version isn't bad. It's simply uninspired as he hasn't the feel for love on the run as Springsteen does. "Interlude No. 2" sounds much like the music heard at the end of Rocky when the credits roll. It serves as a pleasant intro into "Bill Lee," a tune about Montreal Expo pitcher Bill Lee, who has been known to be what could be termed outspoken. Lee posted a 16-10 won/loss record, with an 3.04 E.R.A. last year. The song sounds more like Dock Ellis, who had a 3-7 record, complete with 5.77 E.R.A. "Gorilla You're a Desperado" is a lively song in which Jackson Browne provides nice slide work. "Bed of Coals" is a half-hearted stab at the blues. The album closes with "Wild Age," which reflects on growing up and the problems that accompany it. David Lindley supplies some nice guitar work here.

BAD LUCK STREAK IN DANCING SCHOOL isn't a bad album. In fact, Zevon fans will undoubtedly like it. Zevon's vocals are as strong as ever, and the production furnished by Zevon and Greg Ladany is adequate. However, the people who liked Zevon based on "Werewolves of London," or EXCITABLE BOY will be disappointed as this new offering is pale by comparison. BAD LUCK STREAK IN DANCING SCHOOL simply lacks the punch and bite of its predecessor. But if Zevon runs true to form he'll have an opportunity to redeem himself in 1982. That's a long time. Even for an excitable boy.

Campus Chuckles: Manilow top on "bannable" list

by Julie Russ

Remember when there was a lot of talk about a saccharin ban? Aside from the fact that it would have put Mary Tyler Moore out of business, it would also have meant death to TAB, sugarless gum, etc. Faced with a nation of armed and dangerous dieters, the FDA backed down; so now if you want to OD on Sweet 'n' Low, it's up to you.

But think about it...aren't there a few things YOU'D like to see banned forever? Here are some things we might all be better off without:

1. Barry Manilow
2. dentists
3. natural blondes (let 'em bleach like everybody else!)
4. open relationships
5. bamboo shoots (like chewing wet straw, only not as tasty).
6. insomnia
7. senile professors (and they know who they are!)
8. "Have a nice day!"
9. other peoples' kids
10. grungy jeans
11. psychoanalysis (when

- are we going to realize that we're ALL crazy, and get on with our lives?)
12. Richard Gere (if I can't have him, nobody can!)
 13. cellulite
 14. the New Male (damned if he doesn't look the same to me...)
 15. soap operas
 16. Chevy Chase (hey, when you slide, you slide!)
 17. the Cosmo girl

18. the Beach Boys (Dennis Wilson, we still want your body...)
19. Charlie's Angels (okay, sheer jealousy, I admit it!)
20. organized sweat (jogging, weight-lifting, etc.)

I'm sure there are lots of "bannables" that haven't occurred to my feeble mind, so if you have any suggestions, just drop 'em by the Seahawk, okay? And no, you can't ban WRITERS!

The Seahawk and Fledgling offices will be joined by a dark room. The Student Government offices and WLOZ also have space in the new Center. A video tape studio with closed circuit television and a music listening lounge will all be centrally located in the University Center.

The University Center is designed to "be a place for everybody to be comfortable," said Moore.

The exterior of the University Center will retain the uniform Georgian architecture prevalent on UNCW campus. Glass arches will be used extensively establishing a feeling of openness.

The University Center will be paid for with student fees. "Students build student unions," Dr. Malloy stated. There are no state funds in dorms, parking lots, food services, or bookstores. The state will appropriate money to build academic and administrative facilities. According to Dr. Malloy, the Board of Trustees has already approved a $35 increase in student fees per semester beginning in the fall of 1980. The University will also issue bonds to finance the building.

The new University Center will cost almost $3.5 million, according to Carl Dempsey, assistant to the Vice-Chancellor for Business Affairs. "This is the total authorized scope of the project," said Dempsey.

Dr. Malloy said he is pleased with the proposed layout and design of the new University Center. "I feel it will be functional for many years to come and the design lends itself to the possibility of additions in the future."

At this time, the new University Center is scheduled to open in October or November of 1981.

The snow gave him the "chance to get out and play around like a kid," he states. "I had a good time. It was a good way to relax. The worst part was being stranded."

Presidential and vice-presidential hopefuls

SGA may face confrontation concerning ticket processing

by Joyce Stevens

The Student Government Association faces the possibility of confronting the North Carolina General Assembly in order to have campus traffic tickets processed through the student courts, according to an SGA official at the March 20 Senate meeting.

According to Senator Charles Parsons, UNCW has been annexed by New Hanover County as the 9th district. Thus, the theory that students should be subject to the University for their campus traffic violations is presently an impossibility.

"It would take action by the North Carolina General Assembly to change tickets to student courts," said Parsons.

President Jonathan Fail announced the SGA is still considering new avenues for the handling of SGA funds. At the end of last semester, the need for new methods was discussed. on p.16

by Wendy Robbins

Financial problems mostly dominated the speeches of the presidential and vice-presidential hopefuls at the Candidates' Forum, which was held at 7:30 Monday night in the Pub.

Mike Stroud, a vice-presidential contender, said that the students would profit from "fiscal frugality." According to Stroud, "the gospel of fiscal solvency" needs to be preached. "You can't do anything for anybody if you just don't have the funds to do it," he said. He attributed the low student turnout during election times to the "lack of motivation" on the part of politicians. Some of his duties as vice-president, he stated, would be to "organize the Senate" into an "effective" legislative body and to act as an

Speak at Candidates' Forum

"advisor to the President."

"There has been a substantial increase in the number of clubs and organizations on campus," said Charles Parsons, another candidate for vice-president. "the amount of money has not risen with the amount of those clubs." Parsons said that the vice-president is the "presiding officer" who "decides the order of business" and "acts as a referee between the pros and cons at the Senate meetings." The past year has been "one of expansion" for the SGA, Parsons said, and "more students should participate" in government. Parsons stated that he has "learned to associate with members representing not only our school but other schools as well" through his participation in the North Carolina Student Legislature.

Frank Colvin, candidate for president, said that "the money problem is one of our main issues." Colvin stated that he wanted to establish a "closer relationship" between the clubs and the SGA. To mend the "SGA's conflict with the clubs," he said he would "like to visit clubs and tell them our budgeting situation." Students should become more involved in the community, he said. "Right now, the community is one segment and the university kind of sits to the side. There doesn't seem to be any coordination. I've got a position on the Board of Directors of the Chamber of Commerce to get input directly from the students."

Jesse Sanders is also a presidential contender. "We will have to continue to grow in an orderly manner to contain the money situation," he said. There should be a "better communication link between the clubs and the SGA," he stated. According to Sanders, being a business major and the current SGA Treasurer. cont. on p.16

Gunshot last week in Trask undergoes investigation

by Julie Russ

If you were in the vicinity of Hanover Hall March 19 at approximately 7:30 p.m. and heard a loud bang—it wasn't a car backfiring. According to Assistant Chief of Campus Police David Gurganous, the muffled explosion was actually a sawed-off twelve gauge shotgun being fired at a wall in the gymnasium.

The shooting was the result of an altercation involving a black male non-student and a white male student. Explained Gurganous, "From what witnesses have told us, here is an account of what happened: The black male and the white male had an argument over who owned a basketball. When the white youth slapped the ball away from the black male, a quarrel occurred, and it was discovered that the ball in question did indeed belong to the black male, who then reportedly threatened to get a gun and use it against the other guy. He then left the gym and returned carrying the weapon, which he held under the white male's nose while verbally threatening him.

"It was at this time that another black male began talking to the assailant, trying to calm him down. The victim took this opportunity to run, after which the first black male fired a single shot at the wall by the racketball courts, damaging the wall and causing plaster to scatter. The young man then ran out of the building, carrying the shotgun cont. on p.16

LETTERS

To the Editor:

This is in reply to Doug Browne's editorial which appeared in last week's Seahawk. Although he presents some interesting arguments for delaying the elections, he fails to present both sides, even though I know he was aware of the other side. Our constitution states that elections will be held in March. Not April in case of snow, but March. Also, the snowfall hurt everyone equally, not just Mr. Browne. The dates for the election were set two months ago by the Board of Elections Chairperson, Lynne Wells, and published in the Seahawk. Where was Mr. Browne then?

His accusation that Ms. Wells and myself have acted arbitrarily in holding the elections as planned, is unfounded and may in part be based on the fact that he is facing stiff opposition for the Senior Class President's race. Another week of unconstitutional time may help further one's own political goals. As chief justice of the student court, I expected more of Mr. Browne than to only print his side in the editorial and ignore the facts. Johathan H. Faill, Jr.
SGA President

Associate Editors' Note

As Mr. Faill has conveniently failed to mention, I as Chief Justice of the Student Supreme Court along with other justices have the power, to interpret and or amend the constitution.

As one of the authors of the New Constitution, I fully understand it, and realize that there are various ways of adjusting it.

Last week, I told Lynn Wells that she could submit, to a majority of the court, an affidavit explaining the circumstances, asking for an amendment to remedy the situation, should something like this happen again in the future. This is what I meant by "avenues were open to the chairman, but she refused to act".

My intent in writing the editorial was to publicise the fact that the students would be hurt by the snowfall, not just myself. The president doesn't seem to realize this, as is evidenced by his letter. I sincerely urge him to re-read the editorial.

Doug Browne

To the Editor:

I hope this semester's Fledgling doesn't "get me" (Seahawk, 3/20) like it did last semester—hard, right between the eyes. I'm referring to the photograph of the nude female student who posed in the bathtub, surrounded by all the jolly, fun-loving frat boys of Pi Kappa Phi, who stood there gawking, beer in hand, pants undone. If that was not an unconscious (conscious?) confirmation by males of woman's subjection to man, then nothing is. The impression it left on me, and several other women and men on campus, was more than horrifying. The yearbook made me ashamed of my school; needless to say, I didn't buy one.

It is a pity that sexist groups must exist on our campus, but let's not represent their attitudes or promote their ideas in the name of UNCW. Most of all, let's hope for more sensitive, responsible editing of the Fledgling and other UNCW publications in the future. Sexist material should stay where it belongs—on the NO COMMENT page of MS.

Diane C. Russell

To The Editor

As an amused observer of the UNC-W Student Body (and a student myself), I could not let this little gem pass by:

Last week a gentleman wrote a truly interesting letter concerning the early announcement of several candidates who are seeking SGA offices. The letter was well written and it is obvious that Mr. Schmidt is extremely knowledgeable in the affairs of the senate and of politics. What bothers me is the fact that the author waited until now to print his letter. If the candidates announced "several weeks ago," why didn't Mr. Schmidt present his letter sooner and possibly encourage the other candidates to declare and to give the students "the opportunity and the time to listen to their views."

As for Mr. Stroud's comments concerning students who run "just for the hell of it", I was surprised to say the least. After all, how many of you know anyone who would announce their intent to run for election, spend their time and money, and then run "for the hell of it with no real thought of winning," not to mention the embarrassment and disappointment that comes with defeat.

David Schmidt's letter was a good thought but I question the motive behind waiting until now to print it. I also am disappointed that the author considers himself an observer and not a participant in the student senate.

Sincerely,
Pete Divoky

Marriage, children requires planning and organization

UNCW Student Forum

by Christy Allen

As a senior, I'm becoming eligible for the job market. Now it's time to put all my experience into an eye-catching resume'. All the hours of study now seem worthwhile as I gleefully collect my list of subjects and grades.

But then panic sets in! That's all I've got: subjects and grades. What if the Awesome Interviewer wants more? You know, extra-curricular activities.

My college record contains no shining club membership or glittering cheerleader award. How can I possibly compete with Susie Sorority, who has two club presidencies, three years on student government, and one year as senior editor of THE SEAHAWK* not to mention her volunteer work with the retarded children?

I rip up my meager little resume' and weep for wasted time devoted to school. I tell myself, as I pick up the Scrunchie and tackle the barbecued pork chop pan, I still have the kid, the husband and the housework. Now I can direct all my energy towards "Housewife of the Year."

I put the pan on soak, fix a cup of coffee, and dig my pen out of the garbage. After again listing the subjects and grades, I begin to itemize the other commitments I have.

Marriage is a major job. You see, statistics indicate that if I don't do this well, I may not be doing it at all. Part of the job requires taking care of myself. Having a weight-trainer for a husband makes this especially important. Barry can spot cellulite at twenty paces and can guess exactly what I've done to acquire it. Therefore, every day includes jumping rope and bench pressing as proof of my love for Barry and my hate for dimply bulges.

Getting the two of us alone for the evening requires organization and planning. Stepping out involves more than walking out the door and into the car. I first must locate a responsible sitter who asks for well under the minimum wage, then feed, bathe, and dress my child by eight o'clock, press a shirt for Barry, and finally, bathe and dress myself.

Working on student government teaches you diplomacy and the art of getting along under conflicting emotions, but so does marriage. Exams and research papers take their toll on even the best relationships. Once, during my fourth frantic night of researching early Medieval rape, I caught my husband lurking around my study door. Some inquiry revealed that he was "forgetting he was a man."

"Cute," I replied. "But I don't even remember being a woman. I am reduced to a pair of peeled eyeballs."

"Thank God for fall break," he mumbled, and stumbled off to bed. While Susie S. cheer-leads, I child-lead. Raising an energetic four-year-old daughter takes more than just a passing interest. Emily demands and deserves a majority of my spare time. She needs me to pull sandspurs out of tender toes, settle disputes with playmates, real and imaginary, and hold her hand as we sniffle together over sad parts in "The Little Rascals."

Emily has that "wisdom beyond her years" that children develop these days. She reminds me when it's time to go somewhere; she scolds me for misplacing objects and then she finds them; she even checks her own teeth for cavities. These things I can live with, even appreciate. But when I've been studying since four a.m. and she pops into the study after twelve wonderful hours of sleep to say, "I know, I know, fix my own breakfast," why do I have to feel like a naughty child?

I imagine planning our next week's SEAHAWK frustrates a senior editor as much as planning out next week's menu does for me. Making certain that a family eats properly could be time consuming, but I'm an expert on hurry-up meals, the quick thaw method, and finger-feed dining. My family, well-versed on the evils of over-eating, understands that rich, over-elaborate meals only lead to upset stomachs and dirty dishes. Our sugar-free diet eliminates almost everything but the basics. It's hard, but we gain a strong sense of togetherness as we suffer withdrawal symptoms during the junk food commercials. Emily walks up to every cotton candy-eating kid on the boardwalk and predicts ominously, "You're going to get rotten teeth." It's her only consolation.

To give a final flourish to my resume', I add that I painted three rooms, wallpapered two bathrooms, and planted an organic garden last spring. I don't go into details, though, about paint stains, air bubbles, and blight.

With the resume' complete, I feel good about myself again. I remember reading a study done on the housewife/mother which claimed that her services were worth over fifty-thousand dollars a year. I'm pleased that I can handle the job in addition to full-time schooling. I dash down to Revco to reward myself for rising above suicidal inclinations. Strolling down the aisles, I notice my competition, Susie, at the perfume counter purchasing a bottle of "Babe." "Nice, tasteful choice," I concede, "but definitely not my style." I nod hello as I calmly select the biggest bottle of "Enjoli" on the shelf.

Board announces Representative-at-Large position

The UNCW Media and Publications Board would like to announce an opening for the position of Representative-at-Large. The Media and Publications Board is composed of WLOZ, The Seahawk, Fledgling, Atlantis, and The Video Network. All students are eligible and any interested should turn their applications in to Dr. Jo Ann Seiple in the English Dept. by March 28.

Hollingsworth wins short story contest

Joyce Hollingsworth captured first place in UNCW's Jesse Rehder Short Story Contest with her story "Riding Lesson in a Minor Key." Hollingsworth was given $50.00 at the awards presentation, which was held at 11:30 p.m. Tuesday, March 25 in Kenan Hall. "I never thought I would win," she said later. "It didn't take a long time to write the story, but it took a long time editing and revising it. It's a real long short story, probably over 8,000 words. I kept trying to cut things out, but I couldn't."

Mary Ann Stevenson,

the second place winner, was awarded $30.00 for her story "The Spent Shell," and Connie Johnson won the $20.00 third place prize for "Frieds."

"Viewing the Remains," by Judy Stallsmith and "You Haven't Changed a Bit," by Bethania Schmidt, were named honorable mentions.

The judges of the contest were Linda Farrell, a New Hanover High School English teacher, Bill Atwill, an instructor in the English Department and William Woodhouse, Assistant Professor of Spanish.

Atwill started the awards presentation by commenting on the Short Stories. "It has been our privilege to read some forty-two short stories," he said. "There are three or four of them that are so effective that I would like to discuss them with you now, but they were the ones that won."

The winners were announced and the cash prizes were given out by Dr. Joanne Corbett, professor in the English Department. The awards ceremony was concluded with the reading of "Riding Lesson in a Minor Key" by Doug Swink.

Presidential Candidates

Frank Colvin

If nothing else is said about me it is that I am concerned for the students. In the last three years I have always been at registrations and summer freshmen orientations to help answer questions and help advise students on courses or help them work out their housing problems. I am a defender of the students in all matters (as long as they are in the right) as can be testified by the UNCW administration, who I worry so much about these matters of students and their problems. I also feel that I am one of the most outspoken students on campus, but outspoken on matters that concern the students, the reputation of the university, and the community.

I have worked hard this year in seeing that seniors could help plan their graduation. In doing this I planned and carried through several senior class meetings this year. (These were the first class meetings ever held in the history of UNCW).

I have also been busy working on bringing better working relations between the university students and the community. Because of this interest the Greater Wilmington Chamber of Commerce asked me about getting a way to bring student input into the Chamber. Now a position has been created for a UNCW student who knows what is going on campus to be a voting member of the Board of Directors of the Wilmington Chamber of Commerce.

I am the first person at the university to fill this position after being asked by the Chamber. As you can see by just these two endeavors I have the ability and know how to generate ideas and goals into positive movement, and not just reacting to problems after they occur.

My governmental experience is extensive. The past three years of experience (much longer than my two opponents) have given me exactly what is needed for a chief executive "Experience and Proven Ability." Experience as both the Junior and Senior Class

Frank Colvin

President, experience as acting SGA President and SGA Vice-President, a year and a-half as a member of the finance committee, a member of the SGA Investigation Committee, and service on many of the Chancellor's Committees. I was also the President of the Business Fraternity on campus and I was also the voted "The Most Outstanding Member" of this National Business Fraternity in 1979. I have also been a member of the North Carolina Student Legislature.

I plan to keep an open presidency. To accomplish this goal, I will attend the weekly meetings of the Senate, institute regular office hours, have an open door policy to the students for information and problems, give presidential reports in the Seahawk, and visit meetings of all the chartered clubs and organizations so that I can explain the policies of the SGA and University to them, explain the reason for their budgeting, and to listen to their goals, ideas and concerns within their organization. Lack of concern has caused conflict with the chartered clubs and the SGA. These problems have consumed much productive time of the SGA President, senate, treasurer, and the SGA secretary in the past. I want to create a closer relationship with the clubs so that they will see that the SGA and its president are concerned with their club, its goals, problems, and ideas for the future the better the chance of the present wall of SGA vs the clubs under it. I want the clubs to feel a part of the SGA so that we can work together for the good of all.

As President I will actively use my office, as in the past, to promote UNCW to the community. Activities which need to be emphasized are those tangible examples of student accomplishment such as our athletic teams, (the Club Football team and the Women's Soccer team which are both SGA funded), the theatre, our defending state champion debate team, our radio station WLOZ, the Black Student Union, and the Program Board, who have all worked hard at providing the students enjoyable events, activities, and publicize the university. I would like to see more weekend activities and dances so that we can become less of a "suitcase college" in the coming year.

I am asking you to review the candidates. Choose the one you believe is most qualified and VOTE! I hope my record convinces you of my experience and my concern for UNCW and the student body; and I hope that you will give me your support. I remain, sincerely yours, Frank Colvin.

Pete Johnson

It is easy to see that UNCW is growing. For many years there has been construction on our campus and likewise this summer construction will begin again on our New University Center. However this should be the only phase of our progress? We as students, through the provisions of student government can keep pace with this progress. We have an opportunity to do so this week during our SGA elections.

My name is Pete Johnson and I am a candidate for President of the Student Government. The theme of my campaign is progress and likewise my goals are ones that are new and somewhat radical.

Perhaps you read or were even asked to respond on one of the polls that Jeff Brown and I ran. The idea behind the polling service was to offer the senate a mechanism to inquire student interest easily.

The polling service in itself has been a success, the senate however has yet to catch on. In fact, the only facet of student government that has taken advantage at this has been the University Program Board (UPB).

A problem that came to my attention while conducting a poll was that many students miss out on events sponsored by the program board because the events weren't widely publicized. Obviously since the newspaper wasn't in operation for much of last semester, many students couldn't find out about these events. If anything this reflects the importance of an effective and professional media on campus. This too is an aim of my administration.

Specifically, I support WLOZ in becoming 150 watts and I support the Seahawk in adapting a more effective and professional format. In addition I will support any of their own fund raising, activities. Such as WLOZ's upcoming Marathon 91.

In order to have an effective student government, there ought to be on going communication between the SGA and the students. Likewise I wish between the dorm government and the SGA as well as the various Sororities and Fraternities. I wish to see as many as possible take part in and be represented by the decisions that affect them. I hope to see regular meetings between these groups. In addition I would distribute suggestion boxes around the campus, in order to increase the possibility of student input. The most interesting of the responses I would address in the Seahawk.

Pete Johnson

Other programs I would support include a consumer union which would, through existing media, distribute information about apartment contracts, bank loans, and credit, and other important information that the average student doesn't know.

It is easy to see that my platform is indeed a progressive one; yet it is one that is within reach. It can begin today. So if you vote, vote for me, Pete Johnson for president of YOUR student government.

Jesse Sanders

My name is Jessie Sanders, and I am currently running for Student body president. During the past year, I have worked with the SGA as Treasurer and the year before I was a senator. I have seen substantial growth within the SGA, which I would like to see continue next year. The only way I feel that this growth can continue is by my being president of the Student Body. I have many qualifications, which include my position as Training Director for one of the largest restaurant chains in the United States, a job I had before I returned to school. I feel that this experience will help me to train the various clubs and organizations in the handling of their funds. Combining this with my SGA experience, I feel that I am a qualified candidate for President.

I would now like to outline my ten-point plan, which I feel is an excellent basis for the expansion of my administration. In the interest of time, I will limit comment on this plan.

1. Fiscal Responsibility must be an Organizing Job. The best manner in which to accomplish this is to hold seminars for the financial arm of the SGA. 2. Streamline SGA operations. This can be accomplished by having financial data given to SGA officers, who in turn will give them to the various clubs and organizations on campus, which will give them data on their financial status—resulting in more responsible expenditures. 3. Inventory Control. This idea has been implemented this year, but I feel that there is more that we can do. The Business Information system class has been studying the present system, and I believe that their recommendation should be closely scrutinized and implemented. 4. Finish WLOZ's Expansion. WLOZ's planned expansion to 150 watts is something that needs the support of the SGA. Although I cannot promise the money, I will recommend that it is provided, and assist the station in any way I can. 5.

Jesse Sanders

Increase the availability of the Campus Media. This is of extreme importance to the students and I feel can be accomplished with the support of the Student Government. 6. Work Closely on the Parking Problem. There are many ways in which to do this, but the biggest is to get the students involved. I plan to work diligently toward this end. 7. Finish the Student's Procedure Manual. This manual will give valuable information on financial assistance to the organizations and students. 8. Student-Teacher Evaluations—These evaluations will eliminate the word of mouth techniques used by students, and insure that freshmen will have the chance to pick the best possible instructors. 9. More effective use of Polling on Campus. This is the best possible method of obtaining student opinion. I have discussed this with many faculty members and have gotten important insights as to what can be accomplished through polling. This will promote better communication, and continue the valuable link between the students and the SGA. 10. A more unified Student Body. With the SGA and various school media, the students can voice their views on campus issues, resulting in the fact that UNCW can be not only a good school, but one that we all can be proud of.

These points, to me, seem to be the major factors in insuring the growth of the SGA and UNCW. To obtain fiscal responsibility, I am not abdicating a budget cut, nor am I going to cut certain clubs off from funding. All I want is to see that the students of this university get the best out of the money they pay, and to insure that the people who use this money, use it in the students' best interest. I would like to encourage all students to vote today and Thursday. I am.

Vice-Presidential Candidates

Charles Parsons

A new semester is nearing rather fast. With this new semester, there will also be a newly elected student government.

I am proud to have been here to see the changes that have taken place during my two years here. I have been active in the UNCW student government throughout these two years, and feel that I have much more to contribute. It is for these reasons that I now take time to announce my candidacy for the position of Vice-President of the Student Body.

I have many new ideas and goals that I wish to see our student government take part in. I wish to bring an atmosphere of prestige, that has been lacking, into our student senate. Other schools, whether they are large or small, have open and sometimes fierce competition for their SGA officers. Their meetings are always conducted in an orderly and prestigious manner. This is due to the honor associated with their SGA's. I wish to promote more student input and participation for next year. I feel that there should also be a more expansive role given to student programming and activities on our campus. An important goal of mine is to see the medias of our school (ie. Radio, Newspaper, video, etc...) expanding and fully utilized. I would also like to see an SGA finance committee made up of non-senate members to oversee and evaluate the monetary performances of our student clubs and organizations. This would alleviate all the personality conflicts that have arisen in the past. I would also wish to help start a teacher/course evaluation on our campus. This would give students a chance to look over student ratings of teachers and their courses. This is a must, especially before registering for classes.

There are so many ideas that I have for our student government, and I feel that I am responsible and qualified to fulfill the Vic-Presidency. I have served this university in many ways over the years.

Charles Parsons

I started as a freshman senator, then as sophomore vice-president, sophomore class president, various SGA Investigative Committees, SGA Constitutional Revision Committee, two Chancellor appointed committees—the student affairs committee and the hearings panel committee, as a past president of the UNCW video network, as a member of the North Carolina Student Legislature, and as a member of the UNCW Who's Who nominating committee.

I just cannot adequately express my enthusiasm and desire to be elected to this position. I cannot make promises, but I can strongly assert to do the best job that I can. I firmly believe that in my years of living on this campus, I have become associated with many of the student concerns that plague our campus.

PLEASE, lend me your support on March 26-27, and cast your vote for me.

Senior Class President

Doug Browne

My name is Doug Browne, and I'm running for the office of Senior Class President. I guess that the main reason for my running for this office is to try to remedy the Graduation situation.

In the past few years, the graduating seniors of UNCW have been pushed through the exercise in a minimal amount of time, with no regard to special accomplishments, or the fact that they have devoted four or five years of their time and numerous hours of study and heartache to their graduation.

As Senior Class President, I promise to devote the majority of my time to working with the administration to try to make the graduation experience a memorable one. I also will work closely with the senate and with various committees to ensure that the interests of the student body are served.

A major duty of the Senior Class President is to conduct SGA senate meetings in the absence of the Vice-President. I feel that my experience

Mike Stroud

Over the past two years, the problems that have plagued our Student Senate have been a constant and deciding factor in the overall effectiveness of this organization. These problems may be alleviated by a strengthened leadership in the executive branch of government—namely in the position of Vice-President.

As well as performing the duties of the Vice-President as prescribed in our constitution, the Vice-President's general duties should be two-fold: 1) To organize Senate leadership and act as a legislative liaison between the branches of government and, 2) To serve in an advisory capacity to the President. In organizing Senate leadership, it would be assured that time and effort is not wasted in an attempt at complete representation of the views of our constituency. The V-P must also defend Student Government legislation to other departments of Student Government if it becomes necessary to do so. Additionally, the V-P must serve as an advisor to the President. It is almost always helpful to obtain another opinion regarding a specific issue and the Vice-President should could always be willing to share his views regarding these issues.

With a growing student population at this university, the position of Vice-President will gain in significance. It will be necessary for the V-P to become more aware of budgetary procedures as well as increase his participation in the University of North Carolina Association of Student Government. As a member of the Student Senate, chairman of the Charter committee, member of the Constitution committee and research coordinator for the North Carolina Student Legislature, I feel that I am qualified in every respect to assume the duties of Vice-President and defend the wishes of the students at this University. I urge each of you to vote this week in the SGA elections.

with the senate as chief justice of the Supreme Court, and as one of the members of the Constitution committee, along with the fact that I am vice-president of the UNCW Historical Society, qualifies me for the position that I seek.

With your support, I can guarantee some definite changes to your benefit. As Associate Editor of the Seahawk, I have learned how to get results, and I can put that knowledge to work for you.

Please let me help. Vote Doug Browne-Senior Class President. March 26-27. Thank You, Doug Browne.

Mark Poindexter

My name is Mark Poindexter and I'm running for Senior Class President.

I'm presently serving in the Senate and I take much interest in the Senate and its functions. My role as Senior Class President will be to serve my class and in the Senate, and to preside over the Senate meetings when the chairperson isn't present. I encourage all students to vote and take part in the Mark Poindexter school elections. Thank you for your support. Mark Poindexter

John Ward

I'm John Ward and I'm running for Chief Justice in the upcoming election. Presently, I'm chairman of the parking investigation committee on campus.

This was my first year on the Senate, and from it I gained experience and confidence which is something I lacked earlier this year. I feel by being Chief Justice, I can better influence the senate. I would like to see the student court get more involved, especially pertaining to the parking problem. Many other schools such as UNC-G, NCSU and NC-ST, try their own parking tickets. I am presently working to obtain information to move UNC-W toward this system. Last year alone, the security office collected $6,000. This roughly equals out to $1.50 per student. It makes me wonder just how much the city collected off us poor college students. This is one of my main objectives, but yet there is still another that I hope to overcome.

This year, I've learned that a lot of dorm students have to park as far down as the gym parking lot, which is totally ridiculous! In addition to this fact, there is going to be a $10 increase for parking decal next year with no compensation. Why should we

My name is Steve Griffin and I am running for the office of Chief Justice of the Student Supreme Court.

The Student Supreme Court has jurisdiction in cases involving the constitutionality of all acts of the Student Legislature and student executive officers, all cases involving violation of Student Government legislation by SGA officials, and all impeachment cases.

My duty as Chief Justice is to present majority opinions at the conclusion of the trial, and to assist in judicial procedure whenever necessary, and to insure that such procedures are followed.

I encourage all students to take an active role in UNCW politics and come out and vote on Wed. or Thur.

Thank you for your support.

I, Steve Schmidt, have taken upon myself to run for Sophomore Class President. If elected by you deciding members I will promise nothing except hard work and dedication. I need YOUR SUPPORT! I feel I am well-qualified for the office of Presidency because I have a willingness to co-operate and go out to the students and seek what they want.

I am not a politician so I can't give you a speech of promises I cannot fulfill, nor am I going to deal out farfetched promises like no liver in the cafeteria or straight A's to every Sophomore, because I take this election seriously. The only promise I will make is that I will re-

THE PLACE FOR PEOPLE WITH MORE TASTE THAN MONEY.

Jon Fail, President
Student Government Assn.

President's report

Fail outlines goals of office

Upon taking office on October 15th there were several goals I wished to accomplish: 1. to make student government more businesslike, 2. write standard operating procedures, 3. increase communication, and 4. involve students in student government. Some of these goals have been attained, others have not.

The single largest problem, that of involving students in student government has not been solved. Some of the problem may be attributed to the way in which Americans in general feel toward government. Also that the young are prove to being apathetic in terms of government. Maybe its the beach, I'm not sure. We have gotten more people involved, but many more need to be.

I have always felt that the student apathy on campus was not apathy as much as it is a miscommunication problem. The article which you are reading is an attempt to cure this miscommunication problem. The writing of the standard operating procedures manual is another. In a poll taken this spring, students expressed what they wanted, which helps student government in making decisions. But, the problem has not been eliminated.

In the effort to make student government more business-like, I requested a study be done by a business seminar class. Although I will be out of office when the study is completed, it will help my successor. Student government has also implemented the university and state procedures, so we may conform with the same rules as everyone else. Again, the SGA procedures manual will be of great help to accomplish this goal. As you can see, not one of my goals has been fully met. Some, such as student involvement in student government, is an ongoing problem which may not have a solution. Others, such as the SGA procedures manual, are nearing completion. I do have some suggestions and possible solutions to problems which I have not had time to try. To combat the lack of information on campus, the Seahawk should be a twice weekly paper. This means more costs, but I feel it would be worth it. Another media which deserves attention is WLOZ. The expansion to 150 watts should take place as soon as the FCC, gives it the OK to do so. WLOZ is the students' arm into the community for support and recognition. Emphasis should be placed on course/teacher evaluation's. From a consumer stand point, you deserve more information. Guessing and relying on word of mouth and rumors for something as important as education is not only deplorable, but goes counter to the aims of higher education.

Finally, I'd like to take this opportunity to thank everyone who has worked so hard with me, especially the SGA clerk, Susan Goodwin, and the SGA Treasurer, Jesse Sanders. Both have made my job easier. Being the student body president seems to be an easy job, but in fact has been the single most demanding thing I have ever done. However, do not misunderstand; I have enjoyed every minute of it. This job is something that everyone should have an opportunity to once, but once is enough. Please support whoever wins the upcoming elections. I assure you that they will need it. Again, thank you all for the opportunity and the privilege of being Student Body President.

The All-Nighter

Can you do it all night? Friday night, March 28, you'll get your chance. UNCW's first all-nighter, a night of fun and games open to all students, will be held in Hanover Hall.

Some of the activities going on during the night include a midnight swim, backgammon, blind volleyball, tobacco-spitting, a ruck tournament, spades, and badminton.

Important to remember is that students will be admitted only from 1030-1100 pm on Friday night, however, anyone can leave at any time.

Seahawks, this is your one chance to prove that you can do it all night. Take advantage of it.

Eddie Knox

As of 3:30 pm on Saturday, March 22, the Seahawks of UNCW officially broke out of their early-season scoring slump.

The 'Hawks, who had posted only 17 runs in their first nine outings, bombed Atlantic Christian with nine runs in the second game of their doubleheader, wiping out the Bulldogs, 9-6.

As if to prove Saturday's victory was no fluke, UNCW then unloaded another nine runs on Sunday against N.C. Wesleyan, blanking the Bishops, 9-0.

The 'Hawks' week began slowly, as UNCW lost a cold, wet game Thursday against Eastern Connecticut, bowing to the Warriors, 8-2.

Then in the first game of the doubleheader Saturday, UNCW managed 10 hits, three by Mark Scaff, but only three runs in dropping a 5-3 decision to Atlantic Christian.

The second game of the doubleheader was all green-and-gold, however, as the Seahawks jumped to a 6-0 lead after four innings.

Spearheading the early 'Hawk attack was Ricky Watkins, whose bases-loaded triple in the first gave UNCW a quick 3-0 advantage.

The 'Hawks again scored three runs in both the fourth and sixth innings, with John Milkovits knocking in two runs on a pair of singles. Tom Jones contributed a double and a single to the cause.

Ronald Inman gained the victory, his first against no losses this year, with relief help from Carl Willis.

Sunday's game featured the five-hit pitching of Kenny Smith and the nine-run support given him by his teammates, as the 'Hawks rolled over NC. Wesleyan.

Smith, a former Hoggard High standout has now not allowed an earned run in over 22 innings. He owns a spotless 3-0 mark. (See Athlete of the Week).

The Seahawk barrage began in the fourth, with Tim Whitehead driving in two runs to help push UNCW to a 4-0 lead.

The 'Hawks encore came in the sixth, when they tallied four more runs. Gary Chadwick and Whitehead opened the inning with singles off reliever Kenny Villines. John Tallent then drew a walk off Villines to load the bases with none out.

A wild pitch scored Chadwick, and Ricky Watkins' double brought Whitehead home. John Milkovits' sacrifice fly scored Tallent, and Watkins later scored on a wild pitch, giving UNCW a 8-0 advantage.

Tom Jones scored on a Chadwick ground out after the tripled in the seventh, ending the 'Hawk scoring.

With the back-to-back victories, the Seahawks upped their record to 4-7, with a busy week ahead. UNCW faces a game every day from today until Tuesday at Brooks Field. On the schedule are: Fairfield today at 3 pm, Towson State Sunday at 2 pm, and West Liberty State Monday and Tuesday at 3 pm.

Golf Team defeats Wesleyan, head to Pembroke

Drew Allison

The UNCW Men's Golf Team opened its season with a decisive win over North Carolina Wesleyan, 322-330, on their home course at Echo Farms Country Club.

Jerry McGraw, the team's coach and also the golf pro at Echo Farms, was pleased with how the team played. "We played alright," McGraw said, "we beat a pretty good team." (Wesleyan) McGraw also said that the team played well despite a soggy course and a stiff wind.

Tournament scores are determined by the combined scores of the top four individuals on each team. For the Seahawks, John Gegan, considered to be the longest hitter on the team, had an enviable 77, Buck Porpst, a first year man on the team, shot a 79, Bob Mailloux, a freshman who came here from East Angus, Canada, shot an 82, and Don Torres, a local Laney High School graduate, also had an 82.

The team has five tournaments remaining in the season. Coach McGraw doesn't think that the team's potential has reached its peak yet. "Theye're going to have to start shooting around 300, they have the ability to do it," McGraw said, "its just a matter of achieving it."

The golf team travels next to the Pembroke Invitational, a two day tournament. Coach McGraw feels that if the team plays well, and shoots around the 300 mark, then they can win the tournament.

Athlete of the Week - Ken Smith

Sports Editor

Ken Smith, a former Hoggard High School standout, has been chosen as the Athlete of the Week for his unblemished 3-0 record and a staggering 0.00 era in over 22 innings of action.

In action this week Smith shut-out North Carolina Wesleyan by a 9-0 score. It was also his first complete collegiate game. He has also won all three of his starts at pitcher this year. He owns three of the baseball team's four victories.

Smith was one of Coach Brooks' prize recruits this season, and was touted as a hard throwing left-hander from Hoggard. He posted an 9-2 record in his senior year.

Among his wins this season, he has defeated Clemson University by a 3-1 score. Eastern Connecticut (5-4), and N.C. Wesleyan (9-0). The Clemson win was the most prestigious by the team thus far.

Softball team loses to State, hopes to rebound against Pembroke

Softballer's work on base running in early spring

Harold Thompson

Last week the UNCW Women's Softball team dropped a doubleheader to North Carolina State by an 8-0 and 5-0 scores. However, this loss should not interfere with first year coach, Debbie Dowd's plans.

Dowd hopes to carry on the 'Hawks winning tradition in softball at UNCW. Last season the team posted a 25-9 record, however, only five returnees from last spring are on the team this season. Also, last year's mark was the best of all varsity sports at UNCW.

The loss to State in Raleigh last Thursday didn't shake Dowd, who thought that her freshmen ladden team would need time to jell before taking on a Division 1 school.

Dowd is a graduate of Glasborough State in New Jersey and received her masters at Arizona State University, while teaching and coaching for three years before going to ASU. At Arizona, she was the assistant coach on a team that went to national finals in 1979.

Dowd looks at her young squad and points out that many are very good athletes and have the desire to work at the game. "I'm most pleased with the girls hard work and attitudes. Everyone seems to get along very well. Our forte this season will be heady play with a lot of hustle," stated Dowd.

Dowd hopes to take a lot of chances this spring and upset some of the larger schools on the schedule. "I'll like to start out taking gambles, especially against Division 1 schools. We have some fast runners and we should be able to score a lot of runs," said Dowd. "The early part of the season is tough, many teams are in transition and I hope we can hold our own."

The spring should be kind to the women's softball team as Joy Champion and Susan Sprivey, and pitchers Cassandra Sidberry and Alisa Bryant head up an enthusiastic and young squad.

The Lady 'Hawks will play Pembroke State on Friday at 3 and Elon College on Saturday at 1. Both games will be played here.

O'Koren, Gminski face UNCW

Due to scheduling conflicts, the third Fellowship of Christian Athletes and Brigade Boy's Club, all-star game has been switched from March 28 to April 4.

FCA spokesman Bob Warwick, announced the changes to guarantee the participation of All-Americans, Mike Gminski of Duke and Mike O'Koren of North Carolina. Both are scheduled to compete in the Pizza Hut Classic, which will be held this weekend. With the changes both players will have a chance to rest.

The event will be held in Trask Coliseum on April 4, at 8 p.m. Also, there will be a slam dunk competition prior to the feature game and the participants will also compete.

Among the other notable players committed to attend are John Virgil of North Carolina; Bob Bender and Jim Corrigan of Duke; and John Hendler, David Morris, and Benny McKaig of Wake Forest.

The Seahawk seniors - Garry Cooper, John Haskins and Barry Taylor, will represent UNCW.

Admission is $2.50.

Area stand-out signs with Lady 'Hawks

Sports Editor

Coach Christoph has signed the first of several possible recruits for next fall's women's basketball team. Sherri Crumpler from Clinton, North Carolina was the first to give UNCW the nod for next year.

Crumpler, from Union High School, is a 5'11" forward/center who scored 20 a game last season, while grabbing 16 rebounds. She is able to touch the rim and is working toward dunking the ball, maybe even next fall.

While at Union, Crumpler was voted to numerous all-star teams and is considered one of North Carolina's blue-chippers. Christoph is very enthusiastic about the signing and feels she will help the team immediately and give the Lady 'Hawks the added board strength that it lacked last season. "She has excellent leadership qualities and handles the ball like a guard, shoots like a forward, and plays tough enough inside to be a center."

"Crumpler is gifted with a lot of god-given natural talent, the qualities that are uncoachable. She also was the number one kid on my recruiting list and I'm very pleased," said Christoph.

McKoy, Timmons sign for next fall

Sports Editor

This week Coach Mel Gibson announced the signing of two guards for next fall, Al McKoy and Edward Timmons. Gibson referred to the recruiting of guards for the 8C campaign as "essential". With the loss of Barry Taylor, the UNCW Men's Basketball team was faced with a lack of floor leadership and consistent outside scoring.

To replace the scoring of B.T., Gibson signed McKoy, a former Hoggard High School star. In his senior year, McKoy won the coveted Jim Hebbe Award, and was the stall-worth of the Hoggard basketball program. However, he comes to UNCW from Massanutten Academy in Virginia. While at the prep school McKoy scored 20 points a game and was noted for his accurate shooting from the outside. Coach Holdt considers him a "great asset" and at 6'3" he should provide the 'Hawks with height.

Timmons is Gibson's second signee, from Lees-McRae Junior College in Banner Elk, North Carolina. While at LMJC he was voted All-American among junior colleges. Also, he was voted MVP and Player of the Year in their conference. Timmons averaged 18 points a game and six assist last year.

"Timmons is a combination of Bobby Martin and Barry Taylor," said Holdt.

Both McKoy and Timmons will be valuable additions to the Seahawks and both bring with them outstanding credentials.

Netters bomb UNCG, break out of early season slump.

Eddie Knox

At long last, Coach Larry Honeycutt has found an oasis in that desert known as UNCW tennis.

The Seahawks, 1-7 after their first eight matches, took out their frustrations on UNC-Greensboro Saturday to sweep all six singles matches and claim two of three doubles matches.

Even after suffering three 5-4 losses earlier in the season, Coach Honeycutt remained optimistic towards his netters chances for a winning season.

"Sure, we play an extremely tough early season schedule, but I feel as though it helps us later, and it's a good exposure for the team."

"When you're losing, you have to look on the bright side. Had those close matches gone our way, we'd be 5-4 now."

Keying UNCW in the Spartan match Saturday was the play of the three freshmen in the 'Hawks starting six. No. 2 seed John Shackelford, no. 4 seed Lance Thompson, and no. 6 seed Joey Everidge all swept their singles matches against UNCG, and all did so decisively.

"There's nothing like winning", says Coach Honeycutt, and the Seahawks will try to continue their winning ways today against N.C. Wesleyan here at 2:30 pm.

Seaside Jam result of hard work by Program Board

by Scott Sibley

It takes many hours of planning and preparing to put together a dance or concert. The work is done by the hard working members of the Program Board. In the case of the Seaside Jam, they have been putting in the hours.

It usually takes the Dance Committee of the Program Board 3 or 4 weeks to put one dance or party together. The block party held on campus last semester took 3 1/2 months to plan. Certain problems must be solved in planning a dance or party such as who the band will be, the type and amount of beverages, the stage setup, the place, and the cost.

Mark Davis, Chairman of the Dance Committee, explained that in every dance certain precautions must be taken to insure a fun as well as a safe time. Fire lanes and exits must be established and kept clear, campus security must be informed, and all I.D.'s must be checked. I.D.'s must be checked to prevent nonstudents from entering and to check ages. "A fire marshal or ABC officer may enter a party or dance at any time and pull the plug, so we must take these precautions," explains Mark.

The Program Board not only plans a dance or party but must get permission from the administration to carry it out. They also do all the decorating and a majority of the cleaning afterwards.

In their planning the Program Board tries to schedule a wide variety of music and entertainment for all tastes, including rock, disco, blue grass, beach, and some hard rock. The availability and price of the entertainment affects the types and number of dances and parties each semester.

This year The Program Board has been planning a large outdoor concert and party to be known as The Seaside Jam. It will be comparable to N.C. State's Zoo Day. The Seaside Jam will be a Save the Whales benefit, the first on the east coast. It is scheduled for April 26 from 12 noon until dusk on Brooks field. Three to 6 bands are expected to perform. Activities will include a helium filled Sperm Whale, a professional frisbee team, para-troopers, and booths set up by the clubs on campus as well as other special activities. There will also be food and concessions. The Seaside Jam will possess a carnival type atmosphere and is free to all students!

Everyone is encouraged to spend the entire day and have fun. If the Seaside Jam is a success then it will grow in the future and become bigger and better. Everyone is needed to make the 1st annual Seaside Jam a success!

Student Infirmary; quick diagnosis and treatment

by Julie Russ

Can't figure out what that funny rash on your upper body might be? For a quick diagnosis and treatment, a visit to UNCW's student infirmary would be a student's first choice. According to Catherine Vangellow, a registered Physician's Assistant and a staffer at the infirmary, all types of illnesses are dealt with on the premises.

"We see students with sprains, cuts, colds, a little of everything," states Ms. Vangellow. "We treat venereal disease, do pregnancy testing, sometimes a little counselling when it seems necessary." Sometimes students are referred to the doctors at Wilmington Health Associates, an offshoot of the Wilmington Internal Medicine Practice, which operates the Student Health Center. However, a patient must be treated at the infirmary before he can be referred to WHA offices.

In addition to Vangellow, Linda Jasinski, a family nurse practitioner, is also on duty at the clinic. Infirmary hours are from 8:30 a.m.-2:00 p.m., "but there is usually someone around after 2 o'clock—for a little while, at least," explains Vangellow.

Commented Vangellow, "I'd like to emphasize that we do conduct pregnancy testing here at the clinic, and we also do family-planning counselling, in addition to women's health-care problems." Vangellow feels there is a need for a family-planning service, in view of the rising number of unwanted pregnancies on campus. "Any plans for that type of health care are tentative," she stresses, due to budgeting problems, and

NOT due to administrative opposition.

Also included among the clinic's services are allergy injections. Any student wishing relief from troublesome allergy symptoms should plan to remain in the infirmary for twenty minutes post-injection, to insure that there are no adverse effects from the medication. "It's just a precaution," adds Vangellow.

Located in the New Dorm "to the right as you come in the lobby," directs Vangellow, the infirmary is there for the benefit of students. "Faculty and staff members are not treated here—just the student body," remarks Jasinski. Facilities include individual examining rooms and up-to-date equipment. Any student with health problems is welcome to drop by during clinic hours.

English Department offers four new courses

by Sherry Matthews

Four new English courses: The Supernatural in Literature, Writing for Teachers, Professional Writing, and Modern Folk Narrative, will be taught at UNCW. The Supernatural in Literature will be offered the first session of summer school, while the others will be taught in the fall.

The Supernatural in Literature, which will be taught by Dr. James Collier, deals with ghost, vampires, the occult and the literature written about them.

The course's primary focus will be on short stories written in the 19th and 20th centuries that deal with those subjects, with some novels, such as, Dracula, to read.

Writing for Teachers, which will be taught by Dr. Joanne Sieple, is designed to meet the needs of prospective teachers of all school subjects (K-12).

The aims of this course will be to present practical ways for developing student's abilities to write well in a variety of classroom situations and to offer experience in meeting the writing demands that teachers themselves often face.

The second course, Professional Writing, will be taught by Dr. Lil Brannon. It is a course in writing and preparing manuscripts for publication. Professional Writing will be aimed at helping writers generate, develop, organize ideas, and prepare manuscripts which conform to the professional standards of particular journals. This course is mainly aimed at advanced writers.

The last course, Modern Folk Narrative, will be taught by Dr. Robert Byington. This course will be aimed at analyzing and comparing tales of buried treasure, how to evaluate personal accounts of flying saucers, ghost, and mysterious lights and how legends about Kentucky Fried rats, alligators in sewers, and vanishing hitchhikers play the same role as supernatural myths in less advanced cultures.

Writing for Teachers will be offered at 10:00 on Tuesday and Thursdays; Professional Writing will be offered at 9:30 on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday; and Modern Folk Narrative will be offered at 10:00 on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

Composer James Burke to present Senior recital March 30

by Wendy Robbins

Few people totally dedicate themselves to their jobs, hobbies and other interests. James Burke, a music major at UNCW, is an exception. His life is "encompassed" by music. "Music is an outlet for my emotions and thinking processes," he says. "It really enriches my life, it gives me a reason to go on. It fills a void. People are always telling me, 'You're not going to make money in music.' I know that. It takes money to live but money is certainly not the definition of life itself. I'm into music for the enriching value it gives me as a person. These days that's something we all need."

Burke was exposed to music early in life. "I was brought up in a church school," he explains. "All the boys had to be in the choir. We would sing in a great big cathedral. It was a very impressive and inspirational building."

He mainly plays the keyboard instruments, especially the organ and harpsichord, but he also plays the violin and double bass. He is a composer as well. Dr. Frank Wiley is Burke's former composition teacher. Now he is studying under Dr. David Kechley. Last year, he received a $200 scholarship on the basis of musical excellence for his composition entitled Sonata for Violin and Piano. "A composer should be a scientist as well as a dramatist and an artist," contends Burke. "I started composing around the age of ten or eleven and I've done it ever since. By the age of twelve I was writing polyphonic motets. Through high school I was really stified. I had quite a bit of trouble getting my pieces played. I was unplayed until I got into college."

On Sunday, March 30 at 8 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium, Burke will present a Senior Recital in composition. Admission is free. The program will feature Intonazione (1976) with Ivey James at the piano; Sonata for Violin and Piano (1978), performed by Mr. Micheal Smith and Dr. Sherrill Martin; Concerto for Piano and String Orchestra (1980), with Dr. Richard Deas as soloist and Dr. David Kechley as conductor; Kyrie (1980), from Missa Apostolorum, performed by the UNCW Concert Choir and the University New Music Ensemble, conducted by Dr. Joe Hickman. Also included in the program are Operator (1977), on magnetic tape, and Shattered Images (1980), a composition for film and tape.

Burke started experimenting with films in his second year of college. "I started out in film in a strange way," he says. "A good friend and I were just messing around. We were looking at some old photos and suddenly an idea struck. We pulled our ideas together and made a film. He later went on to filmmaking. We both took up the same direction, he more intensely and me more subdued. Then Dr. Rogers and I got together one semester and started working on the idea of making films. The idea caught on. I guess I can take the position as UNCW's first filmmaker. I haven't shown too many of my films. I don't want them to get in the way of music composing. I'd rather have people appreciate me for my music."

Shattered Images, Burke's 16mm film and magnetic tape composition, uses "sophisticated" electronic music techniques. Operator, a magnetic tape recording, is a "joke," Burke says. "It's not serious. One thing I like is a good joke once in a while. I like to laugh because it deviates from pressures. My written pieces are usually rather serious. My tapes usually have some humor in them."

Burke spends most of his time—and most of his money—on music. He doesn't mind it, however, because he is devoted to the art of making music. "Actually, in my scholastic life, music has consumed every bit of money I've had," he states. "Filmmaking, on the other hand, is even more expensive. I haven't ever gone into debt, but I don't have a car and I don't buy a lot of the things everybody else buys. When I get money, instead of buying a new pair of shoes, I go buy new film, tapes or something like that. It's all-consuming yet it's very satisfying."

Billy Joel: GLASS HOUSES not bad for piano man

When Billy Joel released his 1977 jewel THE STRANGER, the album that made him a "star," he really opened Pandora's box. Suddenly gone were the days of being an opening act. It quickly became a matter of Joel naming his own price and having his music squeaking out over any muzak system, U.S.A. Yes sir, he really let himself in for it: money, fame, recognition. The latter quality was overdue and well-deserved, but THE STRANGER will probably haunt Joel somewhat as all he does will more than likely be compared to it. It's hardly fair, but like corrupt politicians, it's simply a way of life.

GLASS HOUSES, Billy Joel's newest release, is not THE STRANGER. It was not meant to be THE STRANGER. It was meant to be a good rock 'n' roll album, which is exactly what it is. Some of the musicians on this LP should be familiar to Joel fans. Included in the band are old hands Liberty DeVito (drums), Doug Stegmeyer (bass), and Richie Cannata (saxophones, organ, flutes). Newcomers David Brown (lead guitar), and Russell Javors (rhythm guitar) are on hand to attempt to fill the void left by jazz guitarist Steve Khan. As usual, Phil Ramone handled the production, but not with his usual flair, as the recording is shallow in places. That's not to say that the overall sound is not good; it's simply not up to Ramone's usual standards.

The single selection, "You May Be Right," opens the first side. It contains a nice sax solo, courtesy of Mr. Cannata, and the song itself sounds faintly reminiscent of "Paperback Writer."

This fast mover leads into "Sometimes a Fantasy," a song which employs Buddy Holly phrasing in a Jerry Lee Lewis tone. Joel continues the pace while contributing some enjoyable synthesizer work. "Don't Ask Why" follows with maracas lending a latin feel to this up-tempo acoustic number. The rock returns with a song appropriately entitled "It's Still Rock and Roll To Me." This fifties sounding effort showcases tons of rhymes in an attempt to mention many of the things held dear in that era such as cruising and orange pants. "All For Leyna" closes the side on a dramatic note as this song is dynamic much in the manner of "Until the Night" from Joel's 52nd Street LP.

The second side begins with "I Don't Want To Be Alone," a moderately paced melody that serves as an intro into "Sleeping With The Television On." This song is a clear illustration of a good song that could've been made better by the presence of one Steve Khan. Instead of a strong lead, Cannata plays an organ complete with that Farfisa sound that is currently undergoing a revival thanks to the likes of Elvis Costello. "C'etait Toi" or "You Were The One" is one of two love songs on the album, and is a welcome inclusion. "Close to the Borderline" is a lot like "It's Still Rock and Roll To Me" in the sense that it has lots of end rhymes and rocks in general. The album ends in McCartneyesque in composition and phrasing, and this is fitting as this is the LP's other love song. With a touch of Paulie, it has to be good.

GLASS HOUSES is an enjoyable work. Joel fans will undoubtedly like it, but others may require several listens before issuing a seal of approval. The album's main criticism is the absence of Steve Khan or someone of comparable talent. Otherwise, GLASS HOUSES is a consistently solid offering. As with all of his records, Joel wrote all of the songs while playing piano, synthesizer, accordion and harmonica. This album may not have multiple hit singles to send its sales spiraling onwards and upwards, but now that Billy Joel has the artistic freedom to do exactly what he wants it doesn't matter because he'll continue to please himself and the fans that appreciated him before THE STRANGER. Not bad for a piano man. He's come a long way from Cold Spring Harbor.

Commercials pose limit to human cool

Some of my friends may not speak to me after this column, but it's gotta be said....

There we sat, Brother and me, watching the Midnight Special (hey, I can think of worse dates!) Suddenly there came a (substitute father/boyfriend/priest for brother) and I bet it's caused more spastic choking than the toughest Frito ever made. Girls, we can at least try to look WISE, for Pete's sake, but what about the guys? One minute they're less maybe it's scratch and sniff underwear, which is just dumb enough to be cute!)

How about those nifty little early-pregnancy tests? Maybe these commercials are supposed to serve as a last-ditch warning to couples smuggled up in front of the tube. Never fear, ice water couldn't kill the mood more effectively!

And yes, I've seen the ads for Crutex, or whatever they call the stuff that cures the itches in men. But at least the guys are straightforward: they come right out and tell you what the gunk is FOR, instead of throwing out sugary euphemisms that fool absolutely no one.

Oh well, to get back to the Midnight Special—I never did. Even Tom Petty couldn't make up for that kind of intermission, so off went the tube and on went the stereo. Which was a wiser choice, anyway...I mean, even Top 40 isn't THAT tacky!

watching Wolfman Jack, and three seconds later some whispering woman is telling them to try Midol. Confused? No wonder!

The thing I hate most about these commercials is their "just between you 'n' me" attitude. When I want to rap about feminine hygiene, I'll call my mother and get the real scoop. And some of those PRODUCTS—!! I don't know about you, but I'm not going to use strawberry-flavored ANYTHING on my body (un-string of commercials, but that's life. Being patient Americans, we settled back and watched our toenails grow. Then—bingo! A lovely blonde lady (who looked like she should have known better) was purring, "Have you ever considered a disposable douche?" There is a limit to the human cool: Brother quietly vanished while yours truly sat and nursed a terminal blush.

Now, really! I KNOW the above has happened to every last one of you

My name is Arthur Hohnsbehn and I'm running for Rep at-large in the SGA. The reason I'm running for this office is to serve the students that attend UNCW. Last year I was attending East Carolina and I have seen a SGA that has a hard time keeping up with things at a growing school like East Carolina. For example funding of clubs and student activities each year become harder because of new clubs that need funding and they would not use their funds wisely. UNCW is also a growing school and I would see to it that the SGA would keep ahead of this growth to give you the students of UNCW the best service possible.

Mr. Joseph Capbell of the Financial Aid Office also asked that any student who is planning to attend summer school and is receiving financial aid should come by and pick up their supplement papers.

All students who are considering financial aid or are already receiving it should go to the Financial Aid Office located in the Administration Building as soon as possible.

The UNCW Psychology Club would like to thank everyone who participated in their AM-FM Clock Radio Raffle. They reached their quota for Caswell Center and beyond.

sure are two advantages that will help him deal with the financial situation.

Pete Johnson, the current Attorney General, said he wants to "make a bridge between the student government and the student body." To achieve this, he said that he would like for a suggestion box to be put out for the students. He also wants a student directory published. Another way to establish "closer contact with the students," he stated, is to "support anything that will strengthen the media." One specific proposal he made regarding this was increasing the wattage of WLOZ to 150 watts, so the radio station "can cover a greater area."

cussed but no action was taken.

It seems the SGA will have to re-work the current system, eliminate entirely the use of computers, join the University's computerized system, or hook up a separate computer system for the SGA. According to Fail, these are the four options available to the SGA.

In other Senate action, the Finance committee made three recommendations that met the approval of the Senate.

Student Legal Services was dissolved due to insufficient demand for legal services. Reasons cited were that the population of UNCW is not large enough to "warrant student legal services." The general account increased by nearly $2400 as the result of unnecessary programs.

The charter of the UNCW Fishing Club was revoked after the club over-extended themselves in their club activities.

WLOZ was allocated $500 to alleviate operations from the red.

The Senate decisions were unanimous in favor of the three recommendations and the meeting was adjourned at 7:30.

According to Gurganous, campus police were summoned immediately, and a description of the assailant was obtained. He was reported to have driven a green Volkswagen, and armed with this information the case was investigated the next day, March 20. At the end of the day, Wilmington police were able to report an arrest of a suspect, who subsequently confessed to the crime. He was jailed on $500 bond and charged with firing a weapon in a building and damaging university property.

Commented Gurganous, "The students who witnessed the incident were a little shaken. This is the first time a gun has been used to threaten someone on this campus. I urge all students to be more observant of the people around them, and to be wary of non-students who obviously don't belong on campus. It is against UNCW's policy to allow non-students to use the gym, but this is a rule that is hard to enforce because there are so many people coming and going. Students should be aware of the people around them."

UNCW chosen to be first Campus in Nation With ABC Store

Dr. Wagoner supports move to establish ABC store on campus.

UNCW students, you've asked for it, and you've finally gotten it. That's right, the nation's first campus ABC store is to be built on the Wilmington campus, with construction beginning within the month.

The reality of the ABC store came about after the results of the students drinking poll were published in last year's Seacrock. It was found that, per capita, Seahawks drank more Jack Daniels, gulped more Southern Comfort, swigged more Seagram's 7, and downed more Bacardi than any other student population in the country. Armed with this knowledge, the state Alcoholic Beverage Control Board gave the go-ahead for construction, which is expected to pour over 20,000 dollars worth of revenue into the New Hanover County tax budget, the first year alone.

William Friday, president of the UNC system, stated in a press conference recently that at first he was "shocked and appalled" by the idea, but soon came to realize that "to keep up with other systems (such as the California system, where drug booths dot the campuses), we need a liquor store on every campus".

The state legislature, which was thought by many to be a stumbling block in the passage of the liquor-on-campus bill, passed the action decisively, obviously realizing the revenues which could be obtained.

Of course, all patrons must be at least 21 years old. This, however, may be difficult to enforce, as students themselves will be the cashiers. The state legislature, however, hopes the school's honor code will morally obligate the cashier on duty to sell only to those 21.

Due to pressure from the Southern Baptist Convention, one new feature of the campus liquor store will be the introduction of religious music played over the muzak system.

TRASK Coliseum to be renamed TRASK Mausoleum

The Board of Trustees announced late last night that Raiford G. Trask Coliseum has been renamed to Raiford G. Trask Mausoleum. This move has been anticipated by university officials for several weeks.

The reason for the renaming stems from the poor turn-out at university sponsored events, in the Trask complex. The Building and Grounds Committee officially proposed the name change after community opinion polls showed that a gimmick would be the most effective way to raise the attendance figures.

Among the alternative names under consideration by the committee were: Dead-beat Coliseum, We-Nee-a-Miracle Stadium, and Help-we-are losing-money Coliseum. After two days of heated debate in the Bahamas, during the annual board meeting, a Trustee's spokesman announced that Trask Mausoleum would be the name used.

Trask Mausoleum has been the scene of many under-attended events.

"It will bring notoriety to the university and stimulate community involvement, and hopefully increase attendance to the facility in the upcoming year," said the spokesman. Last year, the average attendance for home basketball games was less than one-third capacity.

In addition to the name change, a committee has been formed to build a tribute to Trask and an artificial sarcophagus will be put on display with a sound and light show. "If the King Tut exhibit made more than 100 million dollars, surely we can make at least one million," added the spokesman.

Inside officials have stated adamantly that this will be a shrine and not a cheap shot just to draw morbid or otherwise preverse individuals.

Construction cost have been estimated at ten thousand dollars and work will begin on the project during the summer.

Let's Get Naked Day planned

Spring has sprung; and as flowers have bloomed, so have UNCW's youngest-er's libidos. That's why Let's Get Naked Day has been set for April 11.

This is the first year for the event, sponsored by Playboy International. As the name suggests, all students and faculty should report to class in the buff, however, ties for guys and bonnets for girls are optional.

As Mario Casilli of Playboy stated, "this is definitely not an exhibitionist thing, it is simply a chance for young people to realize the beauty of the human body."

At 2 pm on top of the baseball dugouts, a Miss Nude UNCW will be chosen by Casilli and Nora Gallagher, A Playboy feature writer. The winner will receive 500 dollars and a year's subscription to Playboy.

A Mr. Nude UNCW contest will also be held, and each contestant is asked to bring his own yardstick to the event, which will follow the ladies contest.

The evening's final will be a gala orgy, to be held in the pub. There is no entrance fee, but stamina is a desirable quality.

Victory celebration for newly elected campus idiot-Dave Kermon

During a victory celebration for newly elected campus idiot, Dave Kermon astounded the academic world in only his first day in office.

In a surprising move, Kermon announced that several of his campaign initiatives have already begun to take shape in the form of proposed amendments to the university charter. Among the proposals listed by Kermon in his forty-five minute speech, were, the abolition of the current grading system, the removal of all plumbing in the administrative building, the construction of a ninety-foot, nude statue of Venus on the campus lawn, and the renovation of the cafeteria.

His speech was warmly received by nearly 1000 students and janitorial personnel. The UNCW administration would not comment on the new proposals, however, many took what could be their last visit to the restroom.

Kermon began his speech, entitled- "The Degeregation of America's University Students." Kermon then began laughing hysterically explaining that he didn't even know what the title meant. "It took me two days to learn how to pronounce the title. At present I'm still working closely with my all female staff to comprehend the basic meaning of my prepared speech."

Immediately following his introduction, Kermon wasted no time in announcing his foremost proposal. As he stated, "I'm fed up with this shit, I'm not going to take it anymore."

The grading system here at UNCW is the most irregular system I have ever encountered in my previous ten days of higher learning."

"I am left with no choice but to demand that the university abolish the grading system. It is unfair and just too damned difficult for me to pass," said

Kermon. However, he pointed out that even Einstein could not pass his high school math exam.

The next point Kermon addressed on his "top ten most needed at this university list" was the segregated bathrooms in the administration building. Quipped Kermon, "Let them use the community toilet like the rest of the world." This point received a standing ovation and many of the blinds in the administrative building were lowered to half mast. Kermon ended this point stating, "The era of segregation is over."

Kermon suggested that many of these restrooms could be put to perfect use for offices, especially for the chancellor and the deans.

The next point Kermon addressed was that of erecting, on the front campus lawn, a ninety-foot statue of the nude Venus. "It will be perfect for setting, especially for possible segments of 'Real People' and 'That's Incredible', the university needs a hallmark. It has to be something visible to the public and be a definitive state about UNCW campus life," said Kermon.

Asked why he choose the nude Venus, Kermon replied, "the statue looks like one of my dates."

At this point, he relieved himself by the oak tree in front of the administrative building. Obviously, a symbolic gesture of his feelings for the administration.

The final point Kermon spoke on was the school cafeteria. "The building itself should be burned and they should start over from scratch. It's impossible to salvage that sewer, and I really wish that it wasn't so. When I enrolled here, I had such high hopes, that at least the food would be good," said Kermon.

Kermon left the platform and all in attendance rose up and chanted Mesiah, Mesiah until he vanished from sight.

All that remained was his openness and the smell of his two-year old toga.

MOSCOW WILMINGTON

White House spokesman Hodding Carter announced today that Wilmington, N.C. has been chosen as the site for the alternate Summer Olympics.

The move, endorsed by President Carter, was widely supported by world leaders. Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Great Britain termed it "a wonderful suggestion" which she was "completely satisfied with".

Canada's Trudeau joined in the accolades. "Having spent many of my formative years in Wilmington, I of course came to love the city, and couldn't possibly suggest a better site".

However, when told that the Wilmington in question was located in North Carolina, and not in Delaware as he had supposed, Trudeau exclaimed "Wilmington, North Carolina? Sounds quite like the end of the earth to me".

The Olympic Village, and most of the events, will be located on the campus of UNC-Wilmington, where the athletes will be housed in the elegant and spacious Galloway and Belk dorms, vacated for the summer by students.

The swimming events will be held in the relatively new UNCW facilities, and all track and field events will also take place on the athletic field.

Basketball teams from around the world will compete for the Gold in UNCW's Hanover Hall Gymnasium. Although Trask Gymnasium, also on campus, is by far the better facility, a visit recently by The Royal Lippizan Stallions left an odor which the janitorial crew has been unable to remove, and which UNCW head basketball coach Mel Gison called "an odor not conducive to basketball".

Wilmington's proximity to the Atlantic Ocean prompted President Carter also yesterday to introduce a new sport into this year's Olympics. Teams from 24 countries have already committed themselves to go for the Gold in Shagging, a peculiar form of dancing popular in this seaside city.

The official Soviet newspaper Pravda called President Carter's decision "a catastrophe" and "an insult to the Soviet people". The Soviets plan to continue with preparations for their Summer Olympics although as of now only East Germany, Cuba, and the Yuba tribe of Outer Mongolia have sent a definite yes to the Russians.

Gabriel to State case for football

In a telephone interview with the ex-Los Angeles Rams quarterback, Roman Gabriel announced that he would return to the Wilmington area to establish a football tradition at UNCW.

"I realize that the administration has been giving the students at UNCW hell about starting a Division III football team. They are caught up in a fantasy, that if they stall or ignore the present drive by the students for a football team it will just go away."

"It's time they took their heads out of the sand and realized what a football team could do for the university and the student moral," said Gabriel.

Gabriel spoke these words from his Las Vegas penthouse suite, where he is doing a telethon for underprivileged children. He has been touring the country, dedicating his time to needy causes.

"Look, I realize that the initial investment will cost some money, but look at what it could do in three years. Wilmington is ready for the big sport. People need an alternative to the present sports and people will support such a sport.

"I'm coming to Wilmington next month to work an agreement with the administration and state the case for football," said Gabriel.

Gabriel mentioned that he will bring with him Sonny Jerguson, the ex-Washington Redskins quarterback. "I'll probably have to pick him up on my way down there. He just lost his license because of driving under the influence," said Gabriel.

I have spoken to a lot of people in the Wilmington area and I'm more convinced now than ever that the time to move is now. If the university doesn't act now it will be an insult not only to me but to the athletic world," said Gabriel.

Football Club prepares for the arrival of the "Gabe."

UNCW Baseball Team to face Major league All-Stars

After ripping through their 30 game schedule undefeated and unscored upon, the UNCW Seahawks, under Head Coach Bill Brooks, have been invited to play a fund raiser against the Major League All-Stars, here in Wilmington.

Coach Brooks, who accepted the invitation with less than great joy, offered this reason, "I suppose Billy (Martin, manager of the Oakland A's and the All-Star team) realized he had us in a bind. If we refused to play, he could say we were scared. If we win, it's no big deal, we were supposed to. If we lose, however, there goes our reputation."

The Seahawks, who hit .534 against all opponents, had two .750 hitters this season. Rick Watkins, DH and outfielder, had 76 hits in 102 at bats, while Gary Chadwick, Seahawk third baseman, slapped 69 hits in 88 at bats.

Kenny Smith, a sensational freshman pitcher from Hoggard High in Wilmington, hurled 8 perfect games on his way to a perfect 13-0 record. His other 5 victories were only no-hitters.

Coach Brooks, who had never before coached the 'Hawks to a perfect record, told of Martin's initial refusal to play in Wilmington.

"When I first talked to Billy the other day, he insisted that we play the game on a neutral site. I told him it was Wilmington or nothing. The students deserve another chance to see us one more time.

The Major League All-Star's roster includes the likes of Dave Parker, Jim Rice, Reggie Jackson, Tom Seaver, and Nolan Ryan. The 'Hawks, however, are prohibitive favorites. Game time is 2:00 p.m. on April 29.

Sampson to sign with Seahawk's

An unidentified, inside source has revealed to the Seahawk that tomorrow's scheduled press conference by Coach Mel Gibson will "alter the course of UNCW athletics for years to come."

Speculation in the Cape Fear area, has it that Gibson will step down as the head basketball coach and that his faithful assistant Rick Holdt will be offered the vacant position.

However, the unidentified source has stated that this is not the case at all, "Gibson is not resigning. This is only a smoke screen to hide the biggest recruiting 'coo' of the decade."

"Gibson has not been talking to the press for several weeks, to ensure that his accomplishment will not be put in jeopardy. He has signed 7'4" Ralph Sampson of Virginia," stated the source.

Sampson was most recently named as the most valuable player in the N.I.T. tournament held last month. This past season he averaged 18 points a game and 9 rebounds an outing.

While in high school, Sampson was touted as the next Jabbar or Walton. Pro Scouts have sta-

Mel Gibson and Rick Holdt will no longer have to worry ted repeatedly that Sampson could go hardship draft and sign in the seven figures if he wanted.

To postpone the inevitable bidding war, Sampson has delayed his entrance into the pro ranks to achieve his goal of doing what he terms, "an humanitarian act which will be long remembered after I hang up my sneakers."

Sampson has openly been critical of the Terry Holland system at Virginia since early January. "Sampson began looking for another school to transfer to and UNCW was his choice because he wants to help the school and learn how to surf," stated the source.

Because Holland would not finance a trip for Sampson to Hawaii, to watch the Grand Masters Surfing Championship last December, he has decided that Virginia has in his words, "underestimated my value to the school and the ACC."

The inside source has also stated that along with the signing of Sampson a package deal will be worked out for him.

The package deal will include the admission of four of his closest companions to this school, two free vacations to Hawaii for surfing and 20 percent of the total season gates receipts. Of course, the customary Porsche, the condominium at Wrightsville Beach and season tickets to the Women's basketball games will also be extended to him.

When Gibson was approached with this information he smiled and said, "no comment."

Parking Stickers Reach Record high Next year

The parking situation at UNCW has reached crisis proportions—students have been forced to park more than one car in a parking space. And to top that off, parking stickers will be $200 next year.

"The increased enrollment this year has heightened the situation," said Chief of Campus Police Suonagrug. "Students are literally parking all over each other. It all stacks up to the fact that there are so many students driving cars. The situation, however, has been alleviated somewhat because many students own compact cars, which saves space."

"I hate this economized parking system," stated a frustrated student. "It's inconvenient I had to use stilts to get to my car."

Students should remember to be careful when they park. Yesterday afternoon, a student was dealt a crushing blow when fifty people parked on top of him before he could get out of his car. "Get off my back!" the student repeatedly screamed. To this date, he is still trapped in his car.

When asked how the money from the $200 parking stickers will be used, Suonagrug stated: "It will be used to repair Dr. Yollam's plumbing system, which continually springs leaks."

An attempt to build a parking deck created some problems for UNCW students.

Four thousand die after dinner Shah's spleen suspected cause

Four thousand UNCW students died suddenly from cancer after they ate their lunch yesterday—a lunch that consisted of pickled Shah's spleen, fried bat brains and boiled hydra tentacles.

"We know that the cancer was caused by the food they ate," said Mr. Bot U. Lism, a spokesman for the Food and Drug Administration. "But we've got to single out which foodstuff caused it. That means we've got to run three separate tests."

Each of the three substances the students ate—the spleen, the brains, and the tentacles—will be given to three test groups, according to Mr. Lism. One group will eat only spleen, one only brains, and one only tentacles.

"We will determine which foodstuff was contaminated by which group dies," explained Mr. Lism. "For example, if the group that ate the Shah's spleen dies, then we'll know that it was the spleen that caused the cancer."

Late yesterday afternoon, UNCW's Student Government Association met in an emergency session and voted to make the Administration participate in the FDA's tests.

PLAYBOY in Search of North Carolina bathing beauties

The Playboy organizations under the director of Hugh Hefner has extended its search for bathing Beauties to the North Carolina Coast.

Playboy feature writer Nora Gallagher and re-known photographer Mario Casilli will visit the UNCW campus to attempt a cover section on the smaller Coastal colleges.

"It is our intent to scan the area, setting up interviews and photo sessions to determine if UNCW qualifies for the section we are putting together on East Coast schools.

From the response we have received thus far we are sure that the Wilmington area has the appeal to draw national interests," stated Playboy spokeswoman Gallagher.

Asked if they planned to exploit the women in this area, Casilli replied, "we are not Hustler, we are a proud and respected publication that is only looking to bring the beauty of your area women to national fame."

Casilli continued by stating that there would be no total nude shots.

"To appreciate the beauty, you do not have to see her totally nude. Mystique is the key and we do consider our models as independent individuals that don't exploit their bodies for dirty old men," said Casilli.

Playboy plans to go undercover to spot potential models. They will go around the campus and approach only those girls that they fill can adequately fill the position.

Day 1,246,348th- America Held Hostage

Today began the 1,246,348th day since the 50 Americans were taken hostage by Iran. Ayatolla Poopomeni, great, great grandson of the late Ayatolla Komeni, stated, "We still will not release the hostages until the Shah is returned."

The students great great grandchildren announced their plan to "put the Shahs body on trial, we will grind his bones and eat them, this will disgrace his soul forever." The Shah's ghost, speaking from purgatory with his pals Henry Kissinger and Jimmy Carter is quoted to have said - "I don't know what I did wrong, what is so bad about killing a few peasants."

The hostages, the 4th generation of the original 50, "seemed in good shape, considering," stated a group of U.N. observers. President George Wallace IV in a press conference on Monday stated "We ought to go over and nuke those commie pinko muslims." He was quickly slapped on the hand by his vice president R.M. Nixon the IV who said it would never happen again.

Physics Department Attempts to Neutralize Radiation

The UNCW Physics Department is grasping at straws in an attempt to neutralize the effects of high levels of radiation after a senior honors project slowly melted down yesterday.

Sylvester Wantsom, distraught over the magnitude of the crisis, said he did not understand what could have possibly gone wrong. "I still can't believe it. Nothing like this ever should have happened."

The system is designed to shut down if a malfunction occurs. It didn't shut down. I watched it myself - I can't believe it didn't shut down."

Professor Digits is also alarmed by the gravity of the situation. "I knew something like this was going to happen. The laws of probability superimposed on Murphy's law dictates that such a situation would occur. I'm disappointed that it happened here, but we are preparing anti-nuke compounds to salvage whatever is left of this awesome situation."

Anti-nuke compounds are relatively new and unstable. When compressed and released, the anti-nuke compounds absorb radiation from the atmosphere.

One of the problems of using Anti-nuke compounds is the time lapse between the occurrence of a nuclear accident and the release of Anti-nuke compounds. The Compounds cannot be stored or else they are as dangerous as the actual radiation. It takes almost 48 hours to prepare and release these compounds. By that time, the damage is already done.

Student reaction to the nuclear crisis varied drastically.

"I'm kinda sorry it happened," one student said. "I heard that extremely high levels of radiation are floating through the air. It's unbelievable. I don't feel anything. I don't see anything. The sun is still shining. Are you sure we had a meltdown?"

The Student Nuclear Regulatory Commission has banned any further nuclear research until the release of Anti-nukes Compounds can be used more quickly, or until Murphy's law is amended.

Galloway Hall becomes New low cost housing project

In a surprise move last week, Dr. William Waggoner gave the Wilmington housing authority the "OK" for them to turn Galloway Hall into a low-cost housing project.

Waggoner SOLD the dorm for a reported $500.00 to the authority last week. When asked why he sold the "luxury complex," Waggoner stated that, "well, the damn thing is sinking anyway, so we might as well let the rift raft of society sink with it."

"I figured that we could raise student fees and build a wall around the building so that the students wouldn't have to see all that laundry hanging out of the windows, and those dirty babies running around with urine-stained diapers on."

In a closing comment, Waggoner stated "We could have sold it to those A-Rabs, but I think by selling it to the Housing Authority, we can save America from the clutch of those godless heat-hens."

Dancin Dave dances no more

Dancin Dave Struck by Speeding Motorist

A university spokesman today confirmed that, "it was his last dance, his last chance for romance, for UNCW's favorite intertainer, Dancin Dave."

Dancin was found beside the road late last night by a passing motorists, who gave this account, "they hit that sucker, they hit 'em good. I ran to him and all he said was S.E.A.-H-A-W-K (Seahawk, Seahawk, Sea...).

I felt sorry for that poor boy, I've seen him dance but nobody should have done this," said the witness.

"I did see the car. It was flying and it had a green body and a yellow roof with some kind of bird painted on the side. It was tragic," stated the witness.

A hospital spokesman stated, "he's alive, and he'll make it, but he won't ever dance again."

The university's official stand is summed up in one word "relieved."

Short Hall, 9:30 Wednesday

EDITORIAL

One can't help but be optimistic with the turn-outs of the recent SGA elections. Last Wednesday and Thursday, unprecedented numbers of UNC-W Students exercised their constitutional right and voted for the candidates of their choice.

Thursday evening, various members of the SGA, who weren't running for re-election, barricaded themselves in Linda Moore's office to count the tremendous amount of ballots. Suspense mounted as decision time approached.

At 7:30, the tabulators, along with chairperson Lynn Wells, entered the senate meeting to a round of thunderous applause. With a grin like a jackass eating cactus, she announced the results.

"Four votes for Jesse Sanders, three for Frank Colvin, and one vote for Pete Johnson.

In the vice-presidential race Charles Parsons butchered Mike Stroud five to three.

The chairman exclaimed that, because of the closeness of the presidential tally, there will have to be a run-off next week. "There were so many damn votes that it took us four hours to count them all", the chairman said.

After the results were rendered, former president Jon Faill, in a fit of rage, exclaimed that he was truly disappointed that his write in campaign, for Charlie-Wong, the freshman Japanese-American candidate, didn't get any votes. "It was the peoples' mandate that I be elected last fall.

"I don't understand these fickle college students," the ex-ARKON said.

"Politics at UNC-W for 1980-81 should run smooth as silk," said Frank Colvin, run-off hopeful. "After all, it's taken me seven years to become a senior, and with experience like that, I can't lose," the thirty-six year old Colvin stated.

A final comment came from Jesse Sanders, also a run-off hopeful, who commented, "Frank was right, the SGA should run Smoothly next year. I mean, who could argue with an 0.2 percent turnout!"

LETTERS

To The Editor!

I am writing outside my dorm room in Galloway Hall. The reason?, there is a seven-inch roach occupying my room. Normally, I am not a complainer. This, however, is getting ridiculous. It all began when I awoke this morning. I reached in my snack drawer for a Hershey bar. Even before I had actually opened the drawer, I heard a rumbling noise coming from within, but when I looked inside, I received the surprise of my life.

This monster roach, munching on my candy bar, looked up and actually smiled at me! I screamed and ran from the room, leaving my sleeping roommate to be devoured.

After getting a male friend to enter the room, I shut the door quickly, not wanting to witness the stomping.

Strange grunting noises ensued, then a thump, as something hit the floor. Out the door flew my friend, disheveled and in generally bad shape. After muttering a few obscenities, he explained to me that the roach had obviously been working out in Hanover gym, late at night, for he (the roach) had easily tossed my 200 pound friend through the door. Promising to come back armed, he then left for class. More struggling noises, and I peeped into the room, only to find the roach trying to climb into my roommate's bed for his own perverse reasons.

I hurried in, slamming the roach over the head with my pocketbook, which temporarily dazed the insect. She and I then retreated to the relative safety of the hallway.

My point is that something must be done. I believe that if the roach could somehow be captured, he could then be roasted and served in the cafeteria under an assumed name. Hell, it will probably be as good as the majority of food now being served.

To The Editor

Regarding the editorial in the September 21, 1980 issue of the Sea Crock, I feel the editor was wrong in condemning the student body rather than the administration for the lack of hitching posts on campus.

Due to the abundance of faculty posts, students are left "holding the bag."

Pres. John Felldown announced campus-wide campaigns will increase the number of hitching posts, but has yet to implement actions concerning the issue at hand.

I feel A "manure march" is the only solution to the horse situation.

To The Editor

After reading all the subversive material submitted by the students, I would just like to say that I think the Sea Crock is a fine newspaper. The news is informative, enlightening, and thoroughly motivating.

After reading the latest edition, I was so inspired that I spent the remainder of my morning caught up in the rigormortis of life. The staff should be commended for the galactic quality and up to the minute news coverage.

On a slightly different note, I would like to remind everyone that if the world in which we live is to continue to flourish, we must all learn to put aside our arsenals and try to figure out what the hell is going on. With the crisis in Iran, the battle of the sexes, and the invasion of Afghanistan, we better think about "who loves us better."

Once again, Sea Crock, keep up the good work. If you would like more of my opinions, send a self-addressed envelope, a topic, and $1.50 for postage to SEA CROCK, P.O. Box 7654321, UNC-W.

I will remain,

Malloy: ELVIS in disguise

To the shock of those present, Dr. William Malloy, vice chancellor of Student Affairs announced that he was ELVIS PRESLEY: at Thursday's meeting of the Board of Trustees.

Malloy commented that he was "tired of living A lie", and must let the world know that Elvis Presley really wasn't DEAD.

"No Kidding, I'm really not dead. That whole "Elvis Dies" bit was faked so that I could get out of the mess I was in" Malloy went on to say that the plastic surgery really didn't hurt too much, "besides" said Malloy, "we really started making the big money on all those T.V. record sales and stupid souvenirs of me after I croaked."

Malloy went on to say that he was really glad that he went into disguise. I had to go on CRASH diets all the time. There was even talk of wiring my mouth shut and feeding me intravenously. No wonder I was going A bit wierd...Just like Howard Hughes I had to get out."

"We cooked up the idea for me to die, and then I was suppose to go to someplace where No one would know who I was." When asked why he chose UNCW, "Malloy" said that "this place is just like the end of the world anyway, so I figured that nobody in his right mind would look for me here."

Malloy, pictured here with X-dean of students Helena Cheek and X-director of student activities Linda Moore, announced their New "Hollywood Review." Malloy added that the gals "cooked up the idea after I decided to come out of the closet." "I guess I just can't get 'the business' out of my blood", the vice chancellor said.

NCCDC warns students to beware of Spring V.D. outbreak

From Press Release-

Today it was announced that the National Center for Communicable Disease Control is once again expecting the annual outbreak of venereal disease on college campuses across the nation.

Dr. Theodore Goodbody and his assistant Ms. Hands have compiled some interesting statistics in their eleven year study on V.D., sponsored by NC-CDC.

"One out of every six college students will probably contract some form of venereal disease this spring. That's an alarming figure but we here at 'Stop that Stuff Kids' understand. You know, its spring and its beach time and you kinda feel your oats as it were."

"Don't get me wrong, I once was young before I met Ms. Hands and I can totally relate to the "need". Well once I remember me and Betty "Blow your socks off" Smith drove up to the lake one spring day and there we were, just me and Betty. You know she didn't get that name for making all A's. Excuse me, sometimes my mind wanders," said Goodbody.

"What I really want to say, is that sometimes you forget and that could get you in a lot of trouble especially if you engage in "that thing".

"Know I don't want to sound like a prude but you could be leaving yourself open for God-knows-what. Just try to be careful."

"We have compiled a list of alternatives that you can use if ever you are not sure:

1. take a cold shower
2. call your mother
3. eat plenty of beans
4. think of what you will tell your mother
5. go to church
6. say you forgot your protection
7. watch Sesame Street
8. jog over twenty miles

"These are just a few of the ones that we have come up with, here on the staff at "Stop that Stuff Kids," said Goodbody.

Asked what was the rate of V.D. on those students who used this self-help list, Dr. Goodbody replied, "staggering."

"Nothing short of a nuclear war will stop some kids you know, but if you want to seriously do something to stop this increase, stop kissing in public," said Goodbody.

It should be noted that after this interview Dr. Goodbody and his assistant Ms. Hands were dismissed from the staff of NCCDC because of lack of experimental equipment.

U.S. to join OPEC

President Carter has instituted a bold new domestic oil program that he hopes will qualify the U.S. for membership in the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

"Boy, were a bunch of dumb bunnies", remarked Secretary of Energy James Schlesinger. "It took us all this time to get it-namely, that the U.S. produces oil, right? And we can jack the price up just like they can. So that's what Jimmy's doing: deregulating oil prices here at home and letting them go sky-high. Then we join OPEC, screw the Israelis and the Japs, and everything is O.K."

Record number of students vote in elections

by Wendy Robbins

A record 13.4 percent of UNCW's students cast their ballots in last week's elections, which turned out to be one of the closest SGA races in recent memory. The offices of SGA President, Senior Class President and Chief Justice will have to be voted on again, because none of the candidates received a large enough margin to be declared winners.

Frank Colvin and Jesse Sanders will be on the run-off ballots for SGA President, Mark Poindexter and Doug Browne will vie for the Senior Class President's position, and Steve Griffin and John Ward will compete for the Chief Justice seat. The run-off elections will be held on Wednesday, April 2 and Thursday, April 3 from 9:30 until 2:30 in the cafeteria and library lobby.

Previously, UNCW's highest voter turnout was 11 percent. Jon Faili, the current SGA President, was quite pleased with this year's increased voter participation. "It was excellent," he said. "The best that anyone can remember. The students are getting more involved because we are. This is the first year I can recall that we've had somebody running for every available space."

Faili attributed the success of the elections to Lynne Wells, Chairperson of the Board of Elections. "All the credit needs to go to Lynne Wells," he stated. "She put it all together. She was responsible for last week's debate. The larger turnout is a result of her efforts."

The complete results of the elections are as fol-

WLOZ announces "Marathon 91"

by Julie Russ

WLOZ, UNCW's student operated radio station, is staging a fund-raising telethon beginning at 8 a.m. April 4, and ending at 2 a.m. April 8. "Marathon 91," as the effort is called, will go on for 91 consecutive hours, corresponding with the station's 91.3 location on your FM dial.

According to Operations Manager Martin Brown, the purpose of the telethon is to raise money for 1. improv of station equipment and 2. to increase and upgrade programming. Scheduled improvements would include National Public Radio Programming, more local programming, and the addition of LPs to the station's limited library.

Discjockey John Kramer will attempt to remain at the station without sleep for the duration of the telethon. "We're talking about more than two forty hour working weeks," he commented, anticipating 91 sleepless hours. "I might fall out after 50 hours, but the telethon will go on." Kramer is using this endurance test as an incentive for listeners to call in and pledge donations.

Explaining the idea behind Marathon 91, Brown stated, "The concept of a fund-raising event goes back about a year or so. John Evans (Station Manager), Paul Jackson (Program Director), and myself decided that we had to sponsor some money-making activity. A telethon seemed the most feasible event."

The station's goal is "$25,000—hopefully," reports Brown. "In addition to volunteers manning the phone, there will be people here helping out all the time. There will be a lot of energy going into this whole thing." Some calls will be broadcast live, especially those in the form of challenges, wherein donors match or exceed a competitor's donation. Anyone who donates $10 or more can specify an album to be purchased for WLOZ's library.

Concluded Kramer, "We need support if WLOZ is to continue broadcasting throughout the summer."

Kreskin Amazes

by Julie Russ

The Amazing Kreskin lived up to his title March 25, in Kenan Auditorium, displaying his talent before a packed house. Beginning at 8:11 p.m. and continuing until 11:15 p.m., "the world's foremost mentalist" astounded the mostly student-age crowd with his mysterious feats of communication.

Sponsored by the University Program Board (UPB), Kreskin's performance was unexpectedly humorous, as he bantered with the audience and quipped about his experiences on the tour circuit. Chuckles were interspersed with gasps, however, as the famed "scientific investigator" (as he prefers to be called) began a series of mind-boggling telepathic communications with members of the audience.

Instructing everyone to write down on slips of paper "important thoughts", Kreskin then had all the folded papers collected and disposed of. Without so much as glimpsing the messages, he then proceeded to inform several participants of their thoughts, rattling off pertinent information such as names, phone numbers, and dates. After several startling examples of his accuracy, he then commanded the audience to shut its eyes and think of a two-digit odd number between 0 and 50. Mesmerizing the crowd with his persuasive voice, the mentalist spoke at length on the importance of concentration and keeping one's eyes shut. When he posed the question, "How many of you are thinking of the number thirty-seven?", approximately sixty percent responded with affirmative cries of amazement.

Concluding the first half of the program with his famous "check-finding feat", Kreskin, after many dramatic false starts, located his check hidden inside a book on a piano in the orchestra pit. When he is unable to ferret out his check (and he claims more than one failure), he forfeits his fee.

The second half of the program was devoted to a striking example of mind manipulation. Although Kreskin bristles at the suggestion that he is a will vie for the Senior Class President's position, and Steve Griffin and John Ward will compete for the Chief Justice seat. The run-off elections will be held on Wednesday, April 2 and Thursday, April 3 from 9:30 until 2:30 in the cafeteria and library lobby.

Previously, UNCW's highest voter turnout was 11 percent. Jon Faill, the current SGA President, was quite pleased with this year's increased voter participation. "It was excellent," he said. "The best that anyone can rem-

Faill attributed the success of the elections to Lynne Wells, Chairperson of the Board of Elections. "All the credit needs to go to Lynne Wells," he stated. "She put it all together. She was responsible for last week's debate. The larger turnout is a result of her efforts."

by Julie Russ

WLOZ, UNCW's student operated radio station, is staging a fund-raising telethon beginning at 8 a.m. April 4, and ending at 2 a.m. April 8. "Marathon 91" as the effort is called, will go on for 91 consecutive hours, corresponding with the station's 91.3 location on your FM dial.

According to Operations Manager Martin Brown, the purpose of the telethon is to raise money for 1. improvement of station equipment and 2. to increase and upgrade programming. Scheduled improvements would include National Public Radio Programming, more local programming, and the addition of LPs to the station's limited library.

Disc jockey John Kramer will attempt to remain at the station without sleep for the duration of the telethon. "We're talking about more than two forty hour working weeks," he commented, anticipating 91 sleepless hours. "I might fall out after 50 hours, but the telethon will go on." Kramer is using this endurance test as an incentive for listeners to call in and pledge donations.

Explaining the idea behind Marathon 91, Brown stated, "The concept of a fund-raising event goes back about a year or so. John Evans (Station Manager), Paul Jackson (Program Director), and myself decided that we had to sponsor some money-making activity. A telethon seemed the most feasible event."

The station's goal is "$25,000—hopefully," reports Brown. "In addition to volunteers manning the phone, there will be people here helping out all the time. There will be a lot of energy going into this whole thing." Some calls will be broadcast live, especially those in the form of challenges, wherein donors match or exceed a competitor's donation. Anyone who donates $10 or more can specify an album to be purchased for WLOZ's library.

Concluded Kramer, "We need support if WLOZ is to continue broadcasting throughout the summer."

Kreskin Amazes

by Julie Russ

The Amazing Kreskin lived up to his title March 25, in Kenan Auditorium, displaying his talent before a packed house. Beginning at 8:11 p.m. and continuing until 11:15 p.m., "the world's foremost mentalist" astounded the mostly student-age crowd with his mysterious feats of communication.

Sponsored by the University Program Board (UPB), Kreskin's performance was unexpectedly humorous, as he bantered with the audience and quipped about his experiences on the tour circuit. Chuckles were interspersed with gasps, however, as the famed "scientific investigator" (as he prefers to be called) began a series of mind-boggling telepathic communications with members of the audience.

Instructing everyone to write down on slips of paper "important thoughts", Kreskin then had all the folded papers collected and disposed of. Without so much as glancing the messages, he then proceeded to inform several participants of their thoughts, rattling off pertinent information such as names, phone numbers, and dates. After several startling examples of his accuracy, he then commanded the audience to shut its eyes and think of a two-digit odd number between 0 and 50. Mesmerizing the crowd with his persuasive voice, the mentalist spoke at length on the importance of concentration and keeping one's eyes shut. When he posed the question, "How many of you are thinking of the number thirty-seven?", approximately sixty percent responded with affirmative cries of amazement.

Concluding the first half of the program with his famous "check-finding feat", Kreskin, after many dramatic false starts, located his check hidden inside a book on a piano in the orchestra pit. When he is unable to ferret out his check (and he claims more than one failure), he forfeits his fee.

The second half of the program was devoted to a striking example of mind manipulation. Although Kreskin bristles at the suggestion that he is

LETTERS

To The Editor:

I would like to take this time out to thank all the students, clubs, and organizations that actively campaigned and voted for me. As I stated many times, I will do the very best job that I can.

The expanding role of the Student Government offers all senators, and officers a unique challenge for the upcoming year. I hope that all newly elected SGA members will sense this idea of representation, and actually invoke responsive participation on the part of their fellow classmates.

There are many goals for next year, and I will be happy to discuss them with our student body. I wish to extend this invitation to my fellow students to go to our Student Senate Meetings every week or just drop by the SGA office.

Charles Parsons

To The Editor:

Throughout my term as President of Student Government, I have worked very closely with Jesse Sanders. It has been through his efforts that the finances of student government have been streamlined and now conform to established state procedures. During the month of November, the SGA office was without the clerk-typist. Jesse assumed these responsibilities and performed excellently. He has defended the will of the Student Senate against the administration and has won. It is this type of dedication to his job and to students that qualify Jesse Sanders to be the next Student Government President. I would like to urge everyone to vote, and vote for Jesse Sanders, for SGA President.

There are two other endorsements that I would like to make. First is Steve "Styger" Griffin for Chief Justice. Styger has served on the student court for the past year and has experience. He proposes an expanded role for the student court, and I agree. The other endorsement is for Mark Poindexter for Senior Class President. This endorsement is not so much for Mark as it is against his opponent, Doug Browne. It is my opinion that Doug Browne has substantially abused his power to editorialize in the Seahawk as the associate editor. He has abused this power to the point where he used his power to editorialize as a threat and a weapon to force students to do things his way. This is not the type of leadership the Senior Class needs or deserves.

You may not agree with my endorsements; however, this does not mean you shouldn't vote. It is your duty as a student to elect your student leaders. Remember to vote and if you agree with me, vote for Jesse Sanders for SGA President, Steve "Styger" Griffin for Chief Justice, and Mark Poindexter for Senior Class President.

Jonathan H. Fail Jr.
President, Student Government

Assoc. Ed. Note...

Quite naturally, as the remarks made by Mr. Fail are libelous, I feel they cannot escape comment.

The President has accused me of abusing my power by editorializing my opinions in the SEAHAWK. If writing editorial opinion is an abuse of my position as Associate Editor, then I stand corrected. But Jon, it's not characteristic of you to be satisfied with just accusing me. If, as you say, the Associate Editor doesn't have the right to editorialize his opinions in the paper that he writes for, you better inform the staff of The Washington Post, The New York Times, The Atlanta Constitution, and, lest we forget, The Wilmington Star-News, of your enlightened discovery.

You see, Mr. Fail, in writing my commentaries, I have done nothing more than to "call the shots" as I have seen them. When I wrote the editorial on the Iranian situation, I wrote in the manner in which I felt about their illegal capture of the American hostages. When I wrote the editorial about the financial status of this paper, I said nothing that wouldn't stand up in court. Concerning the recent editorial on the elections, which I feel prompted your attack of me, I wrote nothing but facts, which I later had to clarify for your benefit, about a situation that I felt detrimental to the students and the reputation of the campus as well.

It is your prerogative, Mr. Fail, to endorse candidates if you choose to do so. However, it is in extremely bad taste to attack someone who is merely attempting to do his job. I have never used the space allotted me in this newspaper to force students to do things my way. I have simply reported facts, given opinions, and presented arguments in the most responsible way that I know how.

I hope that this Note clarifies any questions that you may have had regarding my position on this paper.

The SEAHAWK encourages letters to the editor. They should be in good taste, typewritten, and 200 words or less. We also reserve the right to edit all submitted material.

Sincerely,
Doug Browne

SGA Approves Charters

The Student Government Association bogged down as they debated whether or not to allocate $85 to the Black Student Union for a "Big Business Day".

The indecision seemed to stem from the fact that the Democratic Socialists will be co-sponsoring the Big Business Day. North Carolina state law states that state funds should not be used for political organizations and it is not SGA policy to allocate funds to political organizations, although it has been done in the past. After a somewhat repetitious debate, the Senate opted to approve the recommendation.

Other clubs receiving funds were the Ten Pin Club, Women's Soccer, and the Football Club.

Charters for the National Organization of Women (NOW) and the Ten Pin Club were approved.

The First Annual Horne's Ass Award went to Senator Larry Hulet and Pres. Jon Fail.

The next meeting of the SGA will be held Thursday, April 10, after the Easter vacation at 7 p.m. in C-218. All students are encouraged to attend.

UNCW's new Vice-President likes to get involved

by Wendy Robbins

For Charles Parsons, winning UNCW's vice-presidential election is the culmination of a desire to help his fellow students. Parsons, a political science major, became interested in politics mostly through the influence of teachers he has had in previous years. "I was mainly inspired by teachers I've had in high school and here at the University," he says.

Parsons says he was "exhilarated" when he found out he triumphed in the V-P election. "I was really relieved when I knew I'd won. My nerves were just shot up until the last minute. There's a certain feeling you get when you win. It's a great feeling. I have a mission, a determination, now more than ever to do a great job. I'm not going to disappoint anybody. My position won't be one of sitting around and riding the year out."

Unlike other schools and universities, UNCW has yet to take its SGA seriously, according to Parsons. "My intention is not to let the Senate be a circus anymore," he contends. "As vice-president it will be my duty to conduct the Senate in an orderly and reasonable manner. Last year, the Senate had trouble with absenteeism. This next year we will define just what an absence is. There will be serious consequences for any elected official who repeatedly decides not to show up for the meetings. We're here to do a job and we're here to do it right."

Some people are naturally inclined to get involved in organizations and causes. Charles Parsons describes himself as that kind of individual. "I can't sit back and watch people run things without

Speed bump syndrome hits campus

by Julie Russ

Hypochondriacs, take note! There's a new illness stalking our fair campus these days. It's called the Speed Bump Syndrome and its victims are students just like thee and me. (Faculty members seem curiously immune). The symptoms are unmistakable: lumps on top of the head (resulting from meeting the roof of your car with your cranium), a tongue covered with self-inflicted tooth marks (too painful to discuss!), and a neck that sounds like amplified Rice Krispies every time you twitch.

The cause of this mysterious malady is obvious: deceptively innocent little lumps in the middle of the road. Whipping merrily round Galloway Hall at thirty miles per is a sure invitation to skull shock. There's no avoiding those asphalt axle-grinders; and if you are still capable of focusing, you'll see that yes, there are MORE. A whole series, in fact, designed to thwart speed-drunk drivers (and the other kind, as well).

How many times have you witnessed some sucker slowly e-a-s-i-n-g over that first bump and then roaring away into the sunset? How often do you hear that Oh-my-God-another-one! screech which signals another goner slamming on the brakes? I tell ya, it's enough to break your heart (and a vertebrae or two as well!)

The really pitiful part is when some little MG goes completely berserk, just loses its align altogether. So it gets committed to the shop, and another good motor goes mad. Of course, if you REALLY want to buck the establishment, you could buy a horse and play Tonto. At least a nag has enough sense to JUMP over the damned things. (Horses can afford to be smug: have you ever heard of a racehorse being hot-wired?) But aside from trading in your heap for a horse, the choices are few. Dynamite IS another alternative, but somehow I don't think the Chancellor would approve. (Can't you see the headlines? BUMPS GO BOOM!)

If you HAVE to drive around Galloway Hall, why not try a little creative four-wheeling for a change? You might get pinestraw in your hubcaps, but doesn't that beat toothmarks on your tongue?

Dr. John T. Williams, Jr., department chairman, was recruiting for two new psychologists for the UN-

CW faculty.

Three UNCW faculty members presented papers: Dr. Mark Galizio, collaborator with honor student, David Hayes, presented "Rate Dependent Effect of Alcohol on Avoidance Behavior in Rats."

Dr. Joseph C. Awkard, Jr. gave a theoretical presentation of the psychological factors behind the phenomenon of spiritual cults such as the Jonestown Massacre and the Moonies. His paper was entitled "Charismatic Christian-Based Sects and Cults: and Antithesis within Society."

SEAHAWKS DROP FOUR

Eddie Knox

What do we have to do to win a baseball game?

Seahawk Coach Bill Brooks must be asking himself that question in the wake of the four Seahawk losses last week.

The 'Hawks week began Thursday with a game against Fairfield (Connecticut) University, who were opening their season. UNCW scored in the bottom half of the first on three walks and a John Milkovits sacrifice fly, giving the Seahawks a quick 1-0 lead.

That score remained on the board until Fairfield came to bat in the third inning. The Stags parlayed three singles, a double, a sacrifice fly and a UNCW error into a three run inning, giving Fairfield a 3-1 advantage.

The 'Hawks battled back to knot the score at 3-3 in the bottom of the third behind Tim Whitehead's double, and singles by Mark Scalf and John Talent.

The Stags, however, moved to a sizable 7-3 advantage after five innings, and it appeared that the Seahawks could hang up their talons.

UNCW again clawed back at the visitors, scoring three runs in the sixth and the tying run in the seventh, forcing the game into extra innings.

Ronald Inman, who had shut down the Stag attack over the previous four innings, gave up the decisive runs in the tenth, allowing Fairfield a 9-7 victory.

Friday's doubleheader against Charleston Baptist was played under the same miserable conditions which have plagued the 'Hawks all season. UNCW was held to four singles in a 4-0 first game loss.

In game two, Clyde Holley smacked a double and three singles en route to a 4-4 performance, but the Seahawks, for the third time this season, dropped an extra innings game, 8-6 to the Bucs. In the process, Freshman Kenny Smith gave up his first earned runs of the year, and suffered his first loss after three victories.

Monday brought West Liberty State (West Virginia) to Brooks Field, and again UNCW couldn't snare a victory, leaving 13 runners stranded in a 2-1 loss.

UNCW, now 4-11, begins a three game road trip, with stops at N.C. Wesleyan, N.C. State, and Campbell University. The 'Hawks return home next Sunday to face powerful East Carolina.

UNCW Netters Surge

Eddie Knox

UNCW's men's tennis team, in the final week of their early-season home stand, surged into respectability with two big victories, rolling over N.C. Wesleyan and Slippery Rock State College.

The Seahawks lost only one set Wednesday in demolishing out-manned N.C. Wesleyan, 9-0.

East Carolina then rolled into town Thursday and topped UNCW, 7-2. A bright spot for the 'Hawks was the play of number one seed Paul Gemborys, who defeated ECU's Love, 6-3, 6-4. Gemborys then teamed up with Lance Thompson to throttle Love and Hostetler 6-1, 6-3.

UNCW topped Slippery Rock Monday, defeating the Pennsylvania team 6-3. The Seahawks swept all three doubles matches, and top seeds Gemborys, Ricky Watson, and John Shackelford all claimed singles victories.

What is the cause of the recent turnaround? "It's a combination of two things, really. The team has been playing with more intensity and consistency, plus our schedule has become easier since the first matches of the year", states Coach Larry Honeycutt.

The schedule gets more difficult next week, as the 'Hawks netters, now 4-8, embark on a three game road trip through Virginia with matches against Virginia Wesleyan, Old Dominion, and William and Mary. UNCW will return home on April 11 and 12 for our own Azalea Classic, with guests UNC-Charlotte, Campbell University, and the College of Charleston.

Floor Hockey Intramurals Begin

Scott Sibley

The U.S. Olympic Hockey team's gold medal at Lake Placid not only brought the nation together, but it also helped to bring UNCW its newest intramural sport, floor hockey.

Floor hockey is similar to ice hockey except the players run on a gym floor instead of skating on ice. Each player uses a wooden stick with a plastic blade attached attempting to hit a plastic puck into the opponent's goal.

Each team consists of six players on the playing floor at a time, including a goalie for each team. The games consist of two twenty minute halves with a five minute break between halves.

High stick, off sides, and illegal use of the body are basically the only penalties called, according to Beth Maulsby, the coordinator for intramural floor or hockey. "We leave a lot of the decisions up to the referee," said Beth.

While taking an intramural class Beth was assigned to coordinate floor hockey this semester. "I didn't really start floor hockey at UNCW, I was assigned from my intramural class to be responsible for it, but I am really enjoying it," explained Beth. Judging by the amount of participation a lot of people are.

Golfers Finish Twelfth in Pembroke Tourney

Drew Allison

The UNCW Men's Golf team finished a dismal 12th place in their second match, The Pembroke Invitational on March 24-25.

Freshman Bob Mailloux said, "We just didn't have it, we didn't play well and we weren't confident."

Sixteen teams played in the tournament, including Pembroke, N.C. Wesleyan, Atlantic Christian, and Francis Marion, the school that played powerfully to emerge with the victory.

In the first round for the Seahawks, John Cregan shot an exceptional 74 despite a hard rain, Buck Propst had a 78, Rick Burgin shot an 81, Bob Mailloux had an 82, Robbie Long shot an 86, and Gary Baldwin had an 89 for a total first round Seahawk score of 401.

The second round brought troubles for the Seahawks with Cregan falling to an 82, Propst had an 83 as did Burgin, Mailloux remained at 82, Long improved to an 81 and Baldwin shot a 90 for a second round total of 411.

The team's record now stands at 1-1, and they travel next to Burlington for the Elon Invitational. Mailloux remains optimistic, "the season's still young."

WILMINGTON

Beach boys keep summer alive

While The Beatles were busy trying to convince Decca that they really were talented, The Beach Boys were out on the American west coast writing songs about sun, surf, cars, and girls. Brian Wilson, along with brothers Dennis and Carl, cousin Mike Love, and friend Alan Jardine went on to form one of the best and longest running rock 'n' roll shows around. The personnel has been altered from time to time with the entrances and exits of musicians like Bruce Johnston, Blondie Chaplain, Ricky Fataar, Daryl Dragon, and the Rhinestone Cowboy himself, Glen Campbell, but the nucleus and heart of the band has remained intact. In the beginning The Beach Boys scored with hits like "Surfin' U.S.A.," "Surfer Girl," "Little Deuce Coupe," "Fun, Fun, Fun," and "I Get Around," but by the end of 1965 they began to tire of the striped-shirt surfer image that their record company, Capitol records, wanted them to project. In May of 1966 they released PET SOUNDS, an album that portrayed a maturing group of individuals, and that contained several of their classics like "Wouldn't It Be Nice," "You Still Believe In Me," and "Sloop John B." October of that same year saw the release of one of rock's masterpiece singles, "Good Vibrations," which was accepted with open arms by an adoring public.

After this, the band's fortunes began to slowly slide downhill. Brian had already stopped touring with the band and began to withdraw from the group's activities on the whole. As a result, the hits which had been abundant, began to trickle out. What time Brian did put into the band's interest was involved in time-consuming, ambitious projects that drove Capitol crazy because they weren't receiving any products to present to a short-remembered public. Four albums in the next couple of years, WILD HONEY, SMILE, FRIENDS, and 20/20, were hurriedly released and poorly received by the public. Even "Do It Again," put out in mid-1968 wasn't enough to lift them out of the doldrums, and amidst constant squabbling between Capitol and the band over the proper formula for success, the two parted company in 1969.

Record Review

By David Carter

The Beach Boys signed with Reprise in 1970 and went on to release several good albums, none of which, save for the double-live album, sold exceedingly well. In 1975 Capitol, who still owned the rights to all of the early Beach Boy material, released a double album of oldies entitled ENDLESS SUMMER. Quicker than they could say "SURF'S UP" THE BOYS OF SUMMER WERE AGAIN ATOP THE CHARTS WITH A NUMBER ONE LP. A couple of more hit sets, SPIRIT OF AMERICA by Capitol, and GOOD VIBRATIONS by Reprise, proved to be popular with their fans, and in 1976

The Beach Boys released 15 BIG ONES, their first album of totally new material in over three years. Two more albums for Reprise and a label jump to CBS, brings us to the present with their second LP for their new company, KEEPIN' THE SUMMER ALIVE.

This album has a lot going in its favor. For openers, it's produced by Bruce Johnston, who aside from the band itself, should know all about how The Beach Boys are supposed to sound, seeing as how he was Brian's replacement from 1965 to 1972. Secondly, the musicianship of Brian Wilson (keyboards), Carl Wilson (guitars), Dennis Wilson (drums), and Alan Jardine (guitars) is supplemented by quality players in the form of Daryl Dragon (keyboards), Caleb Qualey (guitar), Ricky Fataar (drums), and Joe Walsh (guitar). Lastly, it has a nice cover. What else could anyone want?

The title track opens side one with Carl handling the vocals. Summer is no foreign topic to these guys and they make mention of all the appropriate things: girls, beaches, and cars. Love's throaty background vocals anchor this rockin' tune. "Oh Darlin'," a Brian Wilson-Mike Love composition follows and is a willowly love song that would've fit nicely on PET SOUNDS. Brian sings the lead here and is backed up by the familiar oohs and aahs. "Some of Your Love" is a rock song with a Roy Wood sounding sax intro. It's the Brian and Mike show again, with Love doing the vocals on this one. Carl returns to center stage with "Livin' With A Heartache," a song, like the title track, that he wrote with Randy Bachman. This one's a slow, lamenting love song, complete with lush backing vocals. Alan Jardine handles the lead vocals on a Chuck Berry rocker called "School Day," that closes the side. No explanation needed here as the boys do it justice.

Side two begins with "Goin' On," the third of five Brian-Mike songs on this album. The two composers trade lead singing here as this is a definite blast from the past with patented Beach Boy harmonies. "Sunshine" slows the pace somewhat, but the ever-present harmonies are still here on a tune that sounds like carnival music. "When Girls Get Together" is the last of the Brian-Mike songs and this one would've fit in nicely with the soundtrack from The Godfather as far as the music goes. The mandolins are a gentle intro for the "Santa Ana Winds," a melody that may have been more at home on their HOL-LAND album, with the "California Saga." Even there it would've probably been misplaced as it sounds more like a jingle for attracting tourism than anything else. The album closes with Bruce Johnston's sole contribution, "Endless Harmony." It originally started out as "Ten Years Harmony," but in either form it's simply nothing more than a boring attempt at a tribute for the band. A nice thought, but bad form.

In contrast to their other albums, KEEPIN' THE SUMMER ALIVE is a fairly good album. The music is good, and the sound is clean and full, but if it's a message you're looking for, you've come to the wrong place. The lyrics here, as usual, are straight from the heart, soul, and left field. In addition to the fine job Johnston did producing, and the predominately good material included on this LP, the re-emergence of the Brian Wilson-Mike Love songwriting team as a viable contributing factor to the band is a large plus here and hopefully will be on records to come. The truth of the matter is that this album is pretty good for a bunch of hodads. Now that that's settled, where's my surfboard?

"The Aged Puppeteer", April 8

"The Aged Puppeteer" will be presented April 8 in Kenan Auditorium at 8 p.m. Admission is $1 at the door; with student I.D. FREE.

This original production is sponsored by the UNC-W Fine Arts Committee and presented by The Allison Puppet Company.

"The Aged Puppeteer" is "a timeless, light comedy with tragic overtones," according to Drew Allison.

It is the story of a very poor old man infatuated with his puppets. A bill collector comes and demands his puppets as payment of his debts. Miraculously, the puppets come to life and give a performance. The proceeds of which are given to the surprised puppeteer to satisfy his deficit.

Bunraku, the ancient Japanese form of puppet manipulation, will be utilized during half of the performance. As such, the puppeteer will be in full view, but clothes in a black cape and hood to reduce audience distraction.

"There has been a renaissance of puppetry," said Allison. He attributed much of this to the Muppets; but pointed out that puppets are now performing opera as well as Shakespeare. He feels "puppetry is a theater experience for adults, not just kids' entertainment."

Drew Allison wrote the story as well as designed and constructed the six rod puppets. He is a transfer student from UNC-Charlotte, where he was a resident puppeteer associated with Donald Devet and Grey-Seal Productions.

The puppets are supplied voices by Mark Mekins, Amy Forest and Drew Allison. Larry Matthews is in charge of Lighting and Karl Heide-mann, recording.

Allison is hopeful of future performances in the Wilmington area "to show that puppets are for everyone."

At his command, the participants were alternately hot and cold, unable to open their eyes, and subject to painful pinches. They also experienced a loss of time perception, and when ordered to shake hands with each other, found themselves unable to loosen one another's grip.

One participant commented, "I knew what was going on the whole time, but it was like I wasn't a part of what was happening. It was very strange." Another exclaimed, "I don't know if I was hypnotized or not, but it was wild!"

Kreskin concluded his program by stating "...I

Semi-finalists in debate were Dan Goforth and Mike Stroud. Also competing were Fran Beselieu, Pete Johnson, Bill Sanders, Dave Kermon, and Deborah Newton.

Dr. Bob Rosenthal termed this year's win as a "total team victory. The entire team contributed to the overall win." Rosenthal also stated that UNCW's Debate Team has helped to bring people from all over the state to UNCW's campus. "It's good public relations," stated Rosenthal. "Forensics is the measure of academic success."

A Variety of entertainers Appear at Sea Side Jam on April 26

Among the entertainers appearing at the Seaside Jam coming up on Saturday, April 26, Leon Redbone will probably be a favorite.

Redbone gained recognition as a popular musician through appearances on shows like "Saturday Night Live." His first LP, "ON THE TRACK," became an immediate best seller. His album, "CRAZY MAN," established Redbone's immense skill as a multi-guitar stylist and a master of evocation.

At the Redbone concert, usually as he walks out on stage carrying a guitar, he offers assortments of entertaining props, such as a chair, he offers interpretations of songs from the obscure to the legendary.

Also appearing at the concert will be the Stewart Tussing Band. Kevin Stewart is the heart and mind of the band. He has written lyrics and music for over two hundred songs, about sixty of which have been worked into the act.

Gary Tussing adds the band's soul, with his sorcery on the violoncello generating the vital force of the band's sound. Gary's eight-year stint with the Florida Gulf Coast Symphony adds a classical-contemporary dimension to Kevin's music.

Along with Bill Pound on electric guitar or flute and Sean Stewart on drums, acoustic jazz-rock projected through a classical pop medium may be the best way to describe the band's unique brand of music.

There will also be appearances by the Rob Crosby Group and the Iron Mountain Depot Band, a favorite local band who perform bluegrass and country-rock.

Also highlighting the day will be the Martha Brings Em Back Frisbee Team, performing outstanding acrobatics and record breaking long distance catches—all set to music and script.

The show features Scott Zimmerman, the 1980 Over-all World Frisbee disc champion and Martha Faye, the Guinness K-9 (canine) World Record Holder.

Along with the entertainment, booths will be set up along the Trask side of the field, where skills can be tested in wet sponge contests and in detecting drills, sponsored by campus clubs.

Booths sponsored by community organizations and businesses will also be on hand. The Stupm Dwellers, an Onslow County hobby shop, will have an assortment of unusual kites on display.

Food will be available at various booths and the Biology Club will sponsor their annual shark-fry. Bringing along refreshments, and plan to spend the entire day.

Marathon 91 Raises $2,565

Marathon 91, WLOZ's fundraising telethon, is over, but the effects of the effort will hopefully be felt for months to come.

According to station manager John Evans, $2,565 was pledged to the radio station, and they have at present collected approximately $648 of that amount.

Commented Evans, in reference to a publicity stunt that sparked interest in Marathon 91, "Disc jockey John Kramer did manage to stay awake for 91.3 hours, so that part of the telethon was a success," adding, "Overall, Marathon 91 was profitable, even though our goal of $25,000 was not reached. The money that was pledged will keep us on the air until the end of June—and this radio station has never operated in the summer before, due to lack of funds. However, we will not be able to buy new equipment, go up in power wattage, go stereo, or establish a production room."

"According to SGA sources, the amount of money pledged to Z91 is "the most money raised by any club or organization on this campus," remarked SGA clerk/typist Susan Goodrum. Stated Evans, "If all the pledges come in, our efforts will have been worthwhile...but we still have a long way to go before we are decently equipped out here." Evans also reports that there will be another fund-raising event attempted this summer, but declined to elaborate further, explaining, "It is still tentative and won't be along the same lines as Marathon 91."

For anyone interested in becoming a part of WLOZ's staff, there are presently openings for the positions of Program Director, News Director, Business Manager, and Operations Manager. These are all scholarship positions, and those persons who wish to become involved with the production aspects of a radio station can submit a letter of application to Linda Moore, Director of Student Activities; Betty Jo Welch, staff advisor; or John Evans. There are also weekly staff meetings every Wednesday at 5 p.m. in the Pub, and all students are invited to attend.

Summed up Evans, "I think students are becoming aware of the importance of this radio station. We are serving the public as best we can."

Azalea Festival ends

Wilmington held its thirty-third annual North Carolina Azalea Festival April 10-13, bringing to the Port City a variety of stars, entertainment, and fun. This year's queen was Lacey Neuhaus, an actress in the NBC series "From Here to Eternity." She was officially crowned in ceremonies last Saturday night in Trask Coliseum. Other highlights of the Festival included a concert by Dionne Warwick, The Thunderbirds, the Clyde Beatty-Cole Brothers Circus, a Variety Show and showings of the USS North Carolina Battleship Memorial, the "Immortal Showboat."

Queen Lacey attended

many events, among them garden tours, art shows, a tour through the Historic District, a tour through the Wilmington-New Hanover Museum and, of course, the spectacular parade.

AN EDITORIAL

We exhibit varying patterns of behavior on the campus of UNCW. Whether these patterns are desirable depends upon one's personal philosophy of life.

I would like to address one such form of behavior that leaves something to be desired. Many students have spoken of the student apathy at UNCW but a cure for this social ill has not been introduced. The only solution is to devote ourselves to unifying our campus into a whole. With each of us going in our own separate ways, it seems evident that we should have an apathetic student body. We are not a "whole" but no more than the sum of our parts.

In order to have a unified student body we must have common interests. Discovering these interests must have commonests will be the real test of our concern for student apathy. We could begin by developing a more receptive attitude towards our fellow students, regardless of whom they are. Our learning environment extends beyond the classroom. Sometimes we close doors before we allow ourselves a chance to explore what may be in store for us. We end up hurting ourselves and the university as a whole each time we do this.

We must avoid rash decisions not because they are rash but because we usually tend to regret them. Spontaneity is a desirable trait but when we make decisions concerning someone other than ourselves we have a lot more to take into consideration.

Our purpose at UNCW is to prepare ourselves for a world outside of campus life. We must avoid becoming pompous until we are sure we have reason to be.

Dear Editor,
As a first semester freshman and a first time Azalea Festival viewer, I was very impressed at the "turn-out" for the parade. The entries were grand and the floats magnificent. Only one thing disturbed me about the Azalea Festival Parade, The University of North Carolina at Wilmington WAS NOT even represented. If I can recall, early in the semester there was a running for Miss UNCW. Correct me if I'm wrong but was there not a representative? Then, one question. "Why wasn't Miss UNCW there?" Every other queen was. I think that is a disgrace to the College and Wilmington. I'm thoroughly disappointed about this and I think if UNCW wants a distinguished reputation then WE should "get involved."

Signed,
Disappointed Freshman

Laura Mae McLean returns for presentation

The University Program Board is pleased to announce that singer-guitarist Laura Mae McLean will be performing in the Good Wood Tavern on Sunday, April 20 at 8:30 p.m. This will be the last Coffee house presentation of the year. The UPB Coffee House Committee sponsored many acts this year; among them Tom Parks, Barry Drake, The Two Maes, Morrison and Powell, and the jazz trio Hands.

This is a return appearance for Ms. McLean who appeared as one of the "Two Maes" in the fall and also shared billing with comedian Tom Parks during the Good Wood Anniversary. Laura Mae is a student at UNCW and a regular act at local clubs. Her repertoire consists of songs she has written and material by other artists, such as Linda Ronstadt, Jimmy Buffet, Bonnie Raitt, Emmy Lou Harris, and many others. Laura Mae's strong singing voice, accompanied by her guitar-playing has developed a local following, with original songs such as "Let You Fall", "The Jane Fonda Blues," and "My Glass House."

This performance is free to UNCW students and Laura Mae would like to dedicate it to all the friends at UNCW who have made it out to the other shows and thank them for their wonderful support.

The English Department has announced that Tuesday, April 22 is the deadline for entries in The Shannon Morton Essay Contest. The topic is "The Event Which Most Changed My Life." According to Dr. James Collier, coordinator of the contest, all entries should be original essays "focused on an event, personal or public, that has had a significant impact on your life or your perception of the human situation."

The annual essay contest was established to honor Miss Shannon Morton, the first chairperson of the UNCW English Department. Miss Morton, who retired in 1965, was the first full-time teacher and one of the original members of the Wilmington College Faculty of 1947.

All entries should be turned in to the Department of English Office. The first place prize is $50, the second place prize is $30, and the third place prize is $20. Dr. Rossetol and Mr. McCall, instructors in the English Department, are donating the money.

Officers sworn in at last Senate meeting

The old Senate stepped down and a new Senate launched its course at the April 10 session of the Student Government Association.

Jack Allen moved that "experience is too valuable a commodity to put a price tag on," such that it being "Senator Emeritus" would be an appropriate position for senators graduating in 1980. The motion was approved by the Senate.

Jonathan Fail presented the President's Award to Jack Allen for four years of outstanding dedication to the SGA. Glen Downs presented his awards to Todd Fennell and Corey Gore for their work in the Senate.

Doug Browne, former Chief Justice, swore in Johnny Ward as the new Chief Justice. Ward then swore in the new SGA members.

Pete Johnson, Michael Hutchinson, and Steve Griffin are the new members of the Student Supreme Court. Benita Wilson, Floyd Thompson, and Rusty Holdt will be on the University Court.

The new Senate approved Michelle Bond as the new Treasurer of the SGA. Mike Stroud was chosen to be the chairman of the Board of Elections. Lynn Wells, former chairman of the Board of Elections is the new SGA secretary.

The new Vice-President Charles Parsons issued a proclamation to all clubs and organizations stating that their charters must be submitted to the SGA office no later than April 16. If an organization has a charter on file, it must be updated with officers, advisors, and telephone numbers where they can be reached. If a club does not have a charter, packets will be available explaining procedures for establishing a charter.

Under new business, Pete Divoky submitted a resolution stating that the executive officers of the Senate should have the power to allocate funds as necessary during the months the Senate is not in session. The resolution passed by acclamation.

The University Concert

Choir announced it had used only a portion of the funds allocated to them and, therefore, returned the remainder of the funds over to the Senate for future allocations.

The meeting adjourned at 9:30.

The next regular meeting of the Student Senate will be Thursday at 7:00, in C-218. Finance Committee Budget Reviews will begin on Wednesday April 16, 1980. All clubs and organizations are asked to sign up at the SGA office. Please come by and pick up your budget packets also.

43rd Annual NCSL meets in Raleigh

On March 26, the North Carolina Student Legislature met in Raleigh for its 43rd Annual Session. NCSL is the oldest student legislature in the nation, founded in 1937. NCSL serves two basic purposes. First, it educates students in the legislative process through research, bill committee meetings, and debate on pieces of legislation and resolutions. Second, it provides a forum for student opinion and a means of conveying this opinion and to the NC General Assembly. Each year NCSL provides a compendium of the legislation it passes at Session to each member of the General Assembly. Approximately 40 percent of all legislation passed by NCSL become law in North Carolina. In addition to the five day Annual Session in Raleigh, monthly meetings or Interim Councils (I.C.'s) are held each month. These are hosted by the various 26 member colleges across the state, with each school trying to see who can throw the best I.C.

This year's Session convened on Wednesday the 26 in the House chamber of the Old Capitol Building. For the next four days and nights the delegates worked in the House and Senate from 8 a.m. till 11 p.m. stopping only for meals and to hear Governor Jim Hunt's address to NCSL. After chamber sessions, bill committee meetings were held until 12 a.m. Afterwards the delegates "socialized" in various delegations rooms. The work was hard, the hours long, but the debate and the legislation that came from it were outstanding. Steve Murphy, Jason Tyson, and Mark Bremer did an outstanding job representing UNCW. As a matter of fact, Mark Bremer was elected to be the new NCSL Attorney General for 1980-81.

Anyone who wants a challenge and is willing to work for a better North Carolina is invited to attend the next delegation meeting, this Thursday at 4 p.m. upstairs in the library conference room (#2). Pictures will be taken and ELECTIONS held at THIS meeting.

Allison delights audience

April 8 in Kenan Auditorium a lucky few got a taste of puppet fantasy complements of UNCW Fine Arts Committee and the Allison Puppet Company. Staged in five scenes Drew Allison, a third year English major, bounced, balanced and paced his creations all over the Kenan stage to the audiences' delight.

His original story centered on a grandfatherly puppeteer faced with unpaid bills and a threatening bill collector, who, the old man fears, will take his puppets as compensation.

Frustrated, the puppeteer pours out his sorrow to his three little people and their dog. Spot. Assuming he will lose them, the old guy sets off hopelessly dusting away his heavy heart. Meanwhile, his puppets come to life and quickly put forth a plan to have a circus to raise the money and get rid of the nasty bill collector.

The puppet circus that follows brought several hearty rounds of applause from the audience, and the little folks attending went nuts. The entire show was expertly choreographed and went off enjoyably. The music befitted each scene and Allison instilled in his puppets more than enough spunk to make his presence on stage negligible.

The time and effort Allison put into the performance was obvious. The puppets had a wide-eyed enchantment made even more special with the music accompanied by Allison's hustling showmanship. It was an evening well worth attending; too bad the magic lasted for only one performance.

Seahawks Continue Losing Streak

Eddie Knox

Coach Bill Brooks' Seahawks have plummeted to new depths in their 1980 campaign, losing the last seven times they have taken to the field.

In all seven losses, the opposition has scored a minimum of seven runs, while averaging 11. The Hawks have been held to a four run average.

UNCW, whose last victories came on April Fools' Day in a double shutout against West Liberty State (1-0 and 3-0), began the current string in Cullowhee, losing twice to Western Carolina, 7-5 and 19-8.

Pembroke State visited Brooks Field on April 8 and topped the home-standing Hawks by a 7-3 score. The real story, however, was not Pembroke's win, but the Seahawks' loss. UNCW outthit the visitors and drew nine walks, but stranded 16 baserunners. Bases loaded situations in the fourth and seventh innings went for naught, as the Hawks hit into double plays each time.

A trip to Rocky Mount proved disastrous on April 9 as N.C. Wesleyan bombed the Seahawks, 18-5. The game wasn't as close as the score indicated, however, as UNCW tallied three runs in the ninth to provide the final margin. Tim Whitehead's triple and single, along with two hits apiece from Jim Montague and Paul Murr supplied the Hawks firepower.

UNCW traveled to Raleigh on April 9 to oppose powerful N.C. State, and played possibly their best baseball of the losing streak despite dropping a 10-4 decision to the Wolfpack. The contest was wide open until the eighth inning, when State crossed home plate five times. Except for two Seahawk errors in the deciding eighth, Hawks hurler Kenny Smith might have been able to halt the Wolfpack attack. The errors cost Smith and the Seahawks three runs, however, and reliever Johnny Connor immediately gave up Tim Barber's second two-run blast of the contest, cruising State to a comfortable 10-3 lead. UNCW, which stroked nine hits, hit into four double plays.

Friday's game against Campbell was declared a forfeit by the umpires after Coach Brooks disputed a call in the fourth inning, the final being mandatorily 9-0.

East Carolina visited Brooks Field last Sunday, and left with a hard fought 7-4 victory over the Hawks. The visitors, who were 17-5 coming into the contest, opened the scoring in the first inning with a run, but the Seahawks knotted it at 1-1 on Tom Jones' first career home run in the fifth. The Pirates showed UNCW how they attained their lofty record in the seventh inning and again in the eighth, however, as Butch Davis keyed the attack with a two run shot off reliever Mike Williams, giving ECU a demanding 7-1 advantage. The Hawks made a gallant comeback effort with three runs in their half of the eighth, designated hitter Rick Watkins driving in two with a lined-shot double, and Jones the other with a sacrifice fly.

The Seahawks, 6-18, face East Carolina again, this time in Greenville next weekend.

Tom Jones scores one of the few Hawk runs lately

'Hawk Netters Sing "Twos Blues"'

Eddie Knox

Over the past two weeks, the UNCW tennis squad has had a case of the "twos blues." This mysterious malady has given rise to serious complications, resulting in a pattern of two wins, two losses, two wins, and two more losses.

On Tuesday, April 1, the Hawks hosted Pembroke State, and came away with an 8-1 triumph over the visitors. UNCW then began a three game road trip to the Old Dominion State in style, thrashing Virginia Wesleyan, 9-0. Two victories.

The final two legs of the trip weren't as pleasant for the Seahawks, however, as they dropped a rain-shortened 6-0 decision to Old Dominion on April 4, then were defeated 9-0 by strong William and Mary the following day. Two losses.

UNCW returned home on April 8 to replay a rained-out match against Methodist. The Seahawks won every set in the process of destroying the visitors, 9-0. The next day, the Hawks traveled up to Buies Creek and tripped Campbell, 6-3. Two more victories.

This last weekend in the Azalea Classic, which UNCW co-hosted with Campbell, guests from UNC-Charlotte and the College of Charleston treated both hosts rather rudely, sweeping the two-day event. In Friday's action, Charleston stomped Campbell 9-0, while Charlotte blitzed the Seahawks, 8-1. Saturday was no better for either UNCW or Campbell, as UNC-C destroyed the latter, 9-0, and Charleston topped the Hawks 9-0. Two more losses.

The only bright spot for UNCW was Lance Thompson's victory in no. 4 singles action Friday, but Coach Larry Honeycutt seemed optimistic over the outcome.

"We knew that both Charleston and Charlotte were very strong coming into the tournament, and since we gave it our best effort, I don't feel too badly about losing."

The Seahawk netters, now 8-12, play their final home matches of the year this week. Today they face St. Andrews at 2:30, Friday N.C. A&T visits, and UNCW closes out their 1980 home schedule Tuesday at 2:30 against Campbell.

Mailloux Paces Golfers To Two Victories

Drew Allison

The UNCW Men's Golf team has played admirably in its last three matches.

The team finished 13th out of a field of 26 teams in the Elon Invitational on March 31-April 1.

In the first round for the Seahawks, Bob Mailloux shot an 81, Buck Propst stroked an 84, John Cregan had a 78, Don Torres shot an 84, Chris Gibson stroked a 78 and Rick Bergin had an 89 for a total first round score of 405.

The second round saw Mailloux improve to a 76 as did Propst, Cregan had an 83, Torres shot an 82, Gibson fell to an 85 and Bergin had an 86.

Their next match was against team coach Jerry McGraw's old alma mater, Campbell College. The Seahawks played well and came away with the win, 319 to 325.

Mailloux shot a 77, Cregan had an 81, Torres stroked an 82 and Gibson shot a 79.

And then last Friday, April 11, the team defeated Methodist College on their home course, Echo Farms Country Club, here in Wilmington.

This match saw Mailloux shoot a sensational 70, 2 under par, Gibson had a 79, Bergin had an 80 and Cregan had an 81. The final score was UNCW 310, Methodist 325.

The team players are pleased with how they have been playing recently. Bob Mailloux said, "We've been playing fairly well, we've won the last two matches."

The Golf team has one tournament remaining in the season, The VTI Invitational in Virginia. The team leaves the 16 for the two day tourney on the 17 and 18.

Mailloux added, "We hope to play well."

OPINION

Should we send our Olympians to Moscow?

Eddie Knox

Probably one of the most polarized situations that exist in sports, and the world, today is the question of sending a United States Olympic team to the Summer Games in Moscow.

You're either for or against it. There is no uncommitted answer. Either A) we should send a team to Moscow because the Olympics should be free from political overtones and pressures, and our athletes have trained much too long and hard to be disappointed at the last moment by overzealous politicians, or B) the Soviets, by virtue of their heinous invasion of Afghanistan and subsequent refusal to depart, have rendered it impossible for the United States, and any country that believes in personal freedoms, to participate in these hypocritical Olympics.

To an athlete who has trained years for a chance to compete against the world's finest, "A" is the only valid answer. For them, the Olympics are above politics, above government, above everything. That is where they are wrong.

As participants, the athletes feel they should not be denied the privilege to compete. If these participants could step back, however, and observe the circumstances from an impartial viewpoint, they would see that sending Americans to Moscow would be in effect excusing, even condoning, the Russians' actions in Afghanistan. Too, the vast sums of money spent by the American athletes while in Moscow could be viewed as funds relinquished to our most powerful foe for use against us.

Personally, I was much relieved to see in recent days that some of our NATO allies, as well as Japan, have begun to back us up. This is especially true of West Germany, whose government has officially stated that it wants its Olympic team to remain at home this summer. This will strengthen the boycott further, and if continued, will teach the Soviets a rather expensive lesson in international politics, as their multi-billion dollar sports facilities could get exceedingly lonely this summer if only a few countries choose to compete.

As the saying goes, sometimes it's hard to see the forest for the trees, but hopefully our young Olympic squad will do just that, and realize that power unchecked (the Afghanistan invasion) will only grow and thirst for even greater power. Our Olympians can play a major role in suppressing that power by choosing not to compete in the Moscow Olympics.

UNCW's club football team ended their short spring schedule with an impressive 15-6 win over highly-regarded Appalachian State University Saturday.

The Seahawks, who ended their spring schedule at 1-1, opened the scoring early in the first quarter on a 35-yard Buckingham to Woods bomb, giving the 'Hawks a quick 7-0 lead.

UNCW then struck again later in the quarter on a 25-yard fumble recovery runback, adding a 2 point conversion to give the 'Hawks a demanding 15-0 advantage.

That score held until midway through the third quarter, when Appalachian intercepted a Buckingham pass and returned it for a touchdown, missing a 2 point conversion afterwards, and leaving the Seahawks with the final 15-6 win.

It is apparent to the Seahawk sports staff that although UNCW has the potential to field a Division III football team, nothing will be done until the administration and the business community at-large throw their support, and revenues, behind it.

As a member of the team stated, "UNCW can no longer use the sea and the sun alone to draw a larger student population, they (the administration) must use sports as their main drawing card, which makes a Division III football team a necessity for the coming years."

Phi Kappa Phi Established

A Chapter of the national Honor Society of Phi Kappa Phi has been established at UNCW by the efforts of Dr. W. Lee Johnston and a core of other faculty members who were elected to membership in this honor society in their graduate or undergraduate years. This group applied to the national office for a charter at UNCW, which was granted only after a study of this institution and its faculties were completed to the satisfaction of Phi Kappa Phi. The Charter members are as follows:

Haskell Hart, President; Marvin Margolis, Vice President; David Dean, Secretary-Treasurer; Lewis E. Nance, Public Relations; Rebecca Sawyer, Grace Burton, Marcee Jo Meyers, Carol Ellis, Samuel Garren, Larry Usilton, Gil Bane, James Halsey, Fred Toney, Timothy Haywood, and Lucinda Hollified.

The Phi Kappa Phi Honor Society was founded at the University of Maine at Orono in 1897. There are 215 chapters distributed in 49 states, plus the District of Columbia, the Philippines, and Pueerto Rico. Men and women in all academic fields are eligible for membership on the basis of scholarship, integrity, and character. The Phi Kappa Phi Motto is: "Let the love of learning rule mankind."

The fact that an institution has to prove its excellence before a chapter of Phi Kappa Phi can be chartered makes membership in this honor society more valuable to the student or graduate. The society is convinced that recognizing persons of good character who have excelled in an academic area will stimulate others toward this achievement.

Phi Kappa Phi makes the following statements:

"Phi Kappa Phi is an HONORARY society, not an HONORARY society or fraternity. Membership in it is earned; it is a real honor."

"Meeting Phi Kappa Phi's criteria means excellence which, in turn, means distinction."

"Because of their outstanding records, members of Phi Kappa Phi are always good candidates for grants, scholarships, and fellowships from institutions where they may continue their education or do research. When they seek jobs, they find their Phi Kappa Phi membership is becoming more widely accepted as an indication of academic ability and motivation.

"Phi Kappa Phi is discriminating—never discriminatory!—in insisting upon very high quality also in the institutions to which it grants chapters; e.g., it insists upon strong faculties and ample libraries. It is thus conscious of an obligation to assure its initiates that they are coming into a really worthwhile organization."

The Society's By-Laws allow for consideration for membership of those senior and second semester Junior students who are in the top 10 and 5 percent of their classes, respectively. (These conditions can be more stringent as decided by the local chapter).

The chapter installation will be done by Dr. James T. Barra, Regional vice-president of Phi Kappa Phi, and new members will be inducted into the Honor Society by the charter members on May 1, 1980, at 3:30 P.M., at King Hall, where they will receive a certificate and a key or pin signifying the event.

UNCW's new SGA President encourages student participation

Becoming the President of UNCW's Student Government Association is the zenith of an interest Jesse Sanders has had for years. "I got interested in politics when I was a sophomore in high school," he explains. "It has been quite some time. About eight or nine years. The more I got into it, the more I get interested in it."

Sanders, originally from Myrtle Beach, South Carolina, is a Computer Science major with an emphasis in Business Administration. This past year, he was the Treasurer of the student body. He has held several offices within his fraternity. After he graduates, he says he wants to work for a while and later get his Masters in Business Administration.

The close margin of the presidential race (Sanders won by three votes) was surprising to many people, including Sanders. "I was shocked," he states. "I really was, because it was so close. It was one of the closest races in memory. I was very happy to win. Words can't describe it. It was something we campaigned quite a bit for. The student turnout impressed me. Hopefully, it's a pattern for the coming years."

Sanders says that there needs to be more communication between the SGA and the clubs. "I would like to see the SGA work more closely with clubs and organizations. That's important for next year because we won't have much money," he explains. "Another thing I rate high on my list is fiscal responsibility. We need to set goals for what we want to do. We need to do some belt-tightening.

We're just going to have to do that."

Although he was pleased with the increased voter turnout in the elections, Sanders is still concerned about the student apathy that is prevalent on campus. "I'd like to see students participate more. It gives them a better role of what their national government is," he states. "There's so much we can do on campus if we can get more students to participate. That is one thing I'd really like to see."

Sanders stresses that the SGA is for the students and they should come to it any time they need help. "I'd like to implore the students to come and talk with me. Any time they have a problem, come up to the SGA Office. That's what we're here for," he maintains. "We're a few students working for a lot of students. It takes the students out there to come in here and say 'Hey, this is what's happening. What can you do for us?' I think this will make the student body better off."

UNCW's new President has many goals, but his two major concerns involve student input and money. "I want more students to participate," Sanders says. "I also want the Senate to get more fiscally responsible. If we can do that we can walk out and say 'We've done something.'"

New SGA officers eager to work for fellow students

The elections are over, the votes have been tallied, and the Student Government Association's new officers are ready to get down to business. All of them, seniors on down to sophomores, are eager to work for their fellow students.

"I was just happy that I was elected," says Mark Bremer, Attorney General. "I'm looking forward to working with the SGA next year and just basically working with the people. I think I have something to contribute." Bremer, from Greenville, N.C., is a political science major who plans to go to law school. He says he has been interested in politics since "about the fifth grade." He is actively involved in the North Carolina Student Legislature. The biggest change on campus he would like to see involves student participation. "I'd like to see more students involved in the SGA," Bremer states. "I'd also like to see better attendance at the SGA meetings."

John Ward, Chief Justice, is from Lumberton, N.C. "I was pleased with the results," he says, "and I'm hopeful that by winning I'll be able to make the Student Court more active." Ward is working toward a double major in political science and history. He says he has been interested in politics ever since he was in junior high school. Last year, he was a senator in the SGA and was the Chairman of the Parking Committee. "The main thing I want to do," Ward explains, "is try to get more student input into the SGA."

Doug Browne, Senior Class President, is a history major with a concentration in political science. "I was very elated, relieved and grateful to the students who voted for me," states Browne. He says that he has been interested in politics for as long as he can remember. On May 17, Browne will be a delegate to the State GOP convention. Browne has been an Associate Justice and Chief Justice of the Student Supreme Court, the Vice-President of the UNCW Historical Society, a member of Who's Who Among Students in College, the Associate Editor of THE SEAHAWK and an officer in the Campus Republicans. He states that his main concern is continuing "to serve the students to the best of my ability."

Karin Wansley, Senior Class Vice-President, is a child psychology major from Charlotte, N.C. "I figured I was going to win because I was unopposed," she states, "but I was happy I got as many votes as I did." Wansley says that she "never really got interested in politics" until she came to UNCW. She has been the Secretary of the SGA, the Assistant to the President, the Secretary and Treasurer of the Black Student Union, a senator-at-large and a junior class senator. She has also served on the Equal Opportunity Committee. Student apathy is something Wansley says she would like to see changed. "The main change necessary involves the apathy that's going on. Students need to get involved."

"I was unopposed but I'm glad I'm going to be in the SGA," says Pete Divoky, Junior Class President. "Whether or not I won I was going to take an active part. I was really pleased." Divoky, from New Bern, N.C., is a communications major who hopes to go on to graduate school. He has been involved in organizations such as TKE fraternity, the Rowing Team, the Chancellor's Calendar Committee and the University Program Board, where he served as the Publicity Chairman. "As far as the students themselves," he states, "I would like to see them more concerned with what's going on at the University."

As far as the Administration, I'd like to see them consider the students more when they make decisions. I encourage people to take part in everything about student government."

Baxter Miller, Junior Class Vice-President, is a business major from Lumberton, N.C. "I was glad to win it," says Miller. "I plan on doing a real good job." Miller, who transferred from Louisiana College, says he has been interested in politics "for about the last four years." After he graduates, he wants to run a small business. The financial and parking situations are two issues that Miller is especially concerned about. "I'd like to see that the money goes to the students," he states. "I want to see the clubs get their fair share. I also want to see the parking situation improved. I think that the near future looks a lot better for students."

"I wanted it, I wanted it bad," states Steve Schmidt, Sophomore Class President. "The main reason I ran was for the students and for the future. As long as I'm in office I plan to do everything I can." Schmidt, from Jacksonville, N.C., is a pre-law and computer science major. "I've always been interested in politics and how elections are run," he explains. He has been the Freshman Class Vice-President, a Senator, and he has been working with the intermural program. "I'd like to see student apathy deteriorate, I'm going to do everything I can to make the students satisfied. If we make the majority happy, maybe we can get more student involvement."

Kathy Mott, Sophomore Class Vice-President, is a business major from New York State. "I was very happy to win, of course," she states. "I was about the only opposed candidate in the sophomore class. Mott says that she

New Beatles' album revives interest in rock-n-roll

The question for the day is: with all the less-than-excellent music that seems to be flooding the market, what could be better than a new Beatle album to revive everyone's interest in rock 'n' roll? What's that you say? There are no Beatles, so wallets of their public by releasing several anthologies of either hits, rock 'n' roll music, or love songs. The music, needless to say, was always of the highest quality, but often the packaging left much to be desired. With the newest Capitol collection sleeve has pictures on it.

Unlike THE BEATLES RARITIES import, which contains little more than the B-sides of several successful singles, the American version of this album has some legitimate rarities on it. For instance, John Lennon's "Across The Universe" is featured, but it's the version he gave to the World Wildlife Fund in 1969. This cut is slightly faster than the one found on LET IT BE, and is the superior rendition according to some Beatle fanatics. The-er's a mono version of "Helter Skelter" that is noticeably different from the stereo track on THE WHITE ALBUM, mostly due to the louder McCartney vocal. This take is further delineated by the absence of Lennon's fam-how can there be a new Beatle Album? Well boys and girls, it's so, and what better way to open a new decade than to be presented with a new LP by the fab four. It was ten years ago this month that Paul McCartney officially ended one of the world's greatest phenomena, when he announced he was leaving The Beatles. For all practical purposes John Lennon had already done as much, but McCartney, even the PR man, managed to finagle the spot light by calling a press conference and making the whole business a production of major proportions.

In the ensuing years Capitol Records sought to do their bit to keep the Beatle name deep in the

tion of Beatle songs, aptly entitled BEATLE RARITIES. we are presented with a first-rate packaging effort, as well as an albums worth of variations of well-known Beatle favorites. The front of the jacket displays a photo from the September 1968 LIFE cover picture-sessions, while the back of the jacket contains many interesting snips of information on each individual track. The album opens up to reveal sundry photos on one side, and the infamous "butcher" shot on the other. Even the

CAMPUS CALENDAR

Students, faculty, and staff interested in organizing a health fair on campus next fall are asked to contact Rev. Bob Haywood, Campus Minister, at 799-1160 or campus extension 2117, or Linda Moore, Director of the Student Union/Activities, at extension 2283, or Catherine Vangellow and Linda Jasinski, Campus Health Servies, at extension 2533.

The fair could include exhibits, discussions, films and workshops on a wide variety of topics. Emotional, as well as physical health, would be addressed.

Interested individuals are asked to call one of the above people soon, as organization of the fair will begin this semester.

Winston-Salem attorney Myressa Schoonmaker will be in King Auditorium on April 29 at 4 p.m. to give an informal talk on how North Carolina's laws effect women specifically. This information is essential for all women in North Carolina, especially those soon to enter the working world. It will also lead to a better understanding of what the Equal Rights Amendment will really mean for North Carolina. Schoonmaker will be presenting "Women and the Law in North Carolina" the same evening at 7:30 p.m. in the YWCA.

Sonia Johnson, the nationally famous Mormon excommunicated by her church six months ago for her active support of the Equal Rights Amendment, will be in Wilmington May 1. She will speak on ERA at 8 p.m. in the New Building Auditorium. The community is invited: admission is $2.00, students free.

The deadline for reserving a space for a booth at the upcoming Seaside Jam celebration, is Friday, April 18.

The University Program Board invites campus and community organizations to take part in the Seaside Jam/Save the Whales benefit concert scheduled April 26, from 12 noon until 6:30 p.m.

Among the reserved booths are a lie detecting and fortune-telling Booth, sponsored by the Psychology Club and a wet sponge booth, sponsored by The Circle K Club.

If your campus or community organization would like to sponsor a booth, contact Steve Chiappisi, in the University Program Board office, by Friday, April 18.

"Yoga Dance," the final course in the Staying Alive Series offered by the UNCW Office of Continuing Education, will begin May 5 and meet on Mondays and Thursdays from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. through May 29.

Instructor Mary L. Humphreys will teach participants to combine awareness of Yoga with the freedom of creative movement to develop poise, coordination and individual potential through focus on muscle response. The class carries a $36 registration fee.

Edward Rietman, a student in chemistry at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington, has been selected in nationwide competition to receive a $1,000 research scholarship from Procter and Gamble Company.

His scholarship, one of six awarded, will be used to help finance his research on the chemical modification of biopolymers being conducted with Dr. Yousry Sayed of the UNCW Department of Chemistry.

The UNCW Biology Club needs plant buyers, shark eaters, and aluminum cans to help make their April activities successful.

The Biology Clubs has planned a plant sale for April 18, from 9 am till 4 pm in front of the greenhouse beside the Marine Sciences building. There will be a wide variety of plants available.

There will be a shark fry in the Biology Club booth at the Seaside Jam, April 26. Included in the $2.00 price will be fried shark, cole slaw, potato salad, and drinks. Everyone is encouraged to stop by the booth and try some shark.

The club will also be collecting aluminum cans during the month to help raise money. Donations of cans will be greatly appreciated. If interested in donating your extra aluminum cans please contact Phil Heitman at 799-7724.

Everyone is encouraged to participate in these activities to help support the efforts of the Biology Club.

BEATLES from p.9

ous howl, "I've got blisters on my fingers." The British mix of "I'm Only Sleeping" is included because the verses were rearranged and the guitar is somewhat different than on the American version.

George Harrison's "The Inner Light" is found here because it was released in the U.S. solely as the flip-side of "Lady Madonna," which came out initially during March of 1968. Two early Beatle gems, "Misery" and "There's A Place," make their American debut on a Capitol album as their only other LP inclusion was on INTRODUCING THE BEATLES on the old Veejay label. The comical "You Know My Name (Look Up My Number)" surfaces for the first time on an album after being released ten years ago as the B-side to "Let It Be." The German version of one of The Beatles' biggest hits, "She Loves

You," appears commercially for the first time since 1964. Entitled "Sie Liebt Dich," this German sung tune was put out first on the almost forgotten Swan label. Another mono cut of a White Album song, "Don't Pass Me By," is included, with Ringo's vocals sounding a little clearer than on the stereo version.

There are a lot of interesting items to take note of on this collection. Even the classic "Penny Lane" is in an altered form, different than the one with which we're all familiar. The one here is in stereo, and has the original trumpet ending that was edited off the takes that were put out commercially. Capitol even threw in the two seconds of gibberish that comes at the end of "A Day In The Life" and called it "Sgt. Pepper Inner Groove." Now that's getting rare. "Help," the British single version, is found here because the vocals here differ from the ones on the American albums. Altered versions of "Love Me Do," "I Am The Walrus," and "And I Love Her" are offered here to round out the agenda.

It goes without saying that this is a must for Beatle fanatics. RARITIES is an appropriate name for this album, as there are notable differences between these songs, and those with which we've become accustomed to. With record prices what they are, this could be termed a luxury item, but this is a definite cut above all of the post-Beatle compilations offered up by Capitol. If the album sales on this LP are good, there may hopefully be subsequent volumes of rarities in the future. God knows, Capitol has the material. Beatle fans who can't afford to be bonafide collectors, would love to see the release of such legendary songs like "Pink Litmus Paper Shirt," "Colliding Circles," "Not Unknown," "Annie," and "Four Nights In Moscow." Beatle music, like homemade remedies, are one of the great cure-alls. This album promises to give us all a strong dose of rock 'n' roll, and to get us back to where we once belonged.

University Program Board, where she was the Lecture Committee Chairman. "I'd like to see the money be used for the students more," she states. "I just want to encourage students to come to the meetings and get involved."

"SOLES" from p.3

is a good approach to new work. It has been used successfully by the Arena Stage in Washington, D.C. for the past several years.

Awards Presented

Mary Clark, with her essay "On Death and Growth," was awarded first place in the 3rd annual Shannon Morton Essay Contest. Clark was presented with a $50 cash prize by Chancellor Waggoner at the awards presentation, which was held on Monday at 11:30 in Kinnear Hall. Judy Stallsmith was given the $30 second place award for her work "Recording Session." The $20 third place prize was presented to Joyce Hollingsworth for "Reading Circle."

The honorable mentions were Jeffrey French's "The Subterranean Tomb," Vickie Lennon's "Running," and Sherry Niven's "How I Learned About Life, Myself and Dogs that Eat Chocolate Chip Cookies."

The judges of the contest were Eugene Huguélet, Dr. Richard Veit and Mildred Modlin. The first and third place essays were read by Dr. Jo Ann Seiple and the second place essay was read by Dr. James McGivern.

The essay contest is named in honor of Ms. Shannon Morton, the first chairperson of UNCW's Department of English and the first Dean of Women. Ms. Morton honored the awards ceremony with her presence. "It is indeed a pleasure to be back," she said. "I want to express delight in the number of students who are interested in writing and entered the contest. I heard that the essays this year were of superior quality. I urge the students to keep writing."

Bids Accepted

UNCW accepted bids last Wednesday on a construction project which upon completion, will change the face of the UNCW campus.

The plan, which was approved by the Board of Trustees a year ago, includes the erection of brick entryways at the entrances of Randall Drive and Riegel Roads at Highway 132 and a gateway bearing the university's name at the old A Street entrance.

In the past, there has not been a sign to identify the campus as the University of North Carolina at Wilmington. According to Carl Dempsey of the Office of Business Affairs, the project is going to give an identification to the campus.

Additionally, plans include brick paving the remaining portion of A Street back to, and halfway around the traffic circle and the landscaping of this area to construct a pedestrian mall.

According to Dempsey, the plans also include the eventual construction of a four foot brick wall connecting the entryways at Randall Drive and Riegel Road with the main entry and pedestrian mall. The wall will not be included in the initial construction due to the cost.

The major contributor to the beautification of the pedestrian mall will be the Cape Fear Garden Club. The club, which each year sponsors the Cape Fear Garden Tour during the Azalea Festival, voted recently to make the university their project this year, according to Joan Pence, president of the Cape Fear Garden Club.

In addition to donating the combined proceeds of this year's and last year's garden tours, indi-

WLOZ Station Manager Dismissed

President Jessie Sanders vetoed Senate legislation April 24 disallowing WLOZ station manager John Evans to continue serving as manager in a non-student capacity.

Pres. Sanders' action came after receiving two recommendations from Chancellor William H. Waggoner and Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs, Dr. William Malloy.

The Chancellor's statement said, "Only faculty, staff, and students may be affiliated with WLOZ."

Dr. Malloy's statement, issued February 22, 1979, said, "Non-students should not be involved" in the activities of WLOZ.

Pres. Sanders' veto came after the April 17 Senate meeting when the Student Government Association voted to allow Evans to remain station manager. After the recent developments, Evans will have to go through the hierarchy of being hired by the state and the University in order to retain his position as station manager.

SGA Treasurer Michelle Bond announced to the Senate that the Finance Committee is not being judgmental. "We are cutting funds, not activities," Bond said. The Finance Committee has had to eliminate entirely the Emergency Fund and has made a 6.5 percent cut across the board in order to relieve a $45,000 operating deficit. If everything operates as scheduled during the coming year, the SGA will have more funds during the next fiscal year.

The Media and Publications Board's recommendations were approved by the Senate. Tricia Wallace will continue as the Seahawk editor. Sherry Niven will be the editor of Atlantis and Alda Faircloth will be the fledgling editor.

Susan Goodrum, clerk-typist for the SGA, received recognition for her work through a resolution submitted by Steve Schmidt. The resolution included the title of "Student Government Office Manager" for Goodrum's receptive and pleasant attitude in working with the SGA.

Pub Open During Exams

The Student Services building will again cater to the needs of students during exams by remaining open until midnight on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, May 4, 5, and 6. The Good Wood Tavern and lounge provide quiet areas for individuals or group study. The recreation room provides pool, ping pong, chess, checkers and backgammon.

On Wednesday, May 7, a free "Midnight Special" concert will be held to afford all of you diligent students a short break. Playing for about an hour, the band, DC-10, will entertain with its unique variety of music, best described as "cajun rock", with bluegrass, top 40 and old gold all mixed in. (You may have heard about this group after its very successful date at the Patio on Saturday, April 19.) Featuring Roy Richardson, one of the hottest fiddlers around, DC-10 will provide one of the best study breaks you've ever had. Free munchies will also be provided.

Join your friends and take a break at the Pub.

Amendment Upheld

The UNCW Student Supreme Court conditionally upheld the constitutional validity of an amendment passed by the Student Government Association. This amendment stated that the President of the SGA could have speaking and debating powers in Senate meetings.

After a lengthy trial Tuesday afternoon, the court ruled that speaking and debating powers given to the President was not in violation of the Constitution. However, before the amendment was acceptable, the court specified the limitations of these powers which were subject to a variety of interpretations until clarified by the court.

Ms. Betty Jo Welch, Associate Professor of Speech and Communications, and a registered parliamentarian, was a key witness at the trial. According to Dr. Welch, ROBERT'S RULES OF ORDER does not recommend granting speaking and debating powers to the President because the President has ample opportunity to make recommendations to the Senate during the President's report and to prevent undue influence upon the Senate.

The court ruled to allow the President speaking and debating powers because of the expertise of the President and his insight into various matters that would expedite Senate procedure by allowing him to speak and debate. The President will not be allowed to vote in the Senate, initiate legislation, or be counted in a quorum.

EDITORIAL

May will mark the 6th month since the Iranian "students" took 50 American citizens hostage from the American embassy in Iran. Since that day in October, many unsuccessful attempts have been made, both diplomatic and economic, to free these innocent people. On Saturday, April 26, an attempt to rescue these hostages was executed by a smidgen of military personnel, along with the blessings of the President of the United States. Regrettably, "mechanical" difficulties prevented the successful operation of this plan, the most obvious ramifications of which, being the fact that the United States was made to look like an international laughing stock. This time it was Jimmy Carter and not the Ayatollah Khomeini who slapped the American public in the face.

National surveys taken in late December and January indicated that a majority of the American public approved of the way in which Mr. Carter was handling the Iranian crisis. In February and March, the absence of action from the Chief Executive on the crisis brought the overwhelming problems of inflation, unemployment, and high interest rates to the national limelight. Americans became deeply disturbed to realize that inflation, by March and perhaps earlier, had reached its highest level since World War II. The figures for unemployment increased proportionally, as did the prime lending rate. Other criticisms, including the fact that Jimmy has been campaigning from the Rose Garden for the 1980 democratic nomination, and the viable threat posed by Ted Kennedy to unseat the indecisive incumbent, forced the President to try something bold.

And bold it was. Against the advice of many executive advisors, most notably Cyrus Vance and other members of the State department, the President put this ill-conceived plan into motion.

Had this rescue attempt been a success, a great victory would have been scored for the United States. Conditions seemed perfect as the elites of Delta Squadron entered the embassy practically undetected by suspicious Iranian militants. It was at this point that the helicopters developed trouble and the President decided to abort the mission. In later commentary, defense Secretary Harold Brown stated that six helicopters were needed for the mission, but they felt that eight would be a comfortable margin. In light of what happened, one can't help but wonder why only eight were used. Why not twelve or sixteen? Do we have a shortage of helicopters in this country?

To be sure, our European allies are asking these same questions, amid laughter and ridicule from their constituents, as well as the Iranian nation itself. No doubt, the Iranian foreign minister will continue to warn the United States that we should not be interfering with "big, bad Iran."

This whole situation is somewhat reminiscent of what John Kennedy went through as a result of the Bay of Pigs invasion in 1961. Although the situation was somewhat different, the ramifications will most likely be the same.

The failure of this mission will no doubt give the Soviet Union the perfect opportunity to become chummy with Iran. In the next Iranian revolution, most likely to occur sometime this summer, the Russians will probably get one of Fidel Castro's brothers to incite the Iranians against the Imperialist United States, install a Marxist regime, and, by October we should be receiving reports of missiles planted in Iran, aimed at New York City.

Whatever the outcome, the fact remains that the reputation of the United States has been severely damaged. This ill-conceived mission, executed ultimately by the President, has made the United States a laughing stock around the world, and powerless in the eyes of the Iranians and, most importantly, the Soviet Union. With all of the technology and intelligence available to the President of the United States, there is no reasonable excuse for such a simple mission to turn into such a tremendous disaster. It has been traditional in the United States to rally around the Chief Executive in times of trouble. Hopefully, by November, this pseudo-patriotic sentiment will die down, and the American people will realize just how inadequate Jimmy Carter's leadership has been over the past three years. Common sense dictates that a change is in order. Why should we be subjected to another four years of anguish and embarrassment?

LETTERS

It's very difficult for me to sum up in a few words just how successful you have made this year's programming of events and how proud you have made me the entire year.

By now all of you know that in programming the work involved on any one event is enormous and the only recognition you receive is knowing that our fellow students had a good time. Deep down we all know they say thanks. Usually we can see it in their EYES!!

So how can I best sum up this year in programming. The success of an event, whether it be a movie, coffeehouse, lecture or dance is not determined entirely by how good the performance is but by how it is received by the students attending. In that respect, I dare say that the UPB did not have one unsuccessful program for 1979-80. A job well done.

In the four years of attending UNCWI can safely say that this year contained the most diverse and educational programs, yet to hit this college and yet all were as entertaining as our humble budget allowed.

The UPB this year numbered between 30-40 students all of which had the drive and imagination and stamina that would amaze any programming unit in ANY school. We have successfully made our mark this year at UNCW. We may not yet be well known, but we ARE KNOWN! If students don't recognize our logo or our pig yet they certainly recognize our hard work.

How can such an organization as the UPB fail now? The only way to go from now is up. We have junior and senior expertise now and next year that will carry us to the recognition we deserve. We have freshmen and sophomore programmers that are coming up in the ranks and that in a few years will dominate the UPB efforts. We have faculty and staff members that have lived through all of it before and will guide us and give us the kick in the a we need when we need it. (God knows we've needed it!)

It's a lot more difficult to run a successful program than anyone at this school in any area of student participation can imagine. We have had our arguments and disagreements with the SGA during the year but we have come to understand each others' views a lot better. Hopefully the long existing barrier has been broken down and we can do business more easily in the coming year.

Are We Analyzing Ourselves To Death?

UNCW Student Forum

This century will no doubt be known as the age of technology, but it could also be called the age of analysis. We analyze everything from the ingredients in a loaf of bread to the complex, intricate workings of our minds. What used to be an evening stroll has now become an exercise to strengthen our hearts, improve our circulation, stretch muscles, and clear our heads. However, if our thinking is still muddled, we can call our psychiatrist to find out why. Although we ask questions and receive answers, we continue to rattle through our lives hoping one part of ourselves will not break down while we're patching up another. We are becoming split; our physical selves separated from our spiritual, inner self. We have ceased to listen to that inner self. Instead, we relentlessly pursue knowledge of ourselves.

Our sources for self-knowledge are seemingly limitless. We are bombarded with books on how to like ourselves, how to like others, and how to get others to like us. We have a variety of cults or practices which we can follow: Transcendental Meditation, to help us concentrate and relax; yoga, for relaxation and meditation; EST, and other sensitivity training groups. California leads the nation in this never-ending quest, and the rest of us are quick to follow. We can soak in an outdoor wooden tub, stand on our heads, swap sexual partners, or join religious cults. We begin with Dr. Spock and end with the sociology of drying.

In between, we go through phases of health foods and vitamins, exercise for body and soul, moral injunctions for living right, and liberated ideas to cancel the moral injunctions. Delving into every area of our lives, we meet with others to discuss marriage, divorce, parents, children, religion, women, homosexuals, and lifestyles. Some of this discussion is good. Under expert guidance and care, we are learning to cope with difficult life situations and personality problems. This process can produce growth and satisfaction with ourselves as well as guidelines for rational relationships with others. But, unfortunately, such a variety of views is bound to create confusion, thus precipitating more self-doubt, more questions, and more analysis.

We learn that a person has a certain personality because of his childhood. But what comes next? Does this person stay as he is, or does he change? And if he's supposed to change, then how? How does an adult change his/her personality after 40 thirty years?

These are profound questions for someone unhappy with himself. It takes years of hard work involving changing thought patterns, altering life long views and habits, and an almost constant awareness of self alone and in relationship with others. Many people do succeed in growing and maturing, and many are healed and freed of their conflicts. But without legitimate reasons, so much "indwelling" destroys vitality, spontaneity, and naturalness. I have known people who like to name the vitamins in an orange or a glass of milk and wondered if they still relish the juicy sweetness or soothing coolness of their nourishment. I wonder do the joggers still notice the trees and sky and birds and squirrels, or is it just another body tune-up?

When some hidden meaning is attached to everyday actions and activities, we become stilted. This constant introspection produces an unnaturalness, a stiff and rigid person. For instance, if we were to take too seriously the studies in body language, we would become so self-conscious that we would hardly move. While the object of psychiatry is to free one, to loosen one up and enable him to live, the process of analysis can produce an opposite effect, a hyper-consciousness of self. We can perhaps become too calculating, too analytical. In trying to understand human beings, we might possibly lose our humanness.

I am not really against questions and analysis. They have produced good effects time after time. But I am suggesting that we use our common sense. I think we have an innate intelligence about ourselves that we need to listen to. If we do, we will learn and grow. If we really examine ourselves, we find that we know more than anyone else does about us. Many of our frantic quests could be dropped or exchanged for a few hours alone in which we mentally hunker down into ourselves. There is something in us, be it conscience or whatever, that will not steer us wrong. We don't need to put everything into boxes that are labelled and in perfect order. After all, it is the natural human self that is appealing, that is loved. Better to live a bumbling human being than a perfectly programmed computer.

Veteran Offers Draft Advice

All you able-bodied people are now liable for draft registration. When the draft does start inducting you, you have no choice on what job you will do. The most common job is Military Occupational Specialty (henceforth MOS) II B. II Bush is infantry. MOS 91 A is a medic, and so on. When you are drafted you'll attend 8 weeks of Basic Training. There you'll learn how to march, salute, make a military bed, shoot handguns, rifles, machine-guns, throw grenades, survive tear gas, and a myriad of other things. KP (Beatie Bailey style) existed when we were in, but it might not now-too bad, because if a guy had a date he'd usually pay you $20 to do KP for him, and guard duty. We call it incentive pay, and it wasn't taxable!

After Basic Training you'll go to AIT (Advanced Individual Training), which might be Armor, Medical, Intelligence, Infantry training, or whatever. After this training you'll probably go to a post (base) or even further training.

Then you do your job, 8 to 5, get promoted, and possibly go to war. Why war? Because you are a professional soldier, and (soldiers) either keep the peace or if you're Russian, make war.

Send in your questions or write to VA Sessions, P.O. Box 4306, Wilmington 28406, and include a stamp.

To The Editor,

In a recent meeting of the Finance Committee, the Fledgling was told that it would be allocated only $6500, in keeping with the new slimmer budget the SGA is trying to present. I feel that $6500 will not do it, and here is why.

In November of 1980 the Fledgling will receive the final bill covering the 1979-1980 Yearbook. This bill will amount to approximately $4500. The $6500 the SGA has allocated for the 1980-1981 Yearbook will have to pay this bill, leaving only $2000 to put that yearbook out. To that $2000, you can add PER-HAPS additional moneys being generated from book sales, advertisement sales, and various reimbursements. However, that amount will not be that high due to the economy and rising inflation.

Is it possible that the students of this school do not want or appreciate a yearbook? I wonder if instead of having a book, we should wait a year and have all debts paid off.

Sincerely,
Dave Kermon

University Administration Addresses Campus Safety Issues

As a result of committee meetings during January and February, campus safety issues are currently being addressed by the University Administration. The committee, which had representatives from the faculty, students, and staff, made the recommendations to Dr. Jairy C. Hunter, Jr., Vice Chancellor for Business Affairs.

Among the recommendations currently being implemented are 1. Establishment of a monitoring system to make sure all exterior campus lights are operational. This will be done by Security and Physical Plant in a coordinated effort. 2. Emergency telephones are being installed at nine public locations on campus. These telephones can also be used for regular phone calls; emergency numbers and functions will be available on each phone. These phones should be operational and ready for use by the next academic year. 3. A lighting survey is currently being done by a professional engineering firm to ascertain the areas with inadequate lighting. The committee cited areas around the Marine Science Buildings, right hand side of road leading to the dormitory areas, some areas around Trask Coliseum, and the Library. These areas, as well as the entire campus, will be professionally evaluated and needed plans to correct will then be made. 4. A 24-hour manning of the Security Radio Dispatch operation will be implemented by May 1, 1980. Previously, emergency calls were routed through the Wilmington Police Department after 10:00 p.m. and on weekends. 5. A campus information and education program will be coordinated through efforts of the Personnel Office, Dean of Students Office, Security Office, and the Safety Office. Articles are being placed in the Seahawk and portions of the student and staff orientation programs will be devoted to safety. Portions of the faculty and staff handbook will be devoted to safety. Students and employees will be reminded of their own responsibility for personal safety. 6. Wooded areas around the residence halls are now being cleared to within 25 feet of the parking lots. 7. Blinker lights are being installed at heavy volume pedestrian crosswalks (i.e., front of Bookstore, near the dormitory complex).

These changes should make our campus a safer environment; however, safety is a habit everyone should practice. Don't learn safety by accident!

New SGA Senators Concerned And Optimistic

The newly-elected Senators of the Student Government Association appear concerned and optimistic towards the growth of the SGA.

Bill Sanders and Maceo Bragg are the new Senior Class Senators. They were unopposed in the Senate race. Sanders, a political science major from Raleigh, realizes the need for more funds as the student body grows. He said he would like to see clubs and organizations "conduct extensive fund-raising efforts in the coming year. With an increasing student population, it is essential that the SGA motivate and encourage its member clubs to raise money on their own," said Sanders. Sanders has served on the Student Court and formerly a member of the Media and Publication Board.

Junior Class Senators Aaron Oliver and David McCall are both concerned with how SGA funds are being allocated. Oliver, from Charlotte, N.C., is majoring in communications. He sees his job as Senator as representing the Junior Class and having a voice in how the SGA monies are spent. McCall, from Brevard, N.C. is majoring in business administration. He would like to see communication improved between the student body and the SGA.

Melinda Clark, Sophomore Class Senator, is familiar with the "workings of the Senate." She has served as executive assistant to former president, Jon Pail. She is concerned with the increased fees for parking and how much will go towards additional parking spaces. Clark would like to see the Program Board have more variety in programming, including more lectures.

The at-large representatives ran for Senate seats for a variety of reasons. Tina Huston, a communications major from Cleveland, Ohio, said, "I feel the students' money is important. Not enough people are getting involved. Instead of complaining, I got involved."

Jeff Newton, of Wilmington, was re-elected to the Senate. "I felt that I could do something to help student government," said Newton. Newton is open for suggestions from other students that are concerned about the Senate.

Larry Gore recently transferred from Louisburg Junior College where he served in the Senate. "I was real happy about winning the election," Gore said. His main concern is "to see that the students are represented fairly."

Dale Fish is an at-large representative from Fayetteville, N.C. As a history major, he is interested in learning parliamentary procedure. Fish is also a member of TKE fraternity and an officer of the football club. "I'm glad I got all the votes I did," said Fish.

Renae Holloway, was re-elected to the Senate. She feels the Senate is doing a good job. Holloway worked in student government in high school. "Someone has to represent the students. I wanted to help the students," Holloway said. Holloway is a computer science major from Arapahoe, N.C.

Ray Kriegbaum, an English major from Buffalo, N.Y., was pleased with the high voter turnout. I had heard so much publicity about the SGA, I wanted to see what it was all about," said Kriegbaum. Kriegbaum is interested in raising the level of consciousness of students concerning the SGA. "I've lived at the beach, in an apartment, and in the dorms. I've got a pretty good idea of what most people think. My vote won't be for an exclusive group of people. I've experienced a cross-section," said Kriegbaum.

UNCW Students Volunteer Over 4,000 Hours Of Time

Not too long ago the word "volunteer" conjured up images of middle-aged women in pink uniforms pushing book carts in a hospital.

Fortunately, the scope of volunteering has changed. This year, UNCW students will volunteer over 4,000 hours of their time and services doing everything from making life easier for the mentally handicapped to helping homeless animals.

One campus organization, the UNCW Psychology Club, has worked this year to raise funds to sponsor six residents at the Caswell Center for the Mentally Handicapped in Kinston, N.C.

According to Bill Swain, "This is the first year that we have actually gotten outside of the university to help." Swain said that the club found out about the center through their advisor, Dr. Robert Brown who knew the center director. "The state has only a small sum of money to work with and it isn't enough. The center needs money and the state is short on funds."

To help meet the needs of the Caswell residents the club organized several fund raising activities. "We put a lot of time into yard sales and raffles," Swain said. The club had a yard sale, a turkey raffle, a clock radio raffle, and sponsored a band at the "Patio".

In all, the Psychology Club donated over $500 towards the purchase of records, bedspreads, and posters as well as funding for field trips and individual spending money for the residents they sponsor.

What does the club get out of their work? Swain said "It's the satisfaction of experience. The majority of us will be working in psychology in the future. We are getting experience for our field. Our goal for next year is to be able to double what we did this year."

But you don't have to be a well organized club to help others. UNCW student Julie Russ volunteers her Saturday mornings working at the New Hanover County Humane Society.

According to Julie, she decided to volunteer her time last semester when she was out of school because of an illness. "I just walked in and said 'Hey I'd like to help.'"

Helping, for Julie, includes coming in at eight in the morning to sweep and hose down dog pens, clean cat cages, change litter boxes and watering the animals. In addition she vacuums and mops the office floor-all before the center opens at ten.

From ten o'clock until the center closes at 2 o'clock, Julie helps to process animals. "I give shots, take temperatures, worm and weigh animals, and administer basic first aid." When she's not working with the animals, Julie answers the phone calls coming into the Humane Society. "We get some really interesting calls, a lot of people complaining of cruelty."

The most interesting call she remembers was one reporting that a collie had been found in the elevator at the law enforcement center. After being brought in the dog had 11 puppies. "All but two were adopted out," she recalls.

As for why she volunteers her time, Julie said, "It's worth doing. Seeing people come in and adopt animals is wonderful. Being something like a candy stripe is nice, but animals can't ask for help," she added.

National Volunteer Week was April 20-26, and was sponsored by the network of Voluntary Action Centers throughout the United States to honor those who have done volunteer work and to call attention to the needs and areas of volunteer services. Students interested in doing volunteer work should contact Linda Moore, Director of Student Activities or contact the local Voluntary Action Center.

Seahawk Sophomore Keith Runs In Marathon

Scott Sibley

"As a junior in high school I told a friend that one day I will run in the Boston Marathon," said a UNCW sophomore whose dream has come true.

Julian Keith qualified for the Boston Marathon by running in the Charlotte Marathon in January with a time of 2 hours, 48 minutes. "It was really painful and cold running in Charlotte," said Julian of the hilly-26 mile race. "It was 35 degrees with a head wind of 20 miles per hour. After 21 miles your body has lost its heat and you start having chills."

Julian started running as a junior in high school while training for basketball. "After high school I had no sport. I had to have something to do so I started running that summer."

Averaging 15 to 20 miles of running per day, Julian explains that "it is impossible to run with your problems. When I run, nothing else matters. I run for no other reason than just to do it; it's my thing."

When running intervals Julian enjoys running with other people, but when doing distance, he enjoys keeping himself company. "When I run distance I enjoy running by myself so I can set my own pace and enjoy a long slow run."

On September 9th Julian won the Triathlon held in Wrightsville Beach. It consisted of 1/4 mile of swimming, 42 miles of biking and ten miles of running. "The only reason I won was because I had the wind at my back," said Julian.

Julian decided to enter the Triathlon at the last minute. "My dad told me to try and place in the top 50, so I would get a shirt," he said.

"The most difficult part for me was the swimming. I was one of the last ones out of the water," Julian said. Julian went on to win by catching up during the biking and then taking the final lead in the last 400 yards of the 10-mile run.

After not running for the cross country team last year, Julian said he will run this fall. "I am really excited about cross country season and I am really going to try to do my best," Julian said. Staying in shape this summer by running 10 miles in the morning and 10 in the afternoon for six days a week and jogging on the seventh, Julian will be ready for the season.

Julian takes his running very seriously. Though at times he gets discouraged, his determination and positive attitude keep him going. "Sometimes something happens and you don't feel good. You feel like the worst runner in the world. But I guess that happens in every sport," explains Julian. "There are also times when a runner feels really good, he feels the best. This is when he must keep in touch with reality and not get in trouble with his ego."

Even though Julian didn't do as well as he hoped in Boston it was still quite an accomplishment to get to run in the world famous marathon.

Basketball Banquet Held

Eddie Knox

The fourth annual UNCW Seahawk basketball banquet was held at Angelo's Restaurant Thursday night, as Men's Head Coach Mel Gibson and Women's Coach Marilyn Christoph recognized the outstanding talent on each of their squads.

The gala event, co-sponsored by the Seahawk Club and the Athletic Department, began with Lady Seahawk Coach Christoph commenting that the 1979-80 season was a "building year" and that "good things are ahead for us."

Honored with the Most Improved Player Award was center Janet Grady, while forward Vertha Dixon received Christoph's Coaches' Award, recognizing the outstanding player on the team.

Men's Coach Gibson, after his third straight 19-win season, asked again "What are we going to do for an encore?", then introduced each player to the 60 people in attendance.

After presenting special pictures to each of the three seniors Barry Taylor, John Haskins, and Garry Cooper, Gibson gave the Most Improved Player Award to Sophomore guard Dennis Tobin, the Sportsmanship Award to Senior guard John Haskins and both the meritorious Star System Award and Most Valuable Player Award to Senior forward Garry Cooper.

In closing, Gibson pointed out that the Seahawk men finished third in the country in opponents field goal percentage, under 42 percent, and that "we are looking forward to another outstanding season next year."

UNCW Netters Second In ECU Tourney

Eddie Knox

The Seahawk netters, with four dual matches and the East Carolina Invitational to end the spring season, split the duals and finished a close second to East Carolina in the tournament.

The 'Hawks visited Wilmington April 15 to take on powerful Atlantic Christian College, and dropped an 8-1 decision to the home-standing squad. Charlie Ponton claimed the lone Seahawk victory, in number five singles over ACC's Whittenburg 1-6, 6-4, 7-5.

UNCW rebounded at home April 17, demolishing St. Andrews, 8-1. This time, only Ricky Watson's defeat in number two singles kept the verdict from being unanimous. Remaining 'Hawk netters were given virtually no trouble in dispatching the guests, as no other Seahawk lost a set during the match.

N.C. A&T visited Wilmington April 18, and UNCW won their second match in two days, blanking the Aggies by a 9-0 count. The 'Hawks lost only two sets in the entire contest.

Campbell University topped the Seahawks April 22, 5-4, the key being the three doubles losses to the Camels. Paul Gemborys, Ricky Watson, John Shackelford, and Lance Thompson all took their singles matches. The final dual match mark for UNCW was a respectable 10-14 mark, especially considering the brutal schedule.

The East Carolina Invitational in Greenville on Friday and Saturday included the 'Hawks, Campbell, and North Carolina Central as well as the hosts.

The Pirates won their event with an overall score of 21 points, while the Seahawks took second with 18. Campbell finished third with 15 points while Central failed to score.

UNCW winners included Sophomore Ricky Watson in number two singles, who then teamed with Freshman John Shackelford to win number two doubles. 'Hawk netters Charlie Ponton and Lee Smith united to take the number three doubles championship.

The 'Hawk netters should take great strides toward building a powerhouse tennis team next year, even with the loss of excellent number one seed Paul Gemborys to graduation, as the remainder of the squad are all underclassmen, giving Coach Larry Honeycutt every right to feel confident about the 1980-81 edition of the Seahawks.

'Hawks Snap Losing Streak

Eddie Knox

A respite in the season-long misfortunes of the UNCW baseball squad appeared in the form of two victories last week, a 4-2 decision over Pembroke and a 7-3 romp over Campbell.

The Seahawks win over the Braves Tuesday broke a ten game losing streak for the visitors, including recent losses to strong North Carolina and East Carolina clubs. Freshman Kenny Smith pitched a seven-hitter, while another freshman, right-fielder Tom Jones, became the batting hero for the 'Hawks, doubling in one run and sacrificing in another.

John Milkovits' sacrifice in the second inning scored Tom Phillips for a 1-0 'Hawks lead. UNCW stretched that advantage to 4-1 in the fifth, with Phillips and Tim Whitehead scoring.

Pembroke ended the scoring at 4-2 with a run off Smith in the eighth. The young ace struck out four and walked one in pushing his record to 4-5 on the year.

Wednesday's game against nationally ranked and highly regarded South Carolina was cancelled after seven innings to the tornadoes which the Gamecocks carried as bats. USC smacked 21 hits and combined these with five Seahawk errors to produce 22 runs.

The 'Hawks, who had held South Carolina to two runs after three innings, managed two runs in the bottom of the seventh for the final 22-2 count. UNCW's Tim Whitehead drove in the earned Seahawk run and had two hits on the night. Johnny Conner took the loss, his first decision of the year. The Gamecocks upped their mark to a sparkling 28-8 with the win.

Playing their third game in as many days against Campbell University on Thursday, UNCW put the South Carolina massacre out of their minds and did a bit of hitting themselves, downing the Camels, 7-3.

Leading the 'Hawk assault were catcher Jim Montague and first baseman Clyde Holley, who each stroked three hits and one run. Pinch hitter Ricky Watkins drove in two runs for the Seahawks.

UNCW took command of the contest in the middle innings, scoring a run in both the fourth and sixth, while pushing across two in the fifth. Starter Ronald Inman hurled four and one-third innings of two-hit, two-run baseball, then reliever and winner Johnny Conner, 1-1, shut down the Camel attack for one run over the final four and two-thirds innings. The 'Hawks pounded out thirteen hits off Campbell loser B. Jones.

In the Seahawks' final home game of the season Saturday against East Carolina, UNCW could never quite get their offense untracked and dropped a 4-0 decision to the Pirates, who jumped to 26-5 with the win, their fourth this season over the 'Hawks.

Although the Seahawks collected seven hits during the contest, their only major scoring threat came in the first inning, when UNCW loaded the bases with one out. A Clyde Holley grounder struck first base runner Tom Jones on the leg, forcing Jones out, however, Holley reached safety. John Milkovits then grounded out to end the inning. Seahawk hurler Mike Williams, who dropped to 1-2 with the loss, pitched all the way for the 'Hawks, who committed four errors.

The setback pulled the season mark down to 8-23 for UNCW, who ends the regular season Saturday at South Carolina, hoping to make a better showing this time in Columbia.

Lady Golfers Thrive

Eddie Knox

Women's Golf Coach Lea Larson, in her first year at UNCW, feels as though she is on firm ground in establishing a Division III program here.

"We've had a rough spring, one which has fallen a little short of our expectations. However, we have accomplished a number of goals, such as solidifying our swings, which hopefully will help us realize our goal next year of qualifying for the Division III nationals."

Coach Larson's squad is one big on talent yet small on collegiate experience. Robbie Robertson, Connie Poole, Darci Wilson, and Sibbie Johnston are all freshmen eligibility-wise, yet Larson is convinced of their potential.

"All four of these girls has a legitimate shot at Division III All-American status next year."

This year's edition was at somewhat of a disadvantage in most matches, because UNCW had only four golfers, whereas other schools played five legally, taking the four lowest scores.

UNCW will host the Division III regionals at Echo Farms next year, and the nationals at the same site in 1982, all of which is certain to boost the prominence of the program, along with Larson's recruiting. Two of these recruits, Cindy Flowers from Catholic H.S. in Memphis, Tennessee, and Donna Barnette, from Burns H.S. in Lawndale, N.C., are outstanding prospects.

Still, with all the program now has going for it, Larson is quick to caution "We've got to put some numbers on the board next year."

OPINION

Eddie Knox

The National Basketball Association is now in its sixth month of action, and shows no signs of slowing down until late May or early June, when a champion will be determined from among the remaining teams Philadelphia, Los Angeles, and Seattle.

No, I won't predict who will capture the championship, and that's not the reason for this column. The reason is the length of the season. It seems as though for the last five or ten years, each NBA season has droned on for longer and longer, making it impossible to fully enjoy the opening of the spring sports season. Basketball is a cold weather sport, that's why its participants play indoors. Years ago, one could tell which sport was on television simply by looking at the calendar. April 15-October 1 was baseball season. October 1-January 15 was mainly football, although basketball had crossed into that territory by beginning in early December and ending in late March.

Now things are different. Professional football teams begin their season in September now, causing the baseball pennant races to lose some of their urgency. And especially, basketball now lasts until June 1, which is a ridiculous time to play basketball.

Don't get me wrong; I love pro basketball. The players, the coaches, and the owners all have their own distinct personalities and it is an enjoyable, fast-paced sport to watch.

Only when the owners and networks feel they have to squeeze every last penny from sponsors by continuing the season until June does the sport lose its excitement and immediacy. Face it, when a team plays 82 games, there are maybe 20 at most that are actually important to the fans. If the owners and Players Association got together and decided to curtail the season to say, 50 games, attendance could actually pick up as the games would be more important both to the fans and the standings.

Presenting an argument for shortening the season is, of course, the easy part. Getting the conglomeration of people who could do it to listen is an entirely different matter.

WILMINGTON

Mark Davis Takes Position As UNCW's New UPB Chairman

After attending State, Clemson, and N.C. School of the Arts, Mark Davis has found a home at UNCW as the new Program Board Chairman replacing Steve Chiappisi next year.

Mark became involved in the Program Board several years ago as the dance committee chairman. "When I came to UNCW I noticed a lack of social activities, so being a social person as well as a go getter, I got involved with the Program Board, which at that time was just getting started," said Mark.

While taking his studies seriously, Mark explains that, "college is more than academics, it is as much social as academic."

Mark's plans for next year include streamlining the Program Board to offer a variety of different entertainment, as well as increasing publicity to reach off campus.

"I also hope to have another Seaside Jam," Mark said. "I envision the Seaside Jam to become a major event in Southeastern North Carolina."

Mark wants to put together her a strong group to work for changes and improvements in the Program Board.

Soon Mark will become a professional member of The National Entertainment ment on Campus Activities Association, which will provide a wealth of resources for the Program Board to use.

"We are in contact with hot acts, many which tour the college circuit," explained Mark. "These bands are good if people will just come and listen."

In their planning the Program Board tries to schedule bands or acts that are touring in the area in order to cut travel expenses. Such cuts help the money go further and bring more entertainment.

Mark is hoping to develop the concert programing next year. "1979 was a bad year for concerts. We couldn't latch on to any big band's tours," said Mark. "Next year I hope to find a promoter and book some big acts."

While very enthusiastic about next year, Mark encourages any student who is interested in helping in any aspect of the Program Board to come by the Pub and talk to the members.

"We don't close our door on anyone and we are always open to ideas," said Mark.

Chronic Exposure To Sun Causes Skin To Age

It happens every year, doesn't it? It's that first warm weekend, either in the backyard or at the beach, and you laid out in the sun too long. It is not readily apparent at the time but sooner or later the redness comes out and the pain begins. You have been sunburned.

Make no mistake about it, a sunburn is a real burn. In severe cases, when you've really been blistered, it is exactly like a first degree burn that you might receive from a fire. If the discomfort is too great you might consult your physician for treatment. Drugs called steroids used internally or on the skin's surface can effectively reduce pain.

In most cases time is what is most needed. You can reduce your discomfort by using cool water compresses on the skin and taking aspirin to relieve the pain. However, do not use any preparations which contain a drug called benzocaine. An allergic reaction to this drug can complicate the original burn, causing the skin to get redder and the burn to get worse.

What can you do to prevent sunburn? The best advice is to use a bit of common sense. Start slowly and build up your exposure to the sun and you will have less of a chance of getting burned.

If you are planning on being out in the sun for a length of time there are a number of sunscreens available that will filter out much of the sun's burning rays. The most effective of these contain either one or both of the ingredients

PABA (paraamino benzoic acid) or benzylphenones. You can check the package to see if one or both of these are contained in the lotion. These sunscreens work best when they are applied 45 minutes before exposure to the sun so that they can soak into the skin. They also need to be reapplied from time to time.

Another complication of too much sun is fever blisters. For those persons prone to fever blisters on the lips, there are sun sticks available which contain light filters to prevent them.

While a great tan makes you feel good and lifts the spirits, don't overdo it in the sun. Over a number of years, chronic exposure to the sun ages skin and can lead to skin cancer.

Special Anniversary Atlantis Planned

A special anniversary issue of THE ATLANTIS is scheduled to come out the week of exams. According to Lea McDaniel, the present editor, the new 72-page issue will consist of "eight short stories and about a hundred poems."

This year's issue includes an artist's directory and an editorial, both of which have never been used before, says McDaniel. The color of the magazine is navy and sky blue. An original logo, designed by Thomas Jones, depicting Neptune sitting on a blanket is also included.

Three thousand issues will be published. Students can obtain a copy of the magazine in the library at the check out desk, in Kenan Hall and in the lobbies of the dorms.

THE ATLANTIS was started by Dr. Collier and Dr. Corbett ten years ago. Stories are chosen by the student staff members. "No student can rate his own work," explains McDaniel. "The stories and poems have no names on them so they can be chosen objectively. We tried to pick representative works that covered a large spectrum, from the very literary stories to the very casual stories that students would be interested in and could relate to."

The magazine includes such works as "Riding Lesson in a Minor Key," by Joyce Hollingsworth, "The Freebie," by Judy Stallsmith and "Collective Wisdom" by Ella Jo Sellers.

Sherry Niven is the editor-in-chief of next year's ATLANTIS. Drew Allison is the associate editor, Kelly Morris is the poetry editor and Judith Stallsmith is the prose editor.

New Building Planned

Construction of a new Social and Behavioral Science Building is scheduled to begin after July 1, according to Dr. John T. Williams, Jr., Psychology Department Chairman.

Initially it will house the Psychology, Sociology, Anthropology, Political Science and Philosophy and Religion Departments. The Department of Philosophy and Religion will eventually be moved as that department and university construction expand.

The building will be approximately the same size as the New Classroom. Of particular interest are the specialized labs for each department. The Psychology Department will have human and animal labs, as well as housing for their experimental animals.

This new building will be located east of parking lot M, which is approximately between the Book Store and the Marine Science Building. It will be very close to the proposed Student Union Building.

Bragg Chosen As Man Of The Year By Frat

Earl Bragg, a Philosophy and Religion major, has been chosen Man of the Year by the Omega Psi Phi fraternity. Bragg, who is Basileus of the fraternity, is also the outgoing President of the Black Student Union. Bragg has been cited by his fellow fraternity brothers for upholding high standards in academics, brotherhood, and social life. The brothers of Omega Psi Phi credits Bragg with being the essence of the fraternity. Bragg is the person responsible for rapid rise of the fraternity on the campus of UNCW. Bragg is also highly regarded by the local graduate chapter of Omega Psi Phi. Bragg is a member of Who's Who, the Fledgling and outgoing President of the B.S.U.

Bragg will graduate May 17, and is expected to be succeeded as basileus by Lloyd Bell, a Clinton Native.

Looking Back At The Fads Of The Past Decade

Let's look back at the past ten years (hey, better late than never, eh?) The seventies were somewhere in-between (yeah, in between '69 and '80, har har) but nobody seems to be able to define them—yet. The "Me Decade"—well, that's for sure. "Getting in touch" and sauteeing in a hot tub were THE hobbies of the seventies. Space was no longer outer (as in Mars, Jupiter, etc.), but inner, as in "AAUUGH! I NEED MY OWN SPACE!"

And how about some of the fads of the past decade? I'd hate to tell you how long I thought est was a new hormone. And "rolfing"? Sounded like a new word for upchuck to me, but it was supposed to heal the human psyche, which REALLY took a beating during the seventies. Monogamy went belly-up and died, while open relationships were hailed as the greatest thing since one-size-fits-all. Nervous breakdowns were in, because they proved you were in tune with your head, man. Kids were out, Afghan hounds were in. Clothes were in, skim-pily. Transparent disco jeans brought out the flasher in everyone—even Saran wrap sufficed in a pinch (there's a pun in there somewhere, I just know it...)

Grass was in, and probably will be until our grandchildren are senile. So was wine (li'l ole wine drinker me..hic) and of course, that party powder, cocaine. Getting drunk was no longer cool. You either got blitzed, fried, polluted, sloshed, or blind, but never simply "drunk."

College was an option or agony, depending on your smarts. Demonstrations gave way to deep thinkers, most of whom thought about things the rest of us could not comprehend. Cynics were very popular for a while, until society tired of cranky philosophers.

Running was as close to heaven as some poor souls could get. Many died with their Adidas laced and moisture still on their sweatband...TV or not TV the boob tube was revived, but millions of people watched "the Carol Burnett Show" on the sly. Steve Martin made arrows through-the-head socially acceptable; Mr. George Carlin came, saw, and left America hysterical. Robin Williams WAS number one with a bullet, but somebody should help him crawl back into that egg. Enough is enough, Mor-kie.

Yogurt was in, red meat was out (don't ask me why, they both come from a cow!) Preservatives (except for alcohol, of course) were cast aside. A hell of a lot of people got food poisoning, but they were chic, by God. Women went back to nature with a vengeance, until a few smart folks figured out some of us NEED girdles to teach that flab a thing or two.

If the seventies were indeed a time for fads, maybe the eighties will be a time for freshness—fresh ideas, fresh leaders—maybe even fresh air?!? But until we find out, wanna go for a dip in my hot tub?

Campus Police Recruiting Students

The Campus Police Office is recruiting students for part-time employment as Student Security Officers. According to Acting Chief of Campus Police David N. Gurganus, these students will serve as night and weekend desk officers. In addition, they will carry out special patrol assignments. Interested students should contact Chief Gurganus.

This program will be implemented "as soon as I can train the people to do it," says Gurganus. "We're going to have a twenty-four hour dispatch system here on campus. The purpose will be so that everybody on the UNCW campus can call our number at any time and we'll have somebody to help them in a few minutes."

Chief Gurganus says that hiring Student Security Officers is part of an overall safety effort by the University to provide mo-

Video Network Wraps Up Movie

Stand-by. Roll tape. 5-4-3-2-1. The actors play a small segment of their scene. Cut. It's a take. If their work meets the artistic and technical requirements of the director, it gets "canned" for later editing. Stand-by. Another segment begins. "A Dirge for Nagasaki" begins to take form and a video film comes to life.

The UNCW Video Network Club is in its final shooting stages of "A Dirge for Nagasaki," a science fiction story, written by Darrel L. Hope.

Dr. Dale Case, faculty advisor for the club, states "Hope wrote the screenplay for a senior project and the club has been providing the technical and advising crew." The shooting schedule started in early March, shortly after casting was completed.

"This has been a really fun project," he added. "We're nearly finished with the shooting and editing has already begun. At the cast party, we plan to show the 'bloopers' made during filming."

Upon completion, the film will be shown to the project committee, and it is hopeful that there will be a showing for UNCW students as well. Dr. Case added, "we will also attempt to get it aired on cable or WUNJ, the local UNC-TV affiliate."

This is one of the many skills students gain from membership in the club. Dr. Case states that when new members join, "we teach them the basics and then they choose from any four or combination of the four departments they are most interested in working on."

The club differs from most clubs in that it doesn't have a president, vice president, or other officers. Instead, the decision-making processes are "collective" in that all members have input through department heads, who sit as a decision-making board.

Currently there are four major departments, headed by student members: 1. Technical Training and Operations, Raymond Yeats, former military and civilian technical training; 2. News, co-headed by Tom LaMont and Artes Bohannon. Both have experience working at channel 3-TV. 3. Production, Fuller Royal, experienced in making video films, and 4. Promotion, Frances Bessellieu, public relations and advertising.

Dr. Case projected that they may add one or two more departments by next spring.

"Ultimately, we are trying to get a consistent program schedule together: one that will compliment and supplement the Seahawk and WLOZ, to provide more information to the students, faculty and staff," he added.

"We would like to produce a twice weekly program of activities, to be shown on a video-tape monitor, with a tape deck placed in areas such as the Pub and snack bar."

We also hope to produce special features of diverse programming and mini-documentaries."

Dr. Case stated that although there may be some limited activity this summer, anyone who is interested in joining are welcome. Membership is open to all UNCW students. They'll be trained in the equipment and work on the final stages of the current project.

Students interested in membership should contact Dr. Case, in the Creative Arts Department or any of the video club members.

'Scapino' Delights

Scapino, which was directed by Doug Swink, was a fine example of a theatrical performance. It was an Italian comedy that kept the entire audience rolling with laughter.

Tony Rivenbark, who portrayed the scheming Scapino, was absolutely marvelous. The timing of his lines was perfect and he seemed to mold right into his character with no trouble. He moved about on stage with the ease of a true professional and he even pulled off an Italian accent that was very convincing. To sum up his performance, Tony Rivenbark could do no wrong. He gave the ultimate performance.

The entire cast did an excellent job, especially considering the fact that they only rehearsed for three weeks. The only thing that really clouded the performance was the Italian accents that the cast were supposed to have. Most of the accents sounded more like southern-Italian drawls.

This performance, which violated the fourth wall, gave the audience a chance to participate in the zany activities of the cast. It seemed to bring the audience closer to the performers and proved to be very effective.

The entire cast from Scapino down to the waitress did an excellent job. They blended together well and seemed to enjoy working with each other. They should also be commended for standing up so well under all the physical exercise that seemed to be happening on stage.

Nothing can actually be written to express just how good this performance was. It was a play that any audience would enjoy and probably never want to end.

Construction on the gateways and the pedestrian mall is scheduled to begin by the end of May. Completion of the project will take approximately six months.

"If you get out of a late-night class and you see somebody that arouses your suspicion, you don't have to call the Wilmington Police. Just call the UNCW Campus Police and ask them to send a police officer over. There will be no lost time and you don't have to listen to a message. The name Eric Clapton conjures up as many images as the man himself has had hairstyles. He's played with The Yardbirds, John Mayall, Cream, Blind Faith, Derek and the Dominos, and finally, The Eric Clapton Band. Ever since he first began to play with the Yardbirds, Clapton has become the mark of excellence that lesser talents have since strived to be as good as, or the old gun-fighter that everyone wants to put forever away. Known as "slowhand" ever since the beginning, Clapton has had his share of success, with songs like "Badge," "Layla," and "Tell The Truth," etching his name permanently in rock's pantheon. The man is a legend, but he's had his name associated with more live projects than just about anyone else in rock 'n' roll.

In the beginning there was FIVE LIVE YARDBIRDS. This was followed by live work on half of GOODBYE CREAM, half of WHEELS OF FIRE,

Clapton For 'Just One Night'

LIVE CREAM VOLUMES ONE AND TWO, DEREK AND THE DOMINOS IN CONCERT, ERIC CLAPTON'S RAINBOW CONCERT, E.C. WAS HERE, and several bootlegs. That's not including his contributions on DELANEY AND BONNIE ON TOUR, THE CONCERT FOR BANGLA-DESH, and THE PLASTIC ONO BAND-LIVE PEACE IN TORONTO 1969. Anyone who has never heard Eric Clapton live has only themselves to blame, but in case there might be someone somewhere who has managed to miss out on all this great stuff, there is good news.

RSO records has just released a new Eric Clapton album that is nicely packaged, a two-record set, and yes you guessed it, a live album. JUST ONE NIGHT is the first LP from Clapton since November of 1978 when BACKLESS came out. Maybe RSO was simply anxious for something to release; otherwise there is no logical reason for slow-hand and his new band to release a live album at this time. New Band? Well, it seems that the band that Clapton has been with since 1974 has been replaced by an all English line-up. The band now consists of former Grease Band member Chris Stainton (keyboards), ex-Emmylou Harris sideman Albert Lee (guitar, keyboards, vocals), and session men Dave Markee (bass), and Henry Spinetti (drums).

JUST ONE NIGHT was recorded at Japan's version of the Fillmore East, the Budokan Theatre during this past December. This double-live set includes "Tulsa Time," "Early In The Morning," and "If I Don't Be There By Morning," from the aforementioned BACKLESS LP. These versions are superior to the studio cuts simply because the vocals are clearer.

The beginning of something wonderful?

Students advised to park early

UNCW students who want to park near to their classroom buildings are going to have to get to the parking lots early, advises James K. Clark, Director of Business Services.

There are 2685 parking spaces on campus. Last year, many students complained that the parking facilities weren't adequate. But Clark, who is in charge of parking at UNCW, disagrees with this.

"There's no way you can satisfy everyone," he says. "People expect that parking will always be available near to their destination. That's not so. At no time last year, when traffic was the heaviest, was there a lack of parking space. The spaces are not always where we want them to be but they are there. People who live in a highly congested metropolitan area would be happy to find a space nine or ten minutes away from their destination."

The fee for this year's parking stickers will be $35.00 for students, faculty and staff. Clark contends that the "fee isn't sufficient" to provide a parking space for every individual student. He says that the students can't afford to build new parking lots when the existing lots aren't "over-utilized." Putting parking spaces "all over" UNCW would also "destroy" the beauty of the campus," Clark believes.

Students who can't find a parking space near to their classes will just have to walk.

"If they have a reason for not wanting to walk, then the only choice is to get there early," states Clark. Clark thinks that the parking situation at UNCW is "reasonable." But as needs become apparent, he says, the University will "continue to extend" the parking facilities.

Post Office established on campus

by Julie Russ

Suppose you've just written another plea for funds to Mom and Dad. It is one of your better efforts, and you seal it, address the envelope and realize you are out of stamps again. Where to find a stamp? And where to mail the letter once you've shelled out 15 cents to Uncle Sam? Well, thanks to the new United States Postal Office located on campus directly next to radio station WLOZ, your worries are over.

According to postmistress Ruth Gardner, the post office was established "for the convenience of the students. It's a real asset to the campus, for faculty and students alike." Full postal services were begun "around the first of July." These services include the mailing of packages and the sale of money orders.

Many students may not be aware of the new post office.

The new campus post office is located adjacent to Station WLOZ.

North Carolina Insured Student Loans delayed

Students receiving financial aid through the North Carolina Insured Student Loan Program, administered by College Foundation, Inc., can expect to wait two weeks before receiving their loans.

An increased number of students applying for student aid through the College Foundation has delayed the processing of applications for some students. The NCSL program has had a 127 percent increase in the number of loan applications, according to the Director of Financial Aid, Joseph V. Capell.

Students who applied for their loans by the June 30 deadline should receive their loans by September 15. Those students that applied after the deadline should receive their loans by September 30. The delay will not affect students' preregistration.

Students will be contacted at their permanent address when their loans have been processed. There is a deadline for responding after which the loan will be re-allocated to other students, therefore it would be in the student's best interest to have his mail forwarded as soon as possible.

Between four and five hundred UNCW students will be receiving the North Carolina Insured Student Loan.

Construction of student union increases fees

UNCW's service fees increased this year due to the construction of a Student Union Building, according to Robert O. Walton, Director of Financial Services. Tuition and fees went up $35.00 per semester, or $70.00 a year, which "represents the total increase in fees this year," Walton states.

Even though the fees increased, Walton says that UNCW is a "very reasonable" school to attend.

"We're still the least expensive school in the system," he states. "If not we're very close to it. When you're the least expensive school it indicates that the students and the staff are fighting to keep the fees as low as possible. The SGA (Student Government Association) and the Administration have especially gone to great lengths to keep the fees down."

ID cards used for identification on and off campus

Student identification (ID) cards are used for admission to various university functions and for the purpose of identification on and off campus. ID cards are made during orientation for freshmen and during the first days of the fall semester for other students.

Students should take note that the ID card is a permanent card which is updated with a color coded sticker each semester by the Student Affairs Office. ID cards without the proper validation sticker will not be honored by university and other officials.

There is a $3 charge to make a duplicate ID card in the event the original is lost or destroyed.

EDITORIAL

"What? Park in front of the Pub and walk all the way over to the Marine Science Building? You've got to be kidding!"

"Parking decals are how much this year? $35!! What a rip-off!"

Yes, it's that time again at UNCW when these conversations start sounding so familiar to me that 9 times out of 10 I can predict the rest of the sentence by the time the first word is uttered.

Sure, parking decals have gone up to $35. That's not so unreasonable considering how much other schools pay. Not to mention, if we want more parking lots, we have to expect to pay for them.

Obviously there is a shortage of legs around here the way people complain if they have to walk over a block to get to class. What would we do if our campus was twice the size it is now?

It's nice when it's raining or we're late for class to find a parking place beside the building we're going in, but be realistic, it usually doesn't happen.

Students at larger campuses such as State, Carolina, or Wake Forest consider themselves blessed if they find a parking place a mile from their destination.

And of course we can't forget that Dear Old Dad had to "walk 8 miles in the snow" and that was just to get to his one room schoolhouse.

So let's stop complaining about the parking situation and start trying to alleviate it by parking a little farther away and using a lot more leg power.

LETTERS

As Student Body Vice President, I would like to take this time to welcome everyone back to Seahawk Country! For some of you I extend a very special welcome, since this is your first experience with college life.

This year holds an air of excitement all around us. I am looking forward to participating in every way possible this year, and I hope all of you are planning to do the same.

Everyone should realize that there are plenty of clubs or organizations on this campus which promote various kinds of student interests. If you wish to learn more about clubs, organizations, or student government, or if you have any problems of any kind, please feel free to call on our office. I am usually up in the SGA office, but if not just call on me in Room 126, New Dorm.

Charles Parsons.

Dear Freshman: Congratulations! This is it, "College" the moment you've all been waiting for. All I can say is take advantage of every opportunity to learn about yourself and the people around you.

You probably aren't going to believe this but there are more kinds of people in the world than "The Jocks," "The Burn Outs," and "The Intellectuals." You're going to meet people that have all of these characteristics. You're also going to meet people that don't fit into any of these categories. What's so great is you'll probably like something about every single one of them, because every one of them will have something new and exciting to share with you that will allow you to look at things in a whole new perspective.

Remember any where you go is whatever you make of it. The only way to meet these new people is to GET INVOLVED! There is something for everyone at college. Just because you've never tried something before is no excuse, in fact that gives you more the reason to experience it.

College gives you the chance to learn new trades and talents and develop them. It will help you become a stronger individual through experience. This will allow you to find peace and security within yourself. It will be the kind of security that no one else can give you. Don't let anything stand in your way. College is for you. Go for it!!!

To cooperate with our Nation's Energy Conservation Measures, please take positive action to: Keep windows closed when air conditioning or heating units are operating.

Turn off lights in rooms that are not in use. Keep doors closed leading outside of buildings. Report to Physical Plant any malfunctioning equipment, viz: Dripping faucets, especially hot water, Electric switches, Excessive hot tap water temperature, Loudly humming [vibrating] transformers, etc. By observing and reporting conditions and equipment that waste energy we can do our share to conserve fuel and other natural resources that are so vital to preserve our way of life.

because the building in which it is housed was for some time primarily a mail room, in which on-campus mail only was sorted and delivered to various departments.

Remarked Gardner, "These facilities have been in the works for about a year now—we've been needing a post office on campus for some time. Several people in the Student Government Association were instrumental in making this possible." Gardner also commented that the post office's present zip code of 28403 will be changed when the move is made into the new student union building. That structure is expected to be completed within the next year. "Also," Gardner added, "We expect students to be able to have their own post office boxes then."

The next time you want to drop someone a line, drop into the post office: it operates on a 9 a.m. - 5 p.m. schedule, Monday through Friday.

You have a special opportunity this year to familiarize yourself with the classical guitar, hear it played beautifully, and, if you wish, learn to play it with the finest instruction.

The UNCW Foundation Distinguished Professor Chair for the academic year 1980-81 has been awarded to the internationally famous guitarist Michael Lorimer. He will be here this year and has already attracted to our campus some of the finest young guitar talent in the USA and Canada. UNCW will be a center for concerts, classes and other chances to enjoy the guitar.

You will be kept informed about guitar activities at UNCW if you will leave the following information at the music office in Kenan Hall.

President's report

Jessie Sanders, SGA President

SGA implements new financial system

I would like to take this opportunity to welcome all students new and old, back to school. It is a new beginning for some but another exciting year for most of us. I hope that all of you enjoyed your summer vacation, so that we can all turn our attention to our studies.

During the summer, the Student Government Association has been busy preparing for the upcoming school year. One of the most important projects that we have been working on has been the new financial system for Student Government. I am happy to say the system was implemented on July 1, and it is running smoothly. A special thanks goes to Dr. John Anderson of the School of Business and his Business Information Systems Class for designing the system last spring.

Several other projects have been started and are nearing completion. These are: 1. Student Government Association has nearly completed a procedures manual which will help guide all SGA affiliate clubs and organizations through the new financial system plus list all officers and how to get in touch with them. 2. The first ever summer Senate held one meeting. Even though there was only the single get together, enough enthusiasm was generated so that this will become a yearly event. 3. Since this is an election year, Student Government has requested information on the issues from each of the major candidates for President and Governor of North Carolina. 4. In an effort to make the Student Government more knowledgeable in foreign affairs, the economy and new training methods, I have sent in magazine periodicals which contain numerous articles on issues that affect us all. 5. The Student Government Association has also ordered several booklets that contain information on old and new laws that could affect college students, county and state governments. This information is open to all students and I would like to encourage you to come by the SGA office to use it.

The above list sites but a few examples of how the SGA has been at work for you, the student, this summer.

A very important event happened this summer which I would like to tell you about. UNCW hosted a meeting of the University of North Carolina Association of Student Governments. This group consists of Student Body Presidents and/or their representatives of each of the sixteen campuses in North Carolina. A large amount of information was passed on to me during this session, so I plan to give a synopsis of the meeting in my State of the University Address at the first Senate meeting of the fall semester.

At this point, I would like to express a special word of thanks to two individuals who worked extremely hard this summer for the Student Government Association. They are Susan Goodrum, SGA Office Manager, and Tina Huston, Representative At Large. Susan was in the office all summer making sure that the administrative aspect of the SGA would be ready when the fall semester began and Tina filled in capably during our hour of need when Susan went on vacation. But I would also like to thank all of the students who helped with our projects during the summer as they gave their time to help us accomplish our goals.

As you can see, the Student Government Association has been extremely busy but without the help of dedicated students we would not have accomplished most of our objectives. Student Government and student clubs are exactly what the name implies: STUDENTS. It is with student involvement and student commitment that makes clubs and the SGA a viable and integral part of the University and student life. Without your individual support and personal commitment, life at UNCW would consist of going to class and nothing more. I would like to encourage all of you to find a club or organization which you have an interest in and pursue that interest.

The Student Government Office is open between the hours of 8 a.m. and 5 p.m., Monday-Friday in room 201 of the Hinton James Building. I would like to encourage all students, if you have questions, problems, or concerns, please contact myself or any SGA representative.

SGA Office Manager stresses correct procedures for paperwork

For those of you who don't know me, let me introduce myself. My name is Susan Goodrum and I am the Office Manager for the Student Government Association. I am in the Student Government office from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday-Friday. The Student Government office is located in the Hinton James Building (Pub) upstairs next to the game room. Each week I will have an article in the Seahawk explaining different policies and procedures of the Student Government.

First of all, if you have a club or organization that you would like to be funded through the SGA, you should come by the Student Government office and talk to some of the officers. Also, if you are a newcomer to the UNC-Wilmington campus and would like to know what clubs and/or organizations are on campus, come by and we will be glad to help you.

For those of you who are already members of clubs and/or organizations funded through the SGA, you are also encouraged to drop by and make sure all the proper paperwork for your club or organization has been filled out and is on file in this office.

Through the year, I encourage all clubs and/or organizations to check periodically with the SGA office to pick up any mail, to pick up materials and supplies purchased, and to discuss generally any problems or questions you may have.

Last, I cannot express strong enough how important it is that ALL paperwork be channeled through the SGA office first. This procedure will insure that all SGA and State policies and procedures are being followed and will allow the SGA to operate in a more efficient and beneficial manner.

SGA freshman elections scheduled for September

The Student Government Association will hold elections for freshman officers in September this year. To be filled are the positions of president and vice-president of the class, as well as two freshman senators.

In addition, seven at-large representatives to the Student Legislature will be elected at this time from among the entire student body.

Other class officers, legislators and executive and judicial officers were elected in the spring during the March general election.

Officers and legislators serve from April through the following March, with the exception of the freshmen-elect who serve from September through March.

All regular, full-time freshmen are eligible to file for the class offices or legislative seats and may do so in September with the SGA office upstairs in the Student Services Building. Announcements of filing deadlines will be made in September editions of the Seahawk.

The SGA urges students from all disciplines to participate in student government. Through SGA students have the opportunity to encourage student participation in the decisions which will direct the present and future of the university.

The SGA budget is currently approximately $100,000 which goes to support clubs and activities, campus media and publications, and the University Program Board. The SGA president is also a voting member of the UNCW Board of Trustees.

Opportunities exist not only through elected office for students to be involved in SGA, but there are various committees and appointed positions which require student body. More about these opportunities can be learned from the SGA office, room 201 in the Pub.

SGA officers for the 1980-81 year include: Jessie Sanders, President; Charles Parsons, Vice-president; Mark Bremmer, Attorney General; Johnny Ward, Chief Justice; Michelle Bond, Treasurer; and Lynne Wells, Secretary.

Third Annual Piney Woods Festival to be held

On Saturday, August 30 and Sunday, August 31 the Lower Cape Fear Council of the Arts will sponsor the Third Annual Piney Woods Festival in Hugh McRae Park. The Piney Woods Festival is a celebration of the cultural heritage which abounds in the Southeastern United States. Artists, craftsmen and entertainers gather together for two days in a sylvan setting to display their works and perform for visitors to the festival.

Arts and crafts aficionados will be pleased to know the craftsmen whose works are displayed in the Piney Woods are among the finest in the Southeast. Festival visitors will be treated to a demonstration of the techniques used to achieve the finished works on display.

Fifteen colorfully decorated concession stands will provide hungry visitors with a diverse selection of exotic, taste-tempting dishes from around the world and may be found at various locations around the festival grounds.

Music plays an important role in the Piney Woods Festival. The performers selected to appear were chosen because their talents typify the cultural heritage of the Southeast. They are a diverse group and span a wide range of the cultural entertainment spectrum. On Saturday and Sunday during the daytime, free entertainment will be provided on the festival grounds. Performers appearing during the day include Sam Dorsey Band, Brian Kelly, Laura Mae McLean, Andy and Beckwith, Dick Day, Gary Allen, Level Four, Iron Mountain Depot, Bob Myers, Louise Anderson, and many others.

The festival grounds will be open Saturday from 10 a.m. until 6:30 p.m. and on Sunday from 12 noon until 6 p.m. On Saturday night, 2 concerts co-sponsored by the Lower Cape Fear Council of the Arts and the University Program Board will take place on the festival grounds beginning at 7:30 p.m. The concert will feature Joe Smother and Jack Lawrence who have performed with people such as Doc and Merle Watson and the Red, White, and Bluegrass. Also featured will be the Nee Niny Band featuring the European harmonica champion and the "Country with a Kick" sounds of The New Knothole Revue. Admission is $2.50 per person, $1.50 to UNCW Students with a CURRENT VALIDATED ID, and free to children under 12. Everyone is invited to attend and participate in the festivities. What better way to spend Labor Day Weekend!

Block Party

UNCW's Program Board does it again! In keeping with their policy of bringing students the best in campus entertainment, UPB presents the second annual Block Party! The fun begins Friday August 29 at 8 p.m. in the Pub parking lot. Live music will be provided by the Pedestrians, a Raleigh-based band specializing in the New Wave sound. Their repertoire includes numbers by the Cars, Tom Petty and the Heartbreakers, and the Ramones. They also perform some original material.

Paradox, a group from Fayetteville, will open the festivities with their unique blend of jazz-rock fusion. An instrumental band, they cover such artists as Jeff Beck, Al Di Meola, and the Dixie Dregs.

Bring all your friends and plan on partying til midnight. Beverages will be available and good times will be had by all! This is just the first of many events sponsored by members of the UNCW Program Board.

Fledgling seeking talented

students

The FLEDGLING, the UNCW yearbook, is seeking students who can add talent and ideas to the 1980-81 staff. There are positions open for photographers, layout personnel, artists, and copy writers. Some of these positions carry tuition scholarships.

The FLEDGLING will come out in the spring 1981. Therefore, students who are dedicated and don't mind time-consuming work are welcome. Even if your only talent is drawing a straight line with the aid of a ruler the FLEDGLING can still use you.

The editor of the 1980-81 FLEDGLING is Alda Faircloth.

All interested students are invited to drop by the FLEDGLING office, room 107 of the Student Services Building, at the beginning of the fall semester.

Students should use bicycle racks

UNCW has provided bicycle racks just outside the entrances of most buildings on campus. Use them. When you chain your bicycle to an entrance or physically handicapped railing you violate a safety ordinance and create a potentially hazardous situation.

The Safety Office welcomes suggestions regarding the foregoing and will do what it can to encourage people to comply with this ordinance. Your cooperation with the Safety Department to eliminate hazardous conditions on campus is greatly appreciated.

Norman appointed Police Chief

Winston C. Norman has been appointed Director of Security and Traffic here at UNCW. The new Police Chief will join the staff on September 8. Norman is from Alexandria, Virginia and has over 20 years of law enforcement experience. He is presently the Director of Security for the Republican National Committee in Washington, D.C.

The Rolling Stones dish up a healthy portion of their standard fare

by David Carter

The Rolling Stones: Emotional Rescue. The Rolling Stones are the original bad boys of rock 'n' roll. Who else would have a devil's tongue for a trademark? Mick Jagger is an important to some people as the Pope is to others, with the former being easily the more recognizable of the two. It seems that the Stones have always existed, and it's near impossible to imagine rock 'n' roll without them in their role of house band of the civilized world. The Stones can deal, with few if any bands able to hang with them, and the release of a new album is an event to rival presidential elections and the Superbowl.

EMOTIONAL RESCUE is the long awaited follow-up to 1978's SOME GIRLS. Although two years is a long time for anyone to wait between albums, the boys dish up a healthy portion of what's become their standard fare since the arrival of Ron Wood: bass, drums, and lots of rhythm guitar. The gang's all here as no personnel changes have occurred as of late. We find the Glimmer Twins, Bill, Charlie, and Woody all intact, with old friends Ian Stewart, Bobby Keyes, and Nicky Hopkins in tow. Percussionist Michael Shrieve puts in an appearance as well.

There's nothing wrong with this album that a good guitarist couldn't cure. The presence of Mick Taylor on SOME GIRLS could have easily made it an album to stand head and shoulders with the best albums of the seventies. The presence of Mick Taylor on EMOTIONAL RESCUE could have resulted in a very good album being better. Ron Wood fits the image of the Stones. He has the haircut, but as a guitarist he leaves much to be desired. The Stones seem to be content to keep using two rhythms, but this whole business is a point of constant frustration to many Stone fanatics.

The ten cuts on EMOTIONAL RESCUE fall mainly under the rock/reggae/latin influence. "Dance" has the funky, strutting beat of "Miss You," or "Hot Stuff," while "Send It To Me" has that reggae flavor. "Indian Girl" has a south of the border seasoning, but "Summer Romance," the LP's hottest tune is straight rock with Bill Wyman supplying some superb bass playing. In fact, the only song that should have been left out of this collection is "All About You," the sole selection featuring Keith on lead vocals, simply because this is not the voice that gave us "Happy" eight years ago.

This is a good Stones album. The band plays as well as ever with the accent on Bill and Charlie. Mick is in fine voice, and Keith, as always, is the heart of the band that claims the title of "the greatest rock 'n' roll band in the world." Although this bunch desperately needs a good lead guitarist, Candy Slice said it best when she screamed "Gimme Mick!"

Tips on surviving those freshman frenzies

The How-Does-It-Feel Dept.: So, you've taken the advice of family, friends, and fortune-tellers and here you are in College! The best years of your life loom ahead, complete with people, parties, maybe even a little poontang (oops! Sorry, Ma). The opportunities are endless! Now if you could just get rid of that sinking feeling in the ole gut...

Well, we of the Seahawk always come through: here for your convenience are a few tips on how to survive those freshman frenzies.

First of all, there are a few things you will have to accept. You will probably acquire a Student's Spread, from studying and stuffing simultaneously. The solution to this is simple: starve yourself. Given the quality of the cafeteria food, this will be easier than you think.

In addition, you are sure to hate at least one of your professors. Relax; the feeling is probably mutual. Grin and fake it... You will almost certainly become a practicing alcoholic by the end of first semester. Not to worry, unless you find yourself pawning your roommate for a bottle.

Of course, there are some things you won't want to do. Number one, no matter how bad the pressure becomes, do not, repeat, do not yell for your mommy in public. People will notice and you will be branded forever. Number two, do not wallpaper your living quarters without telling SOMEBODY first.

Also, never, ever make a librarian mad—sooner or later you are going to need that lady. And (I know this one is a toughie) try not to go TOO wild in the sheets. A year from now, your reputation will thank you (although I can't promise how grateful the old hormones will be!)

Finally, there are some things only you can decide. Crucial questions like, "How often should I write my parents? my girl? my doggy-woggy?" Or, "Or, 'Should I strangle my roommate now or wait until he passes out?'" And one day you have to decide upon the most important aspect of college life—your major. For what it's worth, I've found a great one: Underwater Arm Wrestling. This program will prepare you for a career of wrestling alligators in sunny Florida. Don't knock it til you try it!

Atlantis has staff openings

Atlantis is the literary magazine of UNCW that publishes student poetry and prose and includes original student artwork. The magazine is funded by the SGA and the staff is comprised entirely of UNCW students.

Atlantis is published twice each year, one issue in the fall and one in the spring. There are positions open in the prose, poetry and art staff. Dr. James Collier and Dr. Joanne Corbett of the English Department serve as advisors for the magazine.

Any student is welcome to submit material for publication in Atlantis. Deadlines for submission are announced each semester, and all students are urged to participate.

The Atlantis provides an important means of communication among the literary community and the campus. Copies of the magazine are mailed to libraries throughout North Carolina and several other states. These magazines are also included in the reading part of the National University Survey, which represents our country with creative expression.

In past years, Atlantis staff members have also provided other services to the student body, such as publication of an attractive school yearbook and art. Also published by the staff is a poetry brochure.

Look for announcements concerning staff positions and submission of material for the coming semester.

Campus radio station offers variety of commercial free programs

WLOZ disc jockey enjoys listening to his work.

Nee Ningy Band returns

The Nee Ningy Band is back in town. The University Program Board presents Nee Ningy as the first Coffeehouse event of the year. They will appear outside the Pub at 8 p.m., Sept. 12.

Members of the band are clothed in colorful ethnic costumes during their performances, which consist of Scottish and Irish jigs, country, folk and blues. Their music is almost impossible to classify, but is never monotonous. Each member plays a separate, unique instrument, from harmonica to washtub bass.

Nee Ningy was one of the most popular Coffeehouse acts presented to the students last year. In case of inclement weather, the show will be moved into the lounge area of the Pub.

Admission is free. If you anticipate the thirties, BYOB and bring munchies also. Commented Coffeehouse Chairperson Linda Gentry, "Nee Ningy is a super band and it's good to bring them back."

"If you're considering taking drugs, you should know the facts about it. Before you do something that may ruin your life, get the straight facts," or so says the public service announcement on UNCW's campus radio station - WLOZ.

Z-91 has been in operation here for about three and a half years and is run totally by UNCW students. It is a public service type radio station and operates on a third class Federal Communications license on a frequency of ten watts.

The station, located adjacent to the new post office, is allocated money by the SGA every year to cover operating expenses.

Last year's Station Manager John Evans explains that the most important way to generate revenue through the station itself is "getting the entire staff motivated so they'll try to find underwriters - advertising. It's not the commercialization that you hear on commercial radios but it's (underwriting) just the name of a sponsor" at the end of a program or show.

Evans also pointed out that last year WLOZ generated 25 percent of its operating budget through underwriting, donations at various businesses in the community, and on-the-air fund drives. This amount, about $2000, was "the largest amount generated by any organization on campus," Evans said.

Z-91 offers a variety of programs that appeal to any kind of taste. The station programs jazz, classical, opera, rock, new wave, and even some disco, all commercial free.

WLOZ has approximately eleven disc jockeys at this point. Jeff Newton is Business Manager at present and Scott Howard was Station Manager during the summer. The Station Manager for 1980-81 will be chosen at the next Media and Publications Board meeting.

The only qualifications for working at WLOZ is being a UNCW student and to be willing to obtain a third class Federal Communications license.

Julie Russ, who was a disc jockey during the summer at Z-91 says, "You have to want to work. You can't expect to come in and fool around." Russ feels that she learned something from her experience with Z-91. "You really learn how to operate on the air," she said. "You learn, to a certain extent, how to get along with other people."

Gary Barnes, currently a DJ at Z-91 says that being a DJ is a lot of fun and "you get to play mostly what you want to hear. Like me, I don't play anything I don't want to hear."

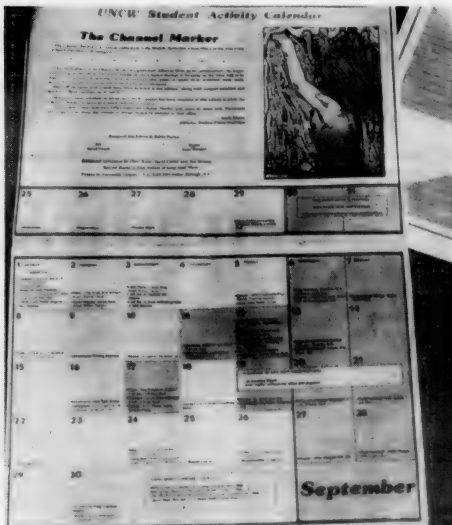

Anyone interested in being a disc jockey should contact the Station Manager or Program Director.

Barnes added that "our first immediate goal is to go to 150 watts of power, stereo, and then we'll be somebody in this area."

EDITORIAL

UNCW was established as the University of North Carolina in 1969. Since, the campus has expanded tremendously with a considerable increase in enrollment. Construction began in the late 1960's to accommodate the growing campus. The University Cafeteria was completed in 1971 along with the Edmond R. Galloway Residence Hall. Expansion continued in 1972 when the Isaac Bear Hall was completed. The Marine Science Building was completed in 1974, the Raiford G. Trash Health and Physical Education Building in the fall of 1977 in addition to the University Bookstore the same year. The Humanities Classroom Building and Addison Hewlet, Jr., Hall were opened in 1978. The last building added to the university was Dorm '79 which opened in the fall semester of 1979. As the fastest growing university in the North Carolina system UNCW is lacking a very important aspect of college life, a football team.

During the fall season tourism in Wilmington declines considerably. Businesses in the area begin catering to students as a majority along with local residents, rather than tourists. A UNCW Seahawk football team could attract the summer crowd back to Wilmington during the fall. Businesses as well as the beaches would flourish again. The seasons would no longer be separated by the fall. The Summer season would continue into the football season with basketball following them.

Little support has been supplied for such a team. The most common excuse has been the lack of money. Wilmington has a standard metropolitan population of 97,400 and a UNCW enrollment of ap-

Donations from businesses and from the community in addition to verbal support would launch a successful team. The Seahawk would appreciate students views on the possibility of a football team.

Summer at Mt. Pisgah depletes creative initiative

I fully intended starting this column this summer. In fact, I envisioned passing four or five weeks worth of crisp, journalistic copy from my sun-bronzed hands to an undoubtedly grateful editor the first week of classes. But in June I went camping and had a close encounter of the wild kind of Mt. Pisgah. Finding everything from bacon to Hershey bars scattered over the terrain wasn't so bad. But finding bear prints on the tent directly on the other side of where I had been sleeping was. It had not been the wind, only the wind, it had been - a Bear! a Bear! Naturally I was too traumatized by the experience to think of writing.

Then July-ah, beautiful July. July was two weeks of getting ready for and two weeks celebrating my "Class of '65" reunion. Said celebrating was done sans my son and sans writing. And August? August was a long nightmare of smothering upon a hot pillow. August was a "dog's day afternoon" twenty-four hours long. I lost twelve pounds of body fat and every ounce of creative initiative.

So, today, I finally started writing, or trying to anyway. I began one copy sure I could explain in dramatic, albeit journalistic, terms why non-traditional students need a Seahawk column of their own. It would be a real "this is your column" piece. But half-way through the first paragraph Jonas, my son, got home from school...an hour early. (What do those teachers think I'm paying them for? Surely a mere hour isn't too much to ask!)

Jonas quickly found the Chek root beer and, just as quickly, discovered that 8 oz. of root beer will not fit into a 6 oz. glass. It will overflow into the silverware drawer, behind the refrigerator, and onto the freshly waxed floor. After his adventure in the wonderful world of physics, Jonas learned his mother was in "a bad mood again." He agreed to go play with his cousin; he didn't however, comment on my suggestion that he come back in about ten years.

Returning to my work, I realized what I had written was really terrible. Beginning again, I explained how the number of older college students has risen in recent years. Then, somewhere in sentence three, paragraph one ominous rustling noises penetrated my concentration. Looking up, I saw a thin ginger-colored tail undulate from a Winn-Dixie bag on the kitchen table. I have eight cats, two housebroken; Ginger is not one of them. I grasped her wriggling, claw-extended body just in time to prevent her claiming squatter's rights on a can of Stokley's green beans.

So, that is why this column doesn't explain what non-traditional students are and deserve, and why it wasn't done in the good old summer-time. But then, you other non-trad students will know how it is. After all, this is YOUR column.

Going Greek may be the key

There are more than 5,000 students here, and whether you are a freshman, a transfer, or a returning student, this can seem like a BIG place. You may find that being just one in a school of thousands can get a little lonely. Going Greek may be for you!

Greek life can offer you a chance to meet people and build friendships through working and sharing good times together with close groups of men and women just like you. Not only will you meet many people, but you will have a chance to know UNCW a little better by becoming involved in its activities. UNCW's GREEK SYSTEM is made up of 6 fraternities and 2 sororities. Each one has a "personality" all its own. By getting to know us through rush parties and events, you will be able to choose the right one for you. Your first priority is getting a solid education. Let's face it - that's why we're here. Then we have parties and formals, Greek intramurals and tournaments. On top of all that we provide philanthropic services for many needy organizations such as Red Cross Bloodmobile, Heart Fund, Eye Bank and Community Volunteer Action Center just to name a few. Being Greek helps you develop as a leader and, we believe, as a whole person.

Think about it! We invite you to come out and see just what we can offer. You may be surprised. We don't claim that going Greek is for everyone, but it may be for you. If you're interested or have questions come by the Student Activities Office located in the PUB or call extension 2284, or even better yet, check the bulletin boards around campus for information regarding rush parties and go check it out yourself. Go one better. GO GREEK!!!

Block Party a huge success

by Doug Browne

The UNCW Program Board began this year's busy entertainment schedule off with last Friday's Block Party. An estimated crowd of 1500 braved threatening skies in the early evening to witness the rock and new wave sounds of Paradox and the Pedestrians. Paradox started off the show with an excellent exhibit of hard rock, including many brilliant solos by the lead guitarist. They received a strong ovation as the crowd was obviously pleased and well ready to receive the Pedestrians.

Except for a small technical problem that was quickly remedied, the Pedestrians played almost non-stop for the remainder of the evening. The crowd was obviously pleased as many students danced and enjoyed probably the first party of their college career.

For those who would like to hear more from the Pedestrians, they have recorded an album that should be available soon.

Musically inclined students welcome in Wind Ensemble

by Wendy Robbins
Features Editor

Students who are non-music majors but play a musical instrument take notice: the Wind Ensemble wants you. Harry McLamb, conductor of UNCW's Wind Ensemble, is currently trying to boost the organization's membership.

McLamb says he is gearing the ensemble "toward the average college student rather than music majors." Therefore, the "level of difficulty and performance" will be aimed toward the non-music majors.

"I feel that the organization is for the students," McLamb states. "It should be utilized by the students. It's here for the students to take advantage of I'm going to choose music: that I think the average college student who has played in high school band will be able to perform."

McLamb believes that most non-music majors are reluctant to join ensembles because they have "a fear of performing." Many of them are "afraid they're not good enough," McLamb says, but "if they have taken part in high school band they would be most welcome" in UNCW's ensembles.

The type of music the Wind Ensemble will be performing is of "a mixed variety," McLamb says. "We'll have some serious or classical works and we'll do some popular works. There should be something for everybody."

For those that enjoy playing musical instruments, the Wind Ensemble could be a fun way to get college credits. It offers one hour of credit per semester. The rehearsals are on Monday nights at 7:30. All the students have to do is devote two hours a week, McLamb says, and that much time "isn't going to flunk anybody."

If membership in the Wind Ensemble increases, there is a possibility that UNCW will get a pep band to perform at sports events. McLamb wants to "drum up some interest for school spirit" to have such a band.

"But we have to look at it like first things first. If it would be possible for us to have a good, strong concert band and Wind Ensemble then an offshoot will be a pep band," he explains.

"We don't have pep band in the curriculum so we really can't just come up with it. The college does offer the Wind Ensemble. In the past, from the Wind Ensemble, members were chosen to perform for pep band. Hopefully we can get the Wind Ensemble enrollment up large enough to do something like that. It can serve the college community itself. To have a pep band without a Wind Ensemble would be putting the cart before the horse. If things work accordingly we would like to boost the enrollment in the Wind Ensemble and from that have a pep band that would function at the games."

McLamb would "really like to see the total campus take part" in the Wind Ensemble.

"Its purpose does not exist just for music majors," he stresses. "It is something that anyone who has played an instrument before can take part in. If they want to, and if they enjoy playing, then it's something I would like to see the students pursue. The important thing for them to do is keep playing for their own satisfaction and that's what we're trying to set up here. I think everyone would benefit from it. It's quite painless. No one's going to flunk because they're a bad player or anything like that."

Atlantis has staff openings

Atlantis is the literary magazine of UNCW that publishes student poetry and prose and includes original student artwork. The magazine is funded by the SGA and the staff is comprised entirely of UNCW students.

Atlantis is published twice each year - one issue in the fall and one in the spring. There are positions open on the prose, poetry and art staff. Dr. James Collier and Dr. Joanne Corbett of the English Department serve as advisors for the magazine.

Any student is welcome to submit material for publication in Atlantis. Deadlines for submission are announced each semester, and all students are urged to participate.

The Atlantis provides an important means of communication among the university community as well as between the campus and other areas. Copies of the magazine are mailed to universities throughout North Carolina and several other states. These magazines are important in spreading part of UNCW to other universities as they represent our campus with creative expression.

In past years, Atlantis staff members have also provided other services to the student body, such as publication of an attractive school-year calendar that features original student art. Also published by the staff is a poetry brochure.

Look for announcements concerning staff positions and submission of material in the coming semester.

Weekend Christian retreat

A time of study, reflection and finding God, finding self and finding others. We will explore where we are and where we want to be in each of these areas as we begin another school year.

The retreat is September 12, 13, 14, 1980 and is sponsored by United Christian Campus Ministry, a ministry supported by Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians and Disciples of Christ.

The retreat is at Kirkwood, the Presbyterian Camp and Conference center for Coastal Carolina, set among tall trees by a lovely lake. The cost is $15.00 for room, food, and program. The registration fee is $5.00 and the balance of $10.00 is due upon your arrival.

For more information please call Bob Haywood, Campus Minister, also Campus Christian Fellowship meets each Tuesday at 7 p.m. in the Goodwood room of the PUB (Student Activities Building). This fellowship meets for study, sharing and singing and provides opportunities for Bible study, volunteer service and social activities. You are invited to COME!

United Christian Campus Ministry works through Rev. Bob Haywood, Campus Minister, who provides opportunities for personal counseling, crisis counseling, Bible studies, growth groups, retreats and social action. He can be reached by calling 799-1160 or by leaving a message at the Student Affairs office ext. 2117. His office is in the Wilmington Baptist Association Building across College Road from Trask Coliseum.

Bicycle racks provided

UNCW has provided bicycle racks just outside the entrances of most buildings on Campus. Use them. When you chain your bicycle to an entrance or physically handicapped railing you violate a safety ordinance and create a potentially hazardous situation.

The Safety Office welcomes suggestions regarding the foregoing and will do what it can to encourage people to comply with this ordinance. Your cooperation with the Safety Department to eliminate hazardous conditions on campus is greatly appreciated.

'Rock and Rye' carries on down-home appeal of Mike Cross

by Julie Russ

Mike Cross' fourth album, ROCK & RYE, carries on the tradition of down-home appeal established with the release of his first LP, CHILD PRODIGY. Yet this disc is uh, a bit different from what diehard fans are used to. It's a well-produced album, and was in fact recorded and mixed in three separate studios. Any other performer might have drowned in a sea of over-production, but our mountain man has come through again.

Technical doodads are not the only unique aspects of this record. Put it this way: Mike Cross can rock! Side one is, according to Cross, "the rock

'n' roll cuts. On side two I get back to my roots." Ahem. At any rate, the first cut, "Rocky Top Bar-B-Que," is a nice, thumping rockabilly number. It is not a real departure from the patented Mike Cross formula, but it is a toe-tapping tune. And the banjo, courtesy of Bobby Thompson, adds a certain familiar flavor-hickory smoke, maybe?

"Not a Good Woman to Love," is the standout on Side 1, and has my vote for release as a single. A great lyric ("Her lips may say you're a very special guy. But there's a little black book behind those big blue eyes") backed by minimal steel pedal guitar and strong percussion, plus Mike's gravelly been-done-wrong vocals, make this a tune to play again and again. "I Go" is another good song, perhaps the most personal one on this album. Of course, no-one has ever been able to accuse Cross of being impersonal with his music, or his listeners.

The next-to-last cut, "The Groove" is a hook-laden parable, reminiscent of "My Uncle Josh" in the BORN IN THE COUNTRY LP; the rhythm guitar is particularly good here. Finishing the side with "Start Drawing the Lines," Cross rocks from the first chord. He sounds somewhat like Ted Nugent on 'ludes, but the Gonzo should sound this good! There is nary a fiddle in sight, a real 360 degree turn-about from the good ol' boy in previous tunes. No rock LP is complete without a lament about life on the road, and this is a poignant commentary on the grueling price of nonstop touring.

Side 2 is vintage Cross. The title track is an exercise in mountain-flavored phrasing ("Sippin' on rock 'n' rye/Sittin' here rockin' with tears in my eyes...") Pedal steel, banjo, country fiddle, and mandolin make this a mellow, thoughtful hum-along song. "Granny's Milk Cartons" is light, cutesy, with an amusing lyric twist a la O. Henry. It is oddly out of place on this LP, though—too playful to be taken in context with the rest of the album. "Joy of My Life/Morrison's Whiskey 'Fore Breakfast" features an outstanding Irish fiddle reel. "Whiskey" is also deliciously funny ("Lord preserve us and protect us/We been drinking whiskey 'fore breakfast!") and showcases Mike's deft adaptation of Irish traditional.

"Sailor's Bonnet" and "Carboro Crossing" are both excellent instrumentals. "Sailor's Bonnet" features some great five-string banjo pickin' and a tenor assist from the man himself. This number makes you want to grab a sailor and jig. "Carboro Crossing" sounds almost ethereal, with its mix of dobro, fiddle, and bouzouki. It's a good prelude to "Catch Another Butterfly," a Mike Williams composition, which sounds suspiciously like "Blue Skies and Teardrops" but is still satisfying, if only because of Mike's brooding, wistful vocals.

ROCK & RYE is Mike Cross with a twist. There's something here for everyone—from your Frank Sinatra fans to rabid rock 'n' rollers. Make no mistake, this guitar-pluckin' country boy knows his stuff, and shows it off admirably. With music like this, he'll be North Carolina's favorite son for a long time to come.

Campus Chuckles

by Julie Russ

Brothers are separate breed

I don't know what it is about brothers, but they are a breed apart from normal men. Most of you either have one or are one, so you can identify with my confusion. Why is it a brother can appropriate your car keys, stereo, and life's savings...and then go for the throat when you snitch a cigarette?

An example: I walk in the other day and there is the guy crashed in MY room, listening to MY Neil Young album on MY stereo with MY headphones on. When the screaming starts he opens one eye (God knows what that feeble mind could be pondering) and snarls, "Did you use my deodorant this morning?" It's easier just to step over his sprawled-out self and slam the door on my way out.

Another thing I wanna know:

who gave brothers the right to snipe at every male that roams within a mile of little sis? Ah, but turn the tables and sneer at HIS honey, and what happens? Yep, more lumps. (They say it's healthy to express anger at someone by striking out—and if this is true, I have the healthiest brother in history. And the scars to prove it!)

Remember the first time your ever-lovin' sibling saw you sloshed? I do. Have you ever tried to look nonchalant in a bar while someone is yelling, "Just wait till I tell Dad, you little lusc!" Or how about those out-and-out threats like, "You want suds, I'll give you suds!" (spoken with pitcher in hand and a dangerous gleam in his eye).

I guess what I really want to know is, why do brothers get all the breaks? When he wanted a car, all he did was threaten to thumb everywhere, and WHAM—the wheels were his. But ME—well my bike is still my best buddy. As for college, it wasn't his scene, you know?—so he got a job and started reeling in the bucks. I flunk one test and I'm locked in my room with a stack of textbooks! I mean, is it just my imagination, or is the whole setup unfair?

Now, we all know that even the sorriest brothers CAN be helpful now and then. My brother just happens to be built like a brick wall (well, would you believe a picket fence?) and like most walls, he's handy to hide behind. And it IS nice to have this handsome devil strolling down the street beside me. After all, who needs to know that two hours ago we were waging bloody war over the newspaper?

But the one thing that makes all the frustration and fighting worthwhile is this: brothers have FRIENDS. Male, single friends. Need I say more?

UNCW's Club Football team hopes to have explosive season

UNCW's Club Football team opens its 1980 season Sunday at 1 p.m. at Legion Stadium against Edenton.

Boasting a larger, stronger, and quicker team, the Seahawks hope to have an explosive season.

Sunday will mark the second meeting between Edenton and the 'Hawks. Last year a healthy defense shut out Edenton to pull a 16-6 win.

The 'Hawks are starting this year with more depth and experience than ever before. They have a few minor injuries but nothing that should keep the players from seeing action.

Don Corry is back for his third year as head coach for the Seahawks. His overall record is 15-10 with 9-4 the first year and 6-6 last year.

John Shaver from New Hanover High School is joining Corry this year as coach. He has coached in this area for the past eleven years and has coached many of the 'Hawks' players in the past. Shaver will be running the offense during games. Don Corry will handle the defense.

The probable starting line-up for the 1980 season will be headed by defensive guard Jesse Hays. Next to Hays will be Dave McLane. Standout Melvin Tootoo is at the tackle spot with newcomer Bobby Allison. This year's ends are Donald Borden and Andy Dempster.

One key injury in this position is defensive end Kenny Edwards. Edwards will be out for another two weeks with a broken jaw.

Line backers Bill Morris, Mark Wagner, and Tim Owens should prove to be the backbone of the defense. Dale Fish and newcomer Rudy McKnight should provide good coverage on deep passes. Two-year veteran Fish should be the plug deep this year. He obtained a shoulder injury last year which required surgery. Fred Webb and Horace Jacobs are expected to see action on the field also.

Opening the offense will be quarterback Guy Stefanski. He is returning from a late season injury last year. The coaches are encouraged by Stefanski the way he has picked up the new offense.

In the backfield behind Stefanski will be fullbacks Dave Moore or Jerry Allen. Donald Kent and Dennon Fox are this season's tailbacks. Mark Doel and Jimmy Phillips will be slot or Hawkback. Paul Wood will open at Wide receiver. Dennis Nelson is probable at tight end. Also on the offensive line will be Benne Bass, David Pendergrass, Steve Phillips, Jason Millhouse, and Dave Nelson.

Student enrollment increases at UNCW

Student enrollment at UNCW has been increasing over the past few years and new year enrollment figures continue to show an increase in student population.

According to the Director of Institutional Research, Robert E. Fry, UNCW has a total student enrollment this year of 4695 students. This indicates a 10.3 percent increase over previous enrollment figures.

As more females are preparing themselves to enter the job market, more are attending college as well. This year, female students represent almost 53 percent of the student population with 47 percent male students.

UNCW enrolled 15 percent more freshmen students this year than the year before. 1044 students are enrolled in the freshman class for the '80-'81 school year compared to 908 freshmen students enrolled during the '79-'80 school year. Out of the 1044 freshmen students, 49 are black, comprising 4.7 percent of the freshman class.

The majority of UNCW students are enrolled in the College of Arts and Sciences.

Current figures indicate that 3300 students enrolled.

The School of Business experienced a similar growth. 1043 students are in the School of Business this fall. Last year, there were 850 students. The School of Education experienced a sharp drop in student enrollment this year. During the '79-'80 school year there were 483 students in the School of Education. This year that number dropped to 352 students.

The drop-out rate at UNCW is slightly higher than the average throughout the University system. During the '78-'79 school year the average attrition rate for the whole system was 23 percent. During that same year, the attrition rate was 27 percent at UNCW. Females dropped out at a slightly higher rate than males (29 percent compared to 26 percent). Blacks dropped out more than whites (35 percent). Attrition rates for the '79-'80 school year were not yet available. However, these figures have not changed significantly over the past five years, Fry stated.

Elections Monday, Tuesday

The Student Government Association will fill thirteen vacant seats in the upcoming election scheduled for September 15 and 16.

Students will elect a president, vice-president and two senators from the freshman class. The entire student body will vote on seven at-large senators. A special senate seat and a senate position vacated by a sophomore class senator remain to be filled.

Voting booths will be set up in Galloway Dorm, the Library, the Cafeteria, the Pub, and possibly the New Classroom Building.

Students interested in being elected to the SGA must submit their names to the SGA office by September 12, at 1 p.m.

WLOZ gets new station manager

Members of the Media and Publications Board chose a new manager for the campus radio station WLOZ at a meeting held in the Goodwood Tavern September 5.

Karen Durda, a theatre and drama major, working at the station since May, 1980 was chosen over former manager John Evans.

According to a Media and Publications Board spokesman, the two prospective managers gave their views on what they would seek to accomplish as manager. Evans, station manager during Marathon 91, explained how he would like to see the station expand and continue to improve the quality of the station, possibly increasing wattage.

Durda, who owns her own business, stressed the importance of effective management.

She was licensed by the Federal Trade Commission in May and served as promotional director at WLOZ during the summer months. Eventually she would like to seek her Masters degree in Business Administration.

The Board met behind closed doors over thirty minutes deciding on a new manager for the station. After the Board rendered its decision, Durda stated that she would like those students even remotely interested in radio to come by the station. She has positions available for off-air personnel.

Traffic signal halts left turns

A traffic light at the intersection of South College Road and Riegel Road has been the source of frustration and bewilderment for some UNCW students.

Students wishing to turn left onto South College Road occasionally drive up to the light, wait, and then take off. Being responsible drivers, they obviously assume the traffic signal is struck.

Other students have been observed trying to outwit the traffic light. They drive up to the light, and wait. Then they put their engines in reverse and move back and forth in their lane in an attempt to "trip" some mechanism beneath the asphalt. Conservationists shut off their engines.

A spokesperson at the Traffic Engineering Department for the City of Wilmington tried to explain this problem.

"Priority is given to the main street," said Tom Platt, traffic signal supervisor. It seems there are "sampling stations" set up on Highway 132 (South College Road) to count the number of cars traveling on a street. If the sampling station counts 100 cars in a three-minute interval, a message is sent to a "master" station to make an adjustment for the increase or decrease in traffic. The system becomes increasingly complex with "loops" and amplifiers" used in directing traffic.

Platt reported that the longest signals are around 130 seconds and the shortest around nine seconds. However, the SEAHAWK learned that the left-turn signal at South College Road and Riegel Road is 180 seconds followed by a twenty second green light (including the yellow) to accommodate UNCW's traffic. In longer lines, no one should have to wait over six minutes.

Oleander Drive and Highway 132 are two of the busiest streets in Wilmington. Platt reported, "A lot of factors affect stop and go."

Turning left off South College Road into Riegel Road can be just as awesome. However, the traffic signals at the north end of campus near Kennan Auditorium are not quite as time-consuming.

'Personally, I have serious doubts about evolution, myself...'

To the Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to respond to your editorial regarding the lack of varsity football at UNCW.

There is a good reason for its absence: Despite the presence of almost 100,000 people in the Wilmington area, there is no evidence that they would support a football team to the extent necessary to offset the expense of such a program. There is, in fact, evidence to the contrary in the form of the UNCW basketball program. Despite the fact that North Carolina is traditionally a basketball oriented state, and despite the fact that Mel Gibson puts together a high quality, winning, Division I team year after year, Trask Coliseum is rarely half full when the Seahawks play there. Are we therefore to assume that Wilmington will not support a college basketball program but that it is peopled by fanatic football fans? If that were the case then there would be 50, 000 people following UNCW club football.

UNCW is a young, fast growing University that should continue to concentrate on sports that benefit the greatest number of students at the least possible expense. These are sports that are going through a renaissance in popularity in the US and include swimming, soccer, gymnastics, track and tennis. These traditional sports have caught the imagination of a health conscious America that is newly interested in sports that can be actively enjoyed long after graduation from college. UNCW should especially focus on women's athletics in developing these and other sports such as field hockey.

Limited funds spent wisely will quickly produce high quality, competitive programs in these emerging areas of athletic interest. Any latent spectator interest will emerge alongside. If that interest is not widespread in the Wilmington community, so be it. The needs of UNCW students will be met and there will be no danger of establishing an expensive white elephant.

To the Editor:

I am writing this letter to the Seahawk to voice my opinion on the subject of station manager for our campus radio, WLOZ. I have worked at the station since spring of 1979 and have enjoyed it. Z-91 is a good station and the most progressive in this area. John Evans is one of the reasons for this.

At the general staff meeting of September 3, old and new members listened to the two applicants for station manager, John Evans and Karen Durda. When the democratic process was through, Mr. Evans had convinced 66 percent of the staff that his experience level in radio was much higher than that of Ms. Durda. I concur.

The best person for a job is usually considered as the one with the most experience. However, the Media and Publications Board disagreed. Ignoring the wishes of the majority of the radio staff, they voted to put Ms. Durda in the managerial position. This is a hatched job on the democratic process if I've ever seen one.

To the student senators who must vote on the subject this week, I say this: You must uphold the principles of democracy and fair play by countering the Media and Publications Board by casting your ballot for the betterment of WLOZ. John Evans is the man most qualified, experienced and knowledgeable person for the job.

To the Editor:

On September 3, the first WLOZ meeting of this year was held for the purposes of orienting prospective personnel and electing a general manager. Earlier, I had been informed old staff members would be voting because only they had the knowledge required to formulate a justifiable decision, however all students were allowed to vote, which was an action contradictory to the opinion of WLOZ's faculty advisor. Although, there is some question to the validity of allowing prospective personnel to participate in the election the outcome indicated the students' desire. I was chosen by the decisive margin of twenty-seven to thirteen which was discerned to be only a "slight margin" by acting General Manager Jeff Newton.

Applications should be submitted to Linda Moore, Student Activities, or to the Seahawk Office in the Pub as soon as possible.

Previously, when the staff elected a representative to the manager position, the Media and Publications Board voted to approve or disapprove the students' recommendation. Never has the board voted against the wishes of the students or the applicants been requested to deliver presentations to the Board unless the previous station staff dissolved due to the discontinuation of the station's operation. However, on September 5, Mr. Newton requested the Board entertain presentations from both applicants because of the "slight margin" of the WLOZ staff vote. Karen Durda and I delivered presentations and Chairperson Linda Moore asked if there were any "question or comments from the floor." None being aired, Ms. Moore requested that all non-board members leave the room. Mr. Charles Parsons, SGA Vice-President and not a member of the Media and Publications Board, remained and could be heard by myself and everyone in the hall. No one could understand what he said but the fact that he was allowed to remain and speak on the subject should negate the outcome of last Friday's meeting.

It is evident that the WLOZ staff and the Media and Publication Board have reached an impasse concerning the appointment of WLOZ's manager and this difference should be questioned by the entire

To the Editor:

I would like to call to the attention of the students as well as the faculty, the "confusion" regarding the election of the Station Manager at WLOZ Radio. I would like to state this certain Misunderstanding thus:

An election was held by the staff at WLOZ regarding the nominees for Station Director. These nominees, Karen Durda and John Evans both had their say. Mr. Evans winning with an overall margin 2 to 1. Furthermore John Evans also was Station Manager of WLOZ last year and has had over 5 years experience in radio. Miss Durda, on the other hand, has had almost NO experience in radio and has had only 3 MONTHS experience working at the station.

although, to give her her due, she was manager at a local book shop last year. So would somebody tell me why the student advisory board OVERRULLED the STAFF, the PEOPLE who work at the station, and "RECOMMENDED" Miss Durda as Station Manager. Come on people, who's kidding who? I feel we, the station have a responsibility to our public; a responsibility to provide the best programming possible to the students as well as the community. I also feel we at the station realize this and the opinion of the staff was that John Evans could do this job. Would the student advisory board explain why after an hours deliberation they picked Miss Durda and recommended her to the S. G. A.? I would like to have an answer. I feel that we have the right.

Non-trads stay busy

Sometimes I wonder why anyone in their right mind (or their left mind, for that matter,) would decide to become a college student at age 30. These moments usually come when I have numerous papers, umpteen bills, a sick son, an overflowing clothes basket, and eight cats and a dog all demanding, "Do me now. Handle me now. Get together and move now!"

Invariably I pour another cup of coffee, light another cigarette and answer all demands by a shrugging, "Don't bother me now. I'm using this space for relaxation." And then, also invariably, I leave half my coffee for the flies, snuff out my half-smoked More and get up and do. The accumulated clutter is to much to bear.

That's why, symbolically speaking, I did decide to go to college. Because I had spent three years drinking coffee and smoking, determined to relax. My previous life had been a series of failures; nursing school, marriage, even, it seemed sometimes, parenting. If I didn't try anything, didn't exert any effort toward becoming something better, then I couldn't possibly fail. I wouldn't become any less than I was.

But there finally came a time when doing nothing became more destructive than failure. Morbid, introspective thoughts piled up, leaving a much untidier pile of undone chores than those I see in my cruddy house today. The things we hide inside ourselves are always healthier than the material dirt of everyday living.

So, five semesters later, my life is busier. There's never really enough time to sit and relax. My space is crammed with things and people, sometimes frustratingly so. But it's not lonely, it's not unhealthy. And while "it ain't no big thing," it's growing.

There are many stories in the naked city; this has been one of them. In the weeks ahead I hope to be able to share some of those other stories, to find out why other non-traditional students, in their right mind or not, decided to become college students.

Addendum: Why is it you never see more than one tennis shoe lying beside the road?

Atlantis has openings for literary students

Atlantis is the literary magazine of UNCW that publishes student poetry and prose and includes original student artwork. The magazine is funded by the SGA and the staff is comprised entirely of UNCW students.

Atlantis is published twice each year - one issue in the fall and one in the spring. There are positions open on the prose, poetry and art staff. Dr. James Collier and Dr. Joanne Corbett of the English Department serve as advisors for the magazine.

Any student is welcome to submit material for publication in Atlantis. Deadlines for submission are announced each semester, and all students are urged to participate.

The Atlantis provides an important means of communication among the university community as well as between the campus and other areas. Copies of the magazine are mailed to universities throughout North Carolina and several other states. These magazines are important in spreading part of UNCW to other universities as they represent our campus with creative expression.

In past years, Atlantis staff members have also provided other services to the student body, such as publication of an attractive school-year calendar that features original student art. Also published by the staff is a poetry brochure.

Look for announcements concerning staff positions and submission of material in the coming semester.

Bicycles popular

In the midst of the recent rise in bicycle accidents, more freedom is being given to the campus. In fact, with the increase in campus becoming more of a "bicycle dream," bikes are becoming the number one mode of transportation after the car. And this, rules and regulations and off campus travel, is important as cyclists and cars inter-mix on the roads.

Bicycles in all forms, must be used with caution. Reading accidents this year, bicyclists must maintain caution on their travels about campus, to avoid those who are walking as well as those who are driving. In most cases, a bicycle-car accident could result in tragedy and definitely a bad situation that could be avoided otherwise. Awareness and caution, if used by the driver and the cyclist, may save lives in the campus. As classes end and the campus rush hour begins, cyclists are out for the other. If you are out for the other, he'll appreciate it.

The Writing Center-- a free service for all students

by Wendy Robbins

Students who need help with their writing skills need not despair--the Writing Center has tutors who are willing to help everybody, regardless of their major or student classification.

"The Writing Center should be thought of as a place for all students to come if they have problems with their writing," says Dr. JoAnn Seiple, Director of the Writing Center.

The Writing Center is a free service and no grades are given. Students can come in on their own; they don't have to be referred by an instructor.

The Writing Center is located in room 202 of the New Classroom Building. The Center's hours are from 9:30-4:00 on Mondays through Thursdays and 6:00-8:00 on Tuesday and Wednesday nights.

Most of the time there are two tutors on duty. The three faculty staff members are Dr. Seiple, Dr. Richard Veit and Suzanne Pferrer. Sherry Niven, Mary Clark and Ray Kriegbaum are the student tutors.

All three of the student tutors are English majors who have tutoring experience and have taken a course in tutoring here at UNCW," explains Dr. Seiple.

Any student is welcome to take advantage of the Writing Center. Students with considerable writing problems, advanced writers and students who are writing research papers for classes other than English are encouraged to seek help from the tutors.

"We're always willing to work with the students at any stage--whether they're just getting ideas to work on, developing ideas they've already got or tightening up the organization of their papers," states Dr. Seiple. "We also like to work with students with recurring problems in their writing. If they have problems with punctuation, spelling or grammar and if it's holding them back in class or hindering their performance on essay tests we'd like to work with them on a regular basis."

Students should realize that the Writing Center is not a correcting service; it is a writing service.

"We are not a proofreading service," stresses Dr. Seiple. "We don't read the papers and take all the errors out. We help the student recognize his or her errors."

Dr. JoAnn Seiple

Dr. Richard Veit instructs a student

In addition to helping students with their writing problems, the tutors can also help design resumes for potential employers and letters of application to graduate schools.

The Writing Center has study aids that can be utilized by the students.

"We do have tapes and programmed books that can be used to review punctuation and grammar. But we think the students get more out of the time if we help them with their grammar. These materials are usually used at the beginning of the semester when some students want to come and get a quick review," states Dr. Seiple.

The most appealing feature of the Writing Center is probably its casual atmosphere.

"The atmosphere is very informal," says Dr. Seiple.

"A number of students do like to come in just to study. They are welcome here provided we're not pressed for space."

The statistics show that the Writing Center is a much sought after service. Last year, the tutors saw 690 students for a total of 1,658 sessions. This represents a total of 1,204 hours spent in the Center. The average amount of time given to each student was 41 minutes. More than half of the students that went came back for more than one session.

Dr. Richard Veit, a faculty tutor, has positive feelings about the Center.

"The Writing Center is a good service that the University is providing," he states. "For one thing it's free. The people are friendly. We're not just a place where problem writers come. We have students that are advanced writers who want some editing suggestions. We have writers who are stuck and need some help getting started. Others come when they want someone to look at something they've written. We can provide a service for all those people."

Suzanne Pferrer, another faculty tutor, wants the students "to feel free to come in and bring their problems."

"The Writing Center is a nice, happy, comfortable place," she says. "We want the students to know that it's not a formal place. They don't have to be registered in an English class in order to come. We want students from other departments to come in. We'd be glad to give them all the help that we can. We're very friendly and we don't humiliate anybody. Your individual problems can be talked about. I wish everybody on campus would visit the Writing Center at one time or another. And that includes professors as well as students. I wish they'd all come and pay us a visit to see what we're doing."

Sherry Niven, a student tutor, worked at the Writing Center last year. She is back again this year because she loves "to work with people."

"A lot of people think the Writing Center is just for English majors," she says.

"We'll work with anyone who has a problem at any stage in the composing process. They don't have to have a draft. They can come in and we'll just talk. They don't have to be English majors. We'd like for more people on campus to know this. It's free and we're kind to people. A lot of people, especially freshmen, feel like going to the Writing Center is a punishment for not doing too well. It's not like that. We really do want to help them."

Mary Clark took an editing course last year, which gave her some experience in tutoring. Now she is a student tutor at the Writing Center.

"I enjoy being a tutor so much," she says. "I like the students, I like the work and I like to write. Since writing is one of my main interests, trying to help somebody else write is interesting. Some students' papers are really original. I enjoy just helping them get their papers organized. If students could learn how to really put down what they think and feel they would enjoy writing more. The Writing Center is a good place to come to. We're not here to grade or to get after people. It really is a friendly service."

Ray Kriegbaum was a student tutor last year and is one again this year.

"I'm glad I'm here because of the exposure I'm getting," he explains. "I can learn a lot from people. I really enjoy working one-on-one with a person. It's more honest. We help each other."

Students who seek assistance at the Writing Center enhance their chances of making good grades. But they may not realize that the knowledge they gain from the Center could also prove to be valuable beyond college.

Eric Carmen alive, well and on the road again

by David Carter

Ah, The Raspberries. Now those boys really knew how to rock, but bad management and poor critical acclaim ripped the seams out of this band, which somehow never got past the Beatle sound-alike stamp that sounded their death knell from the very beginning. Even though this fine bunch of Cleveland based rockers have been defunct since 1974, the creative genius behind it all, Eric Carmen, is alive and well, and on the road again.

Since Carmen has gone solo, he, like his former band, has been accused of being schmalzy and pretentious, and a producer of little more than pabulum. This is sheer folly as anyone who has followed the man's career any at all can attest to the fact that he lends equal enthusiasm to both rock and ballads. But every artist has detractors, and there are lunatics around that still insist McCartney is dead and that William Campbell is the end result of some great hoax.

But why, one might implore, all the accolades for this old Raspberrie? Well it's because Carmen released an album entitled TONIGHT YOU'RE MINE this summer past, and it's easily a candidate for best album of the year. It's his forth solo effort, and this one is by far the best of the lot. The rock has bite, and the ballads aren't overly sentimental, and Carmen composed them all himself. There are also some fine and well-known musicians contributing their talents on this LP. Among them are guitarist Davey Johnstone of Elton John fame, bassists Bob Glaub and Kenny Psarelli, and Carmine Appice, drummer par excellence.

Of the eight songs included, seven are exceptional, and there some deserving of citation. "Tonight You're Mine" is one of these. Johnstone hits the power chords, Appice is out in front, and there's even bagpipes to be found here, although they're mixed down a bit. This is one The Raspberries should've done. Another good rocker is "The Inside Story," which sounds understandably Elton Johnish, considering the presence of Davey Johnstone. This one is highlighted by great vocals, a tasty sax ride, and superior drumming. As any Eric Carmen fan or anyone who's still reading this review knows, the man will write a love song in a hurry. The epic on this album Foolin' Myself," is complete with lush string accompaniment, and is among Carmen's better attempts. In fact, the only song which doesn't receive the seal of excellence is "Yoy NEED Some Lovin'" which smacks strongly of the Piano Man's "Big Shot" from 52ND STREET, but it's acceptable. It's the only weak link in an otherwise strong chain.

To bring this all home, Carmen has finally produced the album that has been expected of him since the demise of The Raspberries. His vocals are the best in years, and the sound of the album itself is crisp, concise, and clear. Eric sounds inspired, and inspiration, along with simply doing what he excels at with proper moderation, has given us one of the best rock albums we've had in a while.

President delivers Address

President Jessie Sanders delivered his State of the University Address September 4 at the first regular session of the Student Government Association.

Sanders outlined three goals for his administration. His main objective is for the SGA to be "as fiscally responsible as possible." Sanders initiated a new financial system July 1, 1980 to alleviate a $12,000 budget deficit that he inherited from the previous administration. "For the first time in three years the SGA did not overbudget during budget hearings," Sanders stated.

Sanders also encouraged

SGA members to become more involved in a campus activities. His third goal is to increase the communication here on campus.

In other Senate business, Maceo Bragg was appointed to the position of Charter Committee Chairman. Three charters were approved for the University Communications Club, University Theatre, and the University Video Network.

Nancy Kelker was chosen by the Senate to be a representative on the Media and Publications Board.

The next SGA meeting will be September 11 in C-117. All students are encouraged to attend.

Seahawk Club Football Team loses to Edenton

UNCW's Club Football Team opened their season Sunday afternoon at 1 p.m. at Legion Stadium against the Edenton All Stars. Rain halted the game during the third quarter leaving the Hawks with a seven point advantage. After a twenty minute delay, the Hawks returned, but were unable to maintain their lead. Edenton pulled away with a 22-16 win over the Hawks.

The Edenton All Stars received the opening kickoff. On a pass play between Edenton's quarterback and #30, the All Stars scored their first touchdown. The first quarter ended with a 6-0 lead by the All Stars.

The Seahawks came back quickly after recovering a fumble on the thirty-four yard line.

Seahawks' quarterback Greg Karam connected with Paul

Wood to advance the ball within the 5 yard line. Donald Kent carried the ball in for the score and Bob Denne kicked the Extra point to put the Hawks ahead for the first time.

The Hawks hard hitting defense came up with two more turn-overs in the first half but were unable to capitalize on them.

With less than three minutes into the second half, the Hawks were on the score board once again with a pass play to wide receiver Paul Wood. The thunder storm halted play for about twenty minutes and Edenton returned for a 22-16 win over the Hawks.

The Hawks will resume their season on September 13 at 2 p.m. against St. Leo's in Florida.

Bartlett

named new

volleyball coach

WILMINGTON—Jackie Bartlett, a recent graduate and former top player at the University of North Carolina, has been named the new volleyball coach at UNC-Wilmington, director of athletics Bill Brooks has announced.

Bartlett, who received both her bachelor's and master's degrees at UNC, replaces Judy Peel, who resigned during the summer to devote full attention to her doctorate studies. Bartlett is the third new coach in the sport at UNCW in the last four years.

"Coming to UNCW is definitely a great opportunity for me," the new coach says. "I had hoped to coach on the collegiate level and to start out with a fine program like UNCW's is just great."

"We've already begun pre-season practice, and even though we have a young squad, I think we can have another good one."

Under Peel last year, the Lady Seahawks qualified for the state Division Two championships with a 12-10 record, but were eliminated in their first two matches.

Bartlett was a four-year player at Carolina, serving as team captain her senior season. She also participated with the Lady Tar Heels in the 1978 nationals and as a member of the junior national Olympic squad in 1977.

Need Managers for Varsity Basketball Team. Anyone interested in being varsity basketball managers report to Coach Henners in Hanover Gym.

Lady Seahawks open schedule

The Lady Seahawks volleyball team, under the direction of new coach Jackie Bartlett, opens its 29-match schedule on Tuesday September 16, hosting St. Andrews and North Carolina Central in the first of six tri-matches here.

Seven returnees head the roster, led by sophomore Becky Simmons and senior Sarah Gaither—both starters on last year's 12-12 club which participated in the state Division Two playoffs.

UNCW's 1980 team will still be a young one, however, with Gaither and Annette Hassell the only seniors.

Following next Tuesday's opener, the She-Hawks continue at home against Guilford and Chowan on September 19 before taking to the road for the first time on September 22 against Shaw and Fayetteville State.

State.

The complete schedule follows:

September 16—NC Central and St. Andrews; 19—Guilford and Chowan; 22—at Shaw with Fayetteville State; 24—Methodist and Coastal Carolina; 30—at Pembroke with Elon.

October 3—at Gardner-Webb with Western Carolina; 8—at St. Augustine with Atlantic Christian; 14—St. Augustine and Atlantic Christian; 16—at NCCentral with Fayetteville State; 17-18—at Coastal Carolina tournament; 22—Elon; 23—at UNC-Charlotte with UNC-Asheville; 28—at Chowan with Christopher Newport.

November 1—Gardner-Webb and Baptist; 4—at Francis Marion with Coastal Carolina; 6—Pembroke and Shaw; 13-15—State Tournament at Mars Hill.

UNCW's soccer team emerges with championship trophy

WILMINGTON—For a sixth consecutive time, UNC-Wilmington's soccer team emerged from a regular season tournament with the championship trophy this past weekend as the Seahawks captured the Four Points Tournament in Charlotte with wins over UNC-Greensboro (2-1) and host UNCC (5-3).

"Our two games this week will be tougher than our two in the tournament," coach Calvin Lane predicts. "Atlantic Christian has a fine team and always plays us tough, and Coastal has brought in some very good players to build a solid program."

Lane had to work with a number of new players himself this pre-season, but successfully molded a club that defended its Four Points title and gave UNCW its 100th soccer victory in the process in the championship game.

Seventy-nine of those wins have come under Lane's guidance—64 during the past five years prior to 1980.

"Winning the tourney was a great way to start our season," Lane says, "especially since we have so many new players. We got behind in both games, but showed a great deal of poise and character in coming back."

Dennis Davis, a junior from Wilmington, came away as the most honored Seahawk, taking the Most Valuable Player award for his four-goal performance—three of those scores coming in the title game.

"It was quite a thrill—winning the tournament again and the MVP award," Davis says.

Calvin Lane

"Having three Wilmington players on the all-tournament team made everything twice as nice, too."

Intramural schedule offers something for everyone

In just her second year as the Intramural Director, Lea Larson has just announced her new fall schedule of intramural activities, that will surprise and please many of UNCW's students. "I think we are giving the students everything that they want," said Larson.

And that they need. The intramural schedule this fall offers a little bit of something for everyone. Activities will range from an "anything goes" competition to team games ranging from flag football to basketball.

"The first three events (this fall) are get acquainted events, particularly the almost anything goes. It is similar to the "dorm days," that were held several years ago," continues Larson. The purpose of these events is to get the students involved and acquainted hoping to encourage participation in the later events.

Larson has high hopes for the fall schedule and the student response should prove that you can please all of the people all of the time. "We have done a good job of promoting friendship first and competition second. I'd like to see everyone who is remotely interested to come in and get involved. The programs are here, the students just need to take advantage of it," said Larson.

The activities will begin this week and continue through out the fall, with zany and hilarious get-togethers to competitive leagues. With this new fall schedule the students indeed have everything they could want, and a lot extra. Come on out and get involved.

Harriers open at UNC-Charlotte

WILMINGTON—UNC-Wilmington's 1980 edition of cross country runners face their first meet this Saturday at UNC-Charlotte, with second-year coach Bill Atwill hoping that a year-round conditioning program will make his team competitive against a much tougher schedule.

The top returnee from 1979's squad is team captain Paul Lupica, a junior from North Easton, Mass. Two Wilmington natives (Hoggard High School)—sophomore Robbie Burke and junior Julian Keith—could challenge for the number one spot also on a squad that lists no seniors and just three juniors on its roster.

UNCW's first official women-

's cross country team is also preparing for its initial season of competition. Atwill looks to 1980 as a learning year for the Lady Hawks, who do not open until October 4th here against Old Dominion.

The 1980 schedules follow (men listed first): (men)SEPTEMBER 13—at UNCC Charlotte; 20—at Pembroke Invitational; 27—at Baptist. October 4—UNC Charlotte and OLD DOMINION; 11—at William & Mary; 18—at N.C. State Invitational; 25—DZVID SON, CAMPBELL and THE CITADEL.

(women)OCTOBER 4—?LD & OMINION; 11—at William & Mary; 18—NCAIAW in Raleigh; 25—DAVISAON.

UNCW goalkeeper Charlie Ingold and fullback Doug Powell, both former high school teammates of Davis' at New Hanover High here, joined him on the all-star squad, along with Seahawks Jim Slowinski and Charley Walls—both newcomers to the program this season from the junior college ranks.

"We're off to a good start now," Davis continues, "but it's still too early to say how good a team we can have. These two games this week are going to be tough and we have a lot more on down the schedule, but I'm just happy that we are 2-0 and hope we can add a couple more wins this week."

The autumn sports seasons break into full gear during the next week as the cross country, women's golf and volleyball teams all open their schedules. Brief outlooks on each of these Seahawk squads

Women's golf team begins second year

WILMINGTON--UNCW's women's golf team begins its second year of intercollegiate play this weekend in the Longwood Invitational in Farmville, VA.

Leading Coach Lea Larson's squad are returnees Darci Wilson and Connie Poole, along with newcomers Cindy Flowers and Donna B. Arnette. Robbie Roberts and Dobbie Johnston, both of whom played last year, are currently battling for the fifth spot in the lineup.

"I've been real pleased with the way everyone is playing," Larson says. "Of course, this week will tell us a lot since we get to see many of the top schools in the area in the Longwood tournament."

"The important thing for us this fall is that we play solid as a team from top to bottom. We're looking for consistent-y."

Larson has put together an impressive fall slate, featuring the AIAW regional championships (Div. III) on October 6-7, which will be hosted by UNCW. Other tournaments included on the schedule are at Georgia, Duke and North Carolina, plus the annual state tournament in November.

SEPTEMBER 12-13 -- at Longwood Invitational.

OCTOBER 6-7 -- AIAW REGIONALS; 13-15 -- at Georgia Invitational.

25-26 -- at Duke Invitational. NOVEMBER 1-3 -- at Lady Tar Heel Invitational; 15-16 -- NCALAW at Pinehurst.

Nee Ningy Band returns to UNCW September 14

The Nee Ningy Band needs no introduction in up images of enthusiastic performances, complete with handmade ethnic garb and a washtub bass.

The University Program Board is proud to present Nee Ningy as their opening Coffee-house act. Last year, this band took UNCW by storm, and delivered an enthusiastic concert that recruited even more fans to their already loyal following.

Playing anywhere from schools to clubs to nursing homes, the band Wows audiences with "Sheer enthusiasm," commented a member. "That's the key to our acceptance - we really enjoy what we do, and we get that energy across."

And Nee Ningy does it all. Playing Scottish, Irish, Cajun, bluegrass, and traditional folk tunes, their repertoire reflects each members' individual musical tastes. Their music is as eclectic as the bands' costumes.

September 14, 8 p.m. marks Nee Ningy's return to this campus. Appearing in the lounge area of the Pub, they will undoubtedly delight the audience, just as they did at previous gigs: Monday Night in the Park and the Piney Woods Festival, to name but two.

Admission to this performance is free. Bring a friend and your own beverages and plan to party to the sounds of the Nee Ningy Band.

Tips for staying stick-like

Dieting has become a hot hobby, second only to "Being In Touch." Well, for those of us who only want to get in touch with our hipbones, here are some time-honored tips for staying stick-like: (1) Eat Jello. Lots of Jello. Your innards may start to quiver dangerously, but everybody knows

Jello is good for you and NOT FATTENING. You'd be low-cal, too, if you had to jiggle like that all the time. (2) Buy a dog. Preferably one that drools whenever it sees or smells Food. After mopping up pools of greedy saliva, you will surely cut down on your snacking. Around the dog, anyway. (3) THINK before you bite into that double scoop of creamy Butternut Crunch. Do you KNOW where that Butternut Crunch has been? Ice cream kills! (And hot fudge is absolutely lethal). (4) Drag out every Abba album you own and force yourself to listen to every single tune. You will never want another Danish pastry, I promise you. (5) Buy, borrow, or steal a full-length mirror. Strip and sneak in front of it. Stare hard at that reflection. Yes, that lumpy darling is really YOU. This will at least make you give up Boston cream pie, say, and may even convince you to boycott Boston, period. (6) Look at pictures of yourself when you were three. Did you have a double chin then? Jowls? Cellulite? No! And if you were a skinny kid, by golly, you can be a skinny adult. This strategy MAY make you cut down on those calories, or it may induce you to wear nappies and ankle socks again. The choice is yours. (7) Think of all the starving children in the world the next time you sink your choppers into a chewy-crust pizza. Do you really need that lousy slice of enriched flour, tomato sauce, mushrooms, anchovies, and parmesian cheese? If the answer is yes, then may all the starving children of the world spit upon you and your chewy-crust pizza. Now, how many of you are ready to begin that diet TODAY? Have I inspired in you the willpower to spurn those brownies, those pretzels, those buttered noodles? Zip those lips and get ready for a trimmer tomorrow! Uh-gang, what are you doing with those pies...no, no! (SPLAT! And another dieter bites the meringue...)

Laura Mae McLean performs tonight 8p.m. in Kenan

by Wendy Robbins
Features Editor

When asked what first got her interested in music, Laura Mae McLean replies, "I was born."

Singing is something that comes naturally to Laura Mae. In fact, she says that it seems like she has been singing "forever."

"I've been singing ever since I was a little baby playing a plastic guitar, walking around in the livingroom beating a path in the rug," the singer-guitarist states.

Laura Mae, a drama major and a senior at UNCW, has been singing professionally for three years. She has been playing the guitar for "five or six years."

There's not too many clubs around Wilmington where Laura Mae hasn't performed. Tonight at 8 pm in Kenan Auditorium, she will perform for all her fans, friends and fellow students.

"I'm anxious to do something in Kenan Auditorium because the acoustics are really great," she says. "And it'll be a listening crowd instead of a drinking crowd. I'm looking forward to this concert about as much as I've looked forward to any of them."

Singing in front of audiences has always appealed to Laura Mae, who says that her first public performances were at girl scout camp and church.

"At girl scout camp I probably played something like 'Kum ba Yah,'" she says. "I remember that the first song I ever learned in my life was 'Eight Days a Week,' by the Beatles. And I probably sang that for three years."

Laura Mae says that she likes all kinds of music, but country-rock appeals to her the most.

"I really like it all. I like to do some rock-n-roll, folk and ballads. The only music that I really can say I don't get into too much at all is real hard rock," she explains.

Once in a while, Laura Mae says she comes across a totally unresponsive audience.

"And I used to hate it," she explains. "It used to make me real mad. But now I feel like it gives me a chance to do just exact what I want. Nobody yells out requests that you don't want to play. If they're laid back I'll make some comments about them being laid back. You try to get them into it. I perform for the audience. The audience is the main cause."

This summer, Laura Mae participated in the outdoor musical drama "The Liberty Cart," in Kenansville, N.C.

There was a large crowd there as well as at the Piney Woods Festival, where she also performed.

Laura Mae also writes songs. She says her writing has mostly been influenced by Jimmy Buffett, Joan Baez and Joni Mitchell, who are among her favorite singers.

"I've got 59 songs copywritten," she explains. "I've got around a hundred others in the process. Either they don't have tunes or they have tunes but I haven't really learned them. Some of the more popular ones are 'Jane Fonda Blues,' which is a social satire and 'Empty,' which is a cry-in-your-beer song. The audiences like to hear them, but when I'm playing for a group that doesn't know me sometimes I feel more compelled to do songs of other artists."

Included in tonight's concert are songs by Buffett, Baez, Mitchell, Bonnie Raitt and Patsy Cline.

"I'm basically going to do some songs that people have heard before, that they can relate to, but just done in a different way," she says.

A singer from St. Louis, Carol Brown, will provide background vocals at the concert and Derwin Hinson, one of the "East Coast Boys," will play the dobro and the banjo, according to Laura Mae. Tentatively, Walt Bowden, of the "New Knothole Revue," will play the pedal steel and lead guitar.

Laura Mae says it gives her "a nice feeling" to perform in concerts and she is hoping there will be a good turnout for her concert tonight.

"I'd just like everybody to come out and not expect the same show they see all the time," she says. "There's a good time in it for everybody. I really hope the people will come out. Especially those who haven't seen me in a long time because I think they will be pleasantly surprised." It is evident how far Laura Mae intends to go with her music.

"The sky is the limit," she declares. "That's it right there. I'm going for it. I really am. If I have to sell everything I've got to go for it, then everything I've got is going."

Bloodmobile returns for two-day visit

by Joyce Stevens
News Editor

The Red Cross Bloodmobile, sponsored by Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity will be returning to UNCW's campus for its first two-day visit September 25 and 26 in the Student Activities Building.

Acting Blood Services Director, Debbie Brown, said theoretically, "One pint of blood can save the lives of four persons."

Blood donated to the Red Cross is separated into four basic components, aside from its use as whole blood. Platelets are essential for leukemia patients. Plasma is used primarily for burn and shock patients. The red cells are better for cardiac patients and chronic anemia patients than the use of whole blood, Brown reported. Another substance is instrumental for blood-clotting in patients lacking the normal blood-clotting factors.

The basic requirements for persons donating blood is that they be between the ages of 17 and 66, weighing at least 110 lbs. and in good health. "The Red Cross standards are very high," said Brown. "We might say it's (hemoglobin) too low to donate but your doctor may say it's normal."

All students will not be allowed to donate blood. Students will not be allowed to donate blood. Students with active colds or sore throats must wait a month before donating blood. Anyone taking penicillin pills should wait two weeks after taking the last pill to give blood, or one month after a penicillin injection. Medications for the treatment of acne such as tetracycline requires waiting 24 hours after taking the medicine before donating. If anyone has had mononucleosis they must wait six months after he's completely recovered to give blood.

The Red Cross has set a goal of 250 units of blood for their two-day visit. "The first thing you do when you go in is you register," Brown said. Then a nurse will check your pulse, blood pressure, and temperature. It's kind of like a mini-physical."

It takes between six and eight minutes to donate a pint of See BLOODMOBILE, p.12

LETTERS

To the Editor:

Monday night, September 8 at 8 pm, WRAL-TV 5 presented the first and probably last televised debate between the Democrat and Republican gubernatorial candidates, Jim Hunt and I. Beverly Lake, Jr. The debate was broadcast from Meredith College in Raleigh.

By a filp of a coin, Senator Lake made the opening comments, attacking the Hunt administration on charges of bribery and deceit, illustrated by a visual aid showing the Governor, State President of the AFL-CIO, Wilbur Hobby, Howard Lee, and his assistant, Eva Clayton. Above the pictures in large red letters read "Hunt's Political Machine." Lake was to remove the chart by Governor Hunt as there was no agreement that he could use it. Reluctantly, Lake agreed, and went on with his attack of the Hunt administration.

"Wilbur Hobby and Jim Hunt met in 1976 to form a political coalition," said the Senator, "then Mr. Hobby bragged that he would have access to CETA funds. He was right."

Near the end of his opening statement, Lake turned to Hunt and asked him to explain why he hadn't ordered a grand jury investigation of the CETA incident and to explain why the "HUNT-HOBBY deal" wasn't a political pay off.

When cameras turned to Hunt, he began by thanking the league of women voters for holding the debate, chastized Senator Lake for using these underhanded tactics and entered a plea that "we get down to the real issues that effect the people of North Carolina." He then made references to education and crime.

The debate went on as panelist from various media around the State asked the two candidates their views on certain issues. Each time Mr. Lake was asked his opinion, he gave short, choppy responses and used the remainder of his time to ask Hunt to explain his position on legislation that the Governor was endorsing, that would hurt the tobacco industry, his giveaway views on defense and the Panama Canal, and more allegations on the CETA affairs.

Hunt refused to answer Lake on all allegations except one, in which he responded that all CETA funds were accounted for, except approximately 10 per cent (250,000).

In viewing the debate, it was obvious that Jim Hunt made Senator Lake look bad. Hunt was very cool and composed, not letting any remarks made by Lake unsettle him. The Governor also took advantage of Lake's unfamiliarity on certain issues, and making light of the situation.

It was very surprising to me that the Governor consented to a debate at all. It seemed that he would not want to confront the issues of CETA and political payoffs. Well, actually, he did just that. By refusing to answer the allegations, some of which were echoed by the press, he hopes that controversy will die, focusing instead on Senator Lake's impotence at debate.

Personally, I, and I'm sure many others, would like to hear responses to some of the allegations raised by Beverly Lake. The probability of this happening is extremely slim, as the Governor has refused any further debate.

The Governor brags about the advances his administration makes in education. If memory serves, four years ago, we had the lowest literacy rate in the nation. There would be no where to go but up. He also boasts of a decrease in crime. His crime reduction program consist of himself and McDuff the dog saying "Help me take a bite out of crime."

Debate skills are not the only prerequisite to the Governor's chair. Honesty and integrity are also on the list. Unless Mr. Hunt can clear his administration of these allegations, many people will view him in a dim light as a dishonest man. Of course, that doesn't seem to have any bearing on the job. Doug Browne

To the Editor:

No matter how much we strive for equality, the double standard system still exists, to differentiate between the sexes. Although, the "weaker" sex has been found to be as strong as the males in our society, we still assume they are and remain weaker. In tests, women have been found to be just as intelligent and just as strong as their male counterparts, and yet bias is still apparent today. We ask less of women, in order that men may remain dominant in today's society.

An example of this may be seen in this year's Physical Education Department. On a planned running scheme of two miles, the grade of 100 is given if males run the course in less than 16 minutes and if females run it in less than 18 minutes. Although, some girls think this is fair, some do not. Should there be a difference? Is this our way of being fair to a "weaker" sex or unfair to a stronger sex? It seems however much we try, there will always be unequal measures between the males and females in todays world. Bradley Wheeler

To the Editor:

From several sources, I have been told that during the 1979-1980 school year there were six rapes on our UNCW campus. I do not know if this is speculation or fact, but I did notice that "No jogging after dark" signs did just appear last year, but I never heard the reason why. My question is: If the rapes did occur why were we not informed. No, I do not think they should of been publicized because I like reading sordid stories, but because I feel that we females have a right to know the specific dangers of this campus at night and that rape has and may again occur if we do not take certain precautions. I do not think females should walk around at all times with guns, but we should be made aware so that we will know that a rape is a serious possibility not just something that happens on Front Street in dark alleys.

I have also heard the reasons that the rapes were kept quiet is because if would seriously harm the reputation of UNCW and hinder our growth. I would be very ashamed if our administration and security feel that school reputation is more important that a situation that could be detrimental to a woman's life. All I'm asking is if this is just a rumour then squelch it. If it is fact, then please inform us of the facts and don't wait until someone is permanently injured or killed because of your silence.

Non-traditional student faces college career with dedication

by Judy Stallsmith

"There has to be some motivation for learning besides fear of failing. If I can do something about that, this four years of torture will have been worth it." Diane Thomas' words sum up her feelings about being a non-traditional student at UNCW. This dark-haired, mother of two faces each day of her college career with a mixture of dedication, perseverance, and not a little grim determination. Diane Thomas never really wanted to be here at all.

Most non-traditional students go to college to find personal fulfillment or to learn a marketable trade. Diane's going because her husband, Johnnie, thought it would be a good idea. And she's excelling as a student despite having "hated" school since the first grade.

"When I graduated from high school I vowed I'd never go to school again," she says.

After working a year and a half as a telephone operator for Southern Bell, Diane married Johnnie Thomas, Jr. of Hampstead in 1966.

"I believed I'd never be anything but a wife and mother," she says. She was happy in those roles and enjoyed taking part in community activities. She was able and, most important, willing to help with activities at Topsail Presbyterian Church, the Order of Eastern Star, and Hampstead's Spot Festival and oyster roasts.

Then, in 1977, Johnnie made the suggestion which completely rearranged Diane's life.

"We sat down one night and he told me, 'Hey, this is what you should do. You're bored around the house. You should go to school.'"

"I didn't know I was bored," Diane laughs, more ruefully than with humor, "but I told him, 'You're right, I think I could make it!'"

Although the suggestion was Johnnie's, Diane says the final decision was made jointly and based upon two factors. First, their daughters, Denise, 12, and Tammie, 10, might want to go to college one day.

"Or," Diane explains, "Johnnie might die or become disabled. Either way I'd need to find a job." She adds that she would want a job that would allow her "to work during the day and be with the children at night...something in the Hampstead area."

Because Hampstead has three schools, they decided teaching would be the answer and, in spring of 1978, Diane began her pursuit of an education degree at UNCW. She hasn't really been happy since.

Neither of them, Diane says, knew what going to school would be like. "We had no idea the struggles and changes it would involve for all of us."

Diane owns as she describes her family life now as "Mama's gone and won't be back for four years."

"I don't have time to do things with my family. They go to church alone, to the sound alone. I just can't take time from studying."

"Sometimes," she says, laughing with amusement this time, "Johnnie forgets it was his idea to begin with. He gets tired of doing things without me. But I tell him this is how it has to be. I have to study, study."

Diane says she had to struggle every day in grade school and high school. And she hasn't found college any easier.

"It disappointed me that I hadn't changed since high school. I still learn slowly and still care terribly about my grades."

A driving sense of competition, she admits, is a big reason for her anxiety over grades.

"There's always someone you're competing with. I was fourth in my high school class, but my cousin, who graduated the next year, was valedictorian of hers. My daddy wanted to know why I hadn't done as well."

"I still want to please people...to live up to what others expect of me."

With Diane's academic excellence, you'd think she would relax and enjoy her college days. She has a 3.83 average, and one of her professors recently said, "She's one of the best students I've ever had." Yet Diane never takes a test or writes a paper with complete confidence.

"I don't say I'm going to fail as a lucky charm," Diane declares. "It's a preparation for the worst. Anything better than failing is a relief; a high grade, if unexpected, is doubly nice."

So with her dislike of school, her anxiety over grades, and isolation from her family, why doesn't she just chuck it all and say "I QUIT"? Because, Diane Thomas is no quitter.

She does admit she might have quit after the first semester "if Johnnie had suggested it." But her grades were just good enough, 2A's and 2B's, to make her willing to continue.

She says that now however, in her sixth semester, her attitudes have changed. "It's important to me...I'm doing it for me now, not just for him."

"Once I'm committed to a project I see it through, whether I like it or not."

But Diane isn't continuing at UNCW just from dogged determination not to be a quitter. Diane believes that once she is a teacher, she will be able to make a difference. "I see Denise struggling like I did, getting good grades but hating school," she says, dedication making the grim determination in her face somehow beautiful. "I want to be able to do something for students like us, students who are intelligent but learn slowly. That will make this all worth it."

Knowing Diane, she not only can do it—she will do it.

Advising Center Provides A Sense Of Direction

College can be quite a confusing experience, especially for freshmen. There is a service on campus, however, that is concerned with making the first two years of a student's life more enjoyable.

The General College Advising Center, located upstairs in Randall Library is designed to provide "freshmen and sophomores with a sense of meaningful direction," says Dr. John L. Stokes. Dr. Stokes, Coordinator for the Advising Center, says that the Center is for "freshmen and exploratory sophomores—that is, sophomores who have yet to officially declare a major."

"We started the program because we saw a need for an improvement in the academic advising area. We felt that improvement could most effectively be made during the freshman year and also during the sophomore year if the student is still trying to identify his major," he explains.

According to Dr. Stokes, the Advising Center helps students make significant progress toward satisfying their basic studies requirements by assigning them to faculty advisors, who assist the students in selecting the proper course.

"When freshmen come on campus they are assigned a faculty advisor," Dr. Stokes says. "When they first arrive many of them don't know how to go about the task of selecting courses with time preferences or they don't have any idea of what the basic studies are. We assist them in choosing their courses so that they will make as much progress as possible in their first year-and-a-half. A secondary goal would be to assist those students toward exploration of their own career goals, which is then related to the question of which major they should choose. We also make referrals for those students, who, for example, are having study problems. They can be referred to Counseling and Testing for study skills assistance. And in some instances we make referrals to other offices on campus."
